BOOKER T. UP AGAINST IT.

Texas "Jim Crow" Law Forces Negro Champion to Charter Special Car or Travel With Blacks.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DENISON (Tex.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] When Booker T. Washington, champion and benefactor of the colored race, was given his choice by the Kansas, Missouri and Texas railway of riding in the compartment reserved for negroes, or hiring a special car to transport his person from Austin to Temple, Booker T. was somewhat "up against it."

The Texas 'Jim Crow" law is firmly enforced, and the railroad officials could not afford to be accommodating. Yet to travel in a Texas train negro compartment was not to the taste of Booker T., so he told the railroad passenger agent he wanted a sleeper anyhow, and chartered a special Pullman for the trip, which is to take place September 30.

The distance from Austin to Temple is about 200 miles. Everybody now is wondering whether Washington will make the trip in the day time or at night.

… and visitors were entertained with great hospitality.

The first cars ran over the Buena Vista bridge, yesterday, and the structure is expected to be ready for general traffic within a few days.

Capt. Lehnhausen, commander of the East Side station, yesterday said that his request for a stone crusher for use in handling prisoners is granted and that he will install the system as soon as possible.

The War Department has completed plans for full protection on the Coast against invasion of foreign foes, and partial details were made known yesterday, which contemplate the stationing of large forces here.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA. Long Beach is in splendid humor over landing a big glass factory. The concern will spend considerable money to start the plant and will enlarge it as rapidly as possible.

A considerable quantity of explosive was found yesterday on the beach at Venice. There was sufficient dynamite and nitroglycerine to completely destroy many water front structures. The police can offer no solution of the mystery.

Monrovia citizens are trying to induce the Pacific Electric Railroad Company to build a spur from the Glendora line up into the Monrovia Canyon. The plan will include a loop road which will form the first section of a local system.

The Sunset Telephone Company has acquired the San Fernando Telephone Company's system and announces that considerable improvement will be made in the plant in the near future.

Charles King of Los Angeles was lost for six days in the mountains near Old Baldy. Two sandwiches sustained him for that time and when he was found he was in a serious condition.

The Glendora orange crop has been one of the most profitable in the history of that section. The fruit was of exceptional quality and brought a high price on the markets.

The city of Escondido will have to buy water stock or have its supply cut off, according to the dictum of the mutual company which is now furnishing the city. The town may decide to construct a system of its own and then the situation will be different.

PACIFIC SLOPE. Owing to the discovery of a case of bubonic plague at Stockton a war of extermination against ground squirrels is to be waged at once, say yesterday's dispatches.

South Bend (Wash.) woman, after having collected insurance money on her husband's death and marrying again, yesterday heard that missing man is alive and well.

Everett woman was yesterday caught in a trap set by police for Black Hand writers who threatened a prominent contractor.

Starting from Colfax, Cal., yesterday, Aviator Fowler failed to scale the Sierras.

Clarence Hull of Terra Buena exhibited a two-headed gopher snake in Marysville yesterday.

GENERAL EASTERN. President Taft made six speeches in St. Louis yesterday.

Yesterday's Chicago dispatches say an eastern magazine spent $100,000 in two years "shadowing" Judge Peter S. Grosscup, and failed to "land" its story at that.

Another prominent Chicago printer's union man is to be tried on charges of hiring sluggers to assault non-union printers, say dispatches from that city last night.

Little town of Niles, Mich., remained wrought up yesterday regarding the true identity of man claiming to be George Kimmel; Mrs. Kimmel still doubts he is her son; other friends confident he is not an impostor.

Count Bakhmetiff, whose American wife is the sister of Mrs. John R. McLean of Washington, was yesterday appointed Ambassador to Washington by the Czar.

That Spain is in the throes of a revolution that threatens the existence of the monarchy is the conviction of a Paris correspondent cabled to Los Angeles last night.

M. Kokovsoff, Minister of Finance, has been definitely selected as Russian Premier to succeed M. Stolypin, according to last night's London dispatches.

A Paris cable yesterday related how the French Premier is solving the problem growing out of the housewives' revolt against the high cost of living.

FINANCIAL. The wheat market in Chicago yesterday touched the highest point of the season. Good sized sales of flour were made despite the rise of 40 cents a barrel in two days.

The New York stock market was surprisingly calm yesterday and there was no further crash on United States Steel.

"PAT" CROWE GAY FLIRTER.

Attempts Suicide in Chicago After Being Beaten by a Crowd for "Mashing."

[A. P. NIGHT NEWS REPORT.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—While delirious as a result of a beating given him by a crowd for accosting and striking a woman he met in the street, "Pat" Crowe, kidnaper of the Cudahy boy in Omaha, and later a temperance evangelist, jumped from the window of a hotel last night.

He was saved from death by landing on a fire escape twenty feet below the window. Crowe has been under the care of watchers since he was whipped for flirting. He will have a hearing in court on the charge of flirting as soon as his condition permits.

AUTHOR OF FUN DIES IN AGONY.

CHARLES BATTELL LOOMIS JOINS SILENT MAJORITY.

Writer and Lecturer Who Delighted Thousands Forms a Partnership With the Magic of the Unknown—Cancer of the Stomach Ends Career of Mirth Provoker.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HARTFORD (Ct.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Charles Battell Loomis, widely known as a humorist, author and lecturer, died in the Hartford Hospital tonight of cancer of the stomach.

Mr. Loomis was born in Brooklyn on September 16, 1861, a son of Charles Battell and Mary Worthington Loomis, and was educated in the Juvenile High School and the Polytechnic Institute there. He went into a mercantile business as a clerk in 1879 and continued until 1891, when he began the uphill climb which gained for him a prominent place among writers of the lighter class of American humor. He first attracted attention by the odd twists he imparted to verses of the limerick type.

Soon thereafter he aspired to higher flights and his verses reached the public through Harpers, The Century, St. Nicholas, Atlantic Monthly, Life, Puck, Judge, The Outlook and the Independent. His first effort in book form was "The Four-Masted Cat Boat," and there followed in quick succession "Just Rhymes," "Yankee Enchantments," "A Partnership in Magic," "Cheerful Americans," "More Cheerful Americans," "I've Been Thinking," "Minerva's Maneuvers," "A Bath In An English Tub," "The Knack of It," "A Holiday Touch," "Just Irish," "Little Maud," and other works.

Between times Mr. Loomis delighted audiences around the country with his quaint way of telling stories and won favorable comparison with Jerome K. Jerome, Paul Bourget and other foreign humorists. His home for the last few years was in Leonia, N. J., among the colony of writers and artists there.

In 1888 Mr. Loomis married Miss Mary Fullerton of Brooklyn, who survives him.

"Lost Son" of Niles Has Optics of Wrong Shade, Says Oculist.

Mother Claimed by Stranger Still in Doubt as to His Claims.

Failure to Recollect Home Furnishings Held to Be Suspicious.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NILES (Mich.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Niles will see no more of "Kimmel," the mysterious visitor to this city, for several days. Following the stirring scenes yesterday between "Kimmel" and Mrs. Estelle Kimmel, when the former declared that he would never go back to her house, it was decided by the man's friends that the best thing that could be done would be to take him away for a rest.

He left Niles in the automobile of Harry L. Fox, and it is thought that the party will visit relatives of George Kimmel in Berrien county. Next week he will be taken to Chicago to a specialist by Mr. Fox, who wishes to learn the true condition of Kimmel's mind.

That Kimmel was sincere in his announcement that he would not visit Mrs. Kimmel again, was proved today when she asked him to come to her home this afternoon and visit her in the presence of relatives. Kimmel refused absolutely, to go near the house.

MRS. KIMMEL UNCHANGED.

"She knows where she can find me," he said. "Harry Fox has been good enough to keep open house for anyone that wanted to come and see me. Mother has the same privilege of visiting me here."

Mrs. Kimmel stated today that her state of mind in regard to the case had not changed since yesterday, when she declared that "Kimmel" has given her absolutely no sign that he was her son, but that she would not absolutely come out and say that he was an impostor. Her statement that she had had the first good night's rest in a week seemed to indicate to the people here that she had made up her mind that Kimmel was not her son.

"Whatever my daughter, Edna, says, I will agree to," she said. "I expect the man up to see me again in spite of his words yesterday about never coming back. I expected him to come today."

NOTORIETY GROWING.

A detective from Macon, Ga., came to Niles today with the object of examining "Kimmel" regarding his identity as one Rhodes, a deserter from the army. The examination was made today by the city physician and the identification was not made. It is said that Rhodes has been in many escapades in the last two years.

While "Kimmel" was closely watched all the time he was in the Auburn penitentiary, the presence of Andrew J. Hunt, of Arkansas City, Kan., who gained notoriety in con-

PREMIER-ELECT OF CANADA TAKES OFFICE REIN-FREE.

Robert L. Borden, Elected by Overwhelming Majority, Makes Definite Statement of Policies to Be Followed Under His Administration—Will Come Into Power Unhampered by Promises of Any Kind.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTOWA (Ont.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Here is the policy of Canada's Prime Minister-elect, Robert L. Borden:

Regulation of tariff by a permanent commission.

Government construction and operation of the Hudson Bay Railway.

Government purchase and operation of the terminal grain elevators on the Great Lakes.

Government aid to the chilled meat industry.

Enlargement of the railway commission and its division into eastern and western sections.

Closer co-operation with Great Britain in naval defense. Possible change from Canadian cruiser navy to dreadnoughts.

Retrenchment and economy in the public expenditure.

FREE OF PLEDGES.

Mr. Borden enters his regime singularly free of tariff pledges. He has not said whether he thinks the tariff averages too high or too low. The protective principle in Canada has never been closely defined.

In the United States it is defined by the Republicans as meaning the difference between the cost of production at home and abroad, plus a reasonable profit.

In Canada, the manufacturer wants it kept at a figure which will prevent foreign goods entering in quantities large enough to swamp him. It can safely be stated that it will be kept at that point by the conservatives if not raised.

BIG INTERESTS DOUBTFUL.

The protected and financial interests generally have no fault to find with Mr. Borden's views on fiscal questions, but his government ownership proclivities do not sound well in the ears of vast interests like the Canadian Pacific Railway. In his last western trip, Mr. Borden accorded fully with the government ownership demands of the western grain growers.

The Laurier government has projected the Hudson Bay Railway, had agreed to build it by contract, but deferred decision as to whether it should be operated by the government.

Commissioner-General of French Colonies to Panama-California Exposition Reported as Having Fallen in Love on Brief Voyage Across Atlantic Recently.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Le Comte Sainte-Croix de la Rouciere, Commissioner-General of the French colonies to the coming Panama-California Exposition, and one of the most versatile of the French nobility, arrived in America aboard La Lorraine last Saturday.

He admitted in an interview at the Hotel Marlborough shortly after landing, that he had purposely avoided interviewers in order to escape embarrassing questions which his marked attention on the voyage to Mrs. Inez Sprague Stiness, fascinating young divorcee of three weeks, might have provoked.

"You see," said the Count, who is a tall, well-built man of 40 and who speaks excellent English: "You Americans are so personal, and I really feared I should blush if you pressed me."

Friends of the Count assert that his engagement to the charming Mrs. Stiness may be expected at any moment. The Count expects shortly to visit Mrs. Stiness and her father, ex-Gov. Sprague, of Rhode Island, at Narragansett Pier.

LADY SMITTEN, TOO.

The reported engagement of the titled Frenchman to the young society woman recalls the remarks attributed to Mrs. Stiness when she arrived. After remarking casually that "You have some gentlemen here, but in Paris they know how to treat a woman," Mrs. Stiness said:

"I must admit that I have many friends among the nobility in Paris, and no doubt some of them will, perhaps, propose to me if they fall in love. I like the gaiety of Paris life, and I shall live there always. It is a fascinating place, and the men one meets there are such gentlemen."

"I like American women," smiled the Count. "And particularly do I like Mrs. Stiness. We are very dear friends."

The Count smilingly refused to admit that a tacit engagement exists between him and Mrs. Stiness.

Count Rouciere is well known in New York, having been entertained extensively here on previous visits. His particular chum in Manhattan is Edmund Russell, the well-known artist. Mr. Russell says the Count, who traces his ancestry back for hundreds of years, has traveled extensively, speaks several languages, and is an author of power, having written successful poems, stories and plays. As other evidences of his versatility, Mr. Russell says the Count is a clever painter, rider, explorer, and, in a land where the duel is still in vogue, has a reputation as a pistol shot and swordsman.

The Count's family has loaned to the Museum of Natural History a scarab engraved stone, one of the most unique in the world, which dates back several hundred years before the discovery of America. This, the Count discovered in the tropics during a geological exploration. The Count is as interested in scientific matters as his Italian friend, the Duke of the Abruzzi. He is a member of many foreign scientific bodies and has received many decorations for scientific research. He has been made a member of the American Geographical Society.

MOOT POINT IN CAMORRA CASE.

Prisoner Offers to Stake His Liberty for Life Against Testimony Given By "Experts."

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

VITERBO, Sept. 23.—More experts were called in the Camorra trial today in the attempt of the jury to determine whether the finger ring alleged by the carabineers to have been found in the possession of the alleged murders of Gennaro Cuoccolo was identical with that Cuoccolo is known to have worn. The defense has asserted that the carabiners purchased a new ring to exhibit in court with the deliberate purpose of manufacturing evidence.

Yesterday three experts declared that the ring in evidence had been worn several months. Today other expert witnesses testified that from examination it was evident that the ring had seen service for not more than two or three months.

"I propose," said De Marini, "that ten identical rings be purchased and be brought into court and be handled as this ring has been handled. If this is done, I will wager that in a few days all of them will be reduced to the same condition as the exhibit.

"If they are not, and I lose, my forfeit will be that I will admit that I murdered Cuoccolo and I will go to prison for life."

PHILADELPHIA, Sept. 24.—The Pennsylvania Railroad Company at 2:45 o'clock this morning announced that the only information at hand concerning the accident to the eighteen-hour flyer was that the fast express had been "sideswiped" by a freight train twenty-five miles east of Pittsburgh.

Mr. Taft's reception throughout was the most cordial and demonstrative he has received on any of his previous visits here.

ON RECIPROCITY.

Mr. Taft said he believed and still believes that reciprocity would inure to the benefit of both countries.

Twice during the day the President was introduced as "the best and greatest President of the country." He modestly protested on each occasion.

In his speech on the need of judicial reform the President said:

"One of the real reasons for discontent is the character of the procedure and the slow administration of justice in our courts. I believe that the statesmen of this country and the young lawyers should devote their attention to a constant discussion and pressure upon the Legislatures for cutting short judicial procedure and expediting justice. It is the one thing, in my judgment, th… is more easily reached and more needed under our government than any other.

"I wonder whether you have thought of the tendency that we have had in that kind of legislation from the time the Constitution was adopted in this country and our courts were organized until now, and especially in the West and as you go West. Trial by jury is a good thing. It brings into the administration of justice the people and in a popular government they feel safer in that they are called in to determine issues of important facts; but trial by jury, my friends, as stated in the Constitution, was a trial by jury of the facts under the inspiration of a judge that had the power to tell the jury what the law was, and had the power to hold the courtroom under his control and not let it be taken away by the counsel for the prosecution or the counsel for the defense. And yet the suspicion of the people of the judges and the movement of all legislation from the Atlantic westward has been such as to take away from the judges the power they had under MAHA (Neb.) Sept. 23.—[Exclu- Dispatch.] Frank B. Kellogg of Paul, official "trust buster" of the rnment, tonight outlined his legal edy for corporation and trust es and suggested legislation ch he said would cure the ills corporations. Mr. Kellog com- ded the Supreme Court decision the Standard Oil and tobacco cases. I believe Congress can, through a em of license or incorporation, t the size, capital and manner of ng business of corporations en- ed in interstate commerce," he ed.

r. Kellogg proceeded finally to e specificially what sort of law gress should pass, declaring that hould provide:

SKETCHES A LAW.

1.) A voluntary system of Federal rporations and license and lim- the size of the corporations and amount of the country's business y may control.

2.) A compulsory license, which ll be the alternative of Federal rporation, requiring corporations aged in interstate commerce, other n railways and purely transporta- companies, to take out a license taining substantially the same re- ctions and provisions as those vided for Federal incorporations.

That each separate corporation or nsed company shall engage in but business, and shall not be allowed hold stock in corporations con- ting other business. The law uld provide, however, that with approval of the commission of porations a corporation organized the purpose of taking over the perty and business of an existing poration might hold stock in other porations for two years, as a suffi- t time to allow it to readjust its iness.

The Republican representation will stand at 40 and Democrats t 42, there being one vacancy from Colorado. In the recent extra session the tariff measures were put through the Senate by alignment of progressive Republicans with the Democrats and the aid of even four of the progressives would enable the full Democratic strength to carry out its will on all issues.

A message was sent to the War Department from Gen. Joseph W. Duncan, commander of the Department of Texas, now at Cloudcroft, asking for permission to send a troop of cavalry to New Mexico from the temporary camp of the Fourth Cavalry at Camp Steever, near Fort Bliss.

Col. Estrada of the Juarez garrison and Chief of Police Campa are preparing a warm reception for the Magonistas if they attempt to cross into Mexico at any point along the border.

GUARD AGAINST RIOTS.

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Comprehensive police and military measures have been taken to prevent the holding of parades or any public demonstrations tomorrow against war, or the high prices of food. Cheaper food processions and a great anti-war demonstration are being arranged for Sunday by the labor unions and the revolutionary and socialistic societies.

PRESIDENT COMMENDS WORK OF TARIFF COMMISSION.

THE members of the present Tariff Board have shown by work already done how thorough their future work will be, and they have demonstrated that the material they will place before Congress and the Executive in December with reference to Schedules K and I—that is, on woolens and on cottons—will be of a more valuable character and one from which more valuable conclusions can be drawn than any report of the kind ever submitted to any legislative body.

When those reports shall have been submitted, showing the difference in the cost of production abroad and in this country of textile fabrics, and giving a basis upon which a proper reduction can be made in either schedule, it will be my duty and pleasure to recommend to Congress such a reduction.

Meantime, attacks upon the board as one whose judgment is not worthy of consideration are born not of a candid consideration of their previous work, not of a frank acknowledgment of the ability of the various members of the board to do work that they are charged to do, but they come from the thoughtless heat of political controversy, and ought to have no weight with unbiased friends of the public weal.

PRESIDENT TAFT.

HAMMERS RECALL.

the English system that we have copied and the system that we put into our Constitution.

AS IN ENGLAND.

"If a judge is not frightened by anybody and will carry on a court as his court, then you will have your administration of justice as it is in England.

"If you examine the statistics, you will blush as Americans that we have not shown ourselves more adaptable to the issue which has arisen here with respect to whether crime shall be punished and have not made a machinery that has accomplished the purpose.

"The tendency of legislation ought to be toward giving the judges more power, and then making the judges responsible. There is no difficulty about making the judges responsible, either. I know it is proposed to make a short cut, and cut his head off without any reason, just because the people wish it, under the theory of a judicial recall. I agree that the movement has foundation on the basis which I have stated, namely, that the courts have not fulfilled the function that they ought to fulfill, but I do not agree that therefore they ought to kill the court, and that is what I think you are doing if you make every tenure of office dependent on an election.

"Gentlemen, that won't do. Make your judges responsible. Impeach them. Impeachment of a judge would be a very healthy thing in these times, I agree. I have known instances in Congress where there was ground for impeachment that ought to have been carried through, but on inquiry I found that the difficulties between the member of Congress and the judge had been settled by compromise and the thing had passed away. It is not necessary that we should have an impeachment by the Legislature if that is a clumsy method, as it is. We can have some other method of investigating the qualifications of judges and, if they don't fill the measure, to remove them. Have some sort of judicial hearing in which the facts shall be considered."

FROM THE THOUGHTLESS.

In his speech tonight President Taft declared that attacks made upon the tariff board were not candid criticisms of that body's work based on the showing made, but came "from the thoughtless heat of political controversy and ought to have no weight with unbiased friends of the public weal;" upheld the wisdom of his selections for the tariff board and announced that he never expected to see the tariff taken so far out of politics that it would not be the subject of political debate. He agreed that the members of the board were not tariff experts, but said it was better so. Mr. Taft denied the board was partial, and pointed out that, of its total membership of five, only two could really be termed members of a political party. Two others were professors skilled in economics, and the third was an editor of a stockman's journal.

President Taft was the guest throughout the day of the Million Population Club, and his hosts made an earnest endeavor to show the Chief Executive how far along toward a million the city had climbed.

Following breakfast at the Mercantile Club, came the forty-mile automobile ride through St. Louis and into the suburbs.

The reception was non-partisan, so far as it could be made so, although tonight Mr. Taft delivered one of his set political addresses.

COLLEGE GAME.

Football and baseball claimed a part of the President's time. He opened a college game of sport by tossing the ball onto the field, and saw a National League game of baseball during the afternoon. At the football field the President was introduced by Archbishop Glennon as "the best President the United States had ever had." Mr. Taft smilingly replied he had almost had great faith in the good judgment of the archbishop, but he thought his sense of proportion as to Presidents might be a little awry.

During the automobile parade there were two runaways of horses belonging to the mounted police escort. One of the unmanageable animals dashed up to the rear of the President's car, and was only stopped by a saber blow from one of the policemen. The President seemed not to notice the incident.

Gov. Hadley introduced President Taft at the breakfast, saying all parties and all factions joined in cordial greeting to him.

President Taft replied briefly, saying he felt absolutely at home in St. Louis, and then referred to reciprocity. The President referred to the recent Governors' conference at Spring Lake, N. J., which named a committee to follow the decision of Judge Sanborn through the United States Supreme Court. He said the Governors have a right to take an interest in the affairs of their States.

UNION RESOLUTIONS.

The Central Trades and Labor Union recently passed a resolution prohibiting union musicians from playing in any of the entertainments given to President Taft if the Boy Scouts participated in the entertainment in any way. The objection was based on the theory that the Boy Scouts organization is a budding militia movement that later will be used to suppress strikes. A compromise, however, was reached which permitted participation of the Boy Scouts and the union labor men but the union resolution was not reconsidered.

At the Mercantile Club three ex-Governors of Missouri, Stevens, Francis and Folk, Democrats, were on the Reception Committee. At the Union Station five companies of Boy Scouts were given a place of honor. A union band furnished music at the Coliseum tonight.

President Taft, after having breakfast at the Mercantile Club, addressed the Masonic Club for five minutes and then went to the City Club for luncheon. He laid a corner-stone in the new Y.W.C.A. building at 2:30 o'clock, after which he proceeded to the National League baseball ground to witness a game between Philadelphia and St. Louis. He was a guest of honor at a private dinner at 6 o'clock, and at 8 o'clock tonight he spoke at the Coliseum. He left the city shortly before midnight.

PRESIDENT'S SPEECH ON TARIFF BOARD.

Following is the full text of President Taft's speech in St. Louis on the subject of "The Tariff Board:"

My Fellow Citizens: The issue which has arisen in respect to the wisdom and propriety of the veto of the three tariff bills which passed Congress at the last session and were presented to the Executive for signature has brought into greater prominence than ever before the question of the necessity for a Tariff Board to advise the Executive and Congress as to the facts in reference to the present operation of an existing tariff and the future operation of a proposed tariff.

The heated discussion that followed the passage of the Payne bill developed among the people of this country a deep feeling that never again ought tariff legislation to be attempted without a fairer and more impartial investigation than had been possible under the system which prevailed in the making of the McKinley bill, the Wilson bill, the Dingley bill, and the Payne bill. These bills were prepared by men of great ability and large experience, but they were members of Congress. The investigation devoted to the work did not exceed more than a few months, the witnesses who were called were generally interested in the matter and prone to give a colored view of the facts in reference to the protection needed, the tariff itself was a complicated matter, the terms used were not easily understood, and while the question was of the utmost importance to the people at large the people at large had little opportunity to know what the changes were which were being actually effected and what their operation would be either upon the industries protected or upon the cost of living to the consuming public.

SENSE OF INADEQUACY.

This sense of inadequacy of information in respect to the operation of tariff changes naturally roused the business men of the country, who could appreciate more than any other class the possible injury and disturbance of business by ill-advised legislation, to the necessity for a reform. An association was organized among the commercial bodies of this country to promote the passage of a bill providing for a permanent Tariff Commission or Board which should be constantly engaged in the investigation into trade relations, should have on hand the data from which the comparative cost of production of dutiable articles at home and abroad could be promptly stated, could furnish to Congress the revenue-producing capacity of all rates of duty, and give all the other facts with reference to the effect of the operation of the tariff which Congress ought to know in determining whether changes were needed or not and in determining how best taxes might be reduced if there was a surplus or how best they might be increased if there was a deficit.

Through a provision in the Payne bill, I was able to appoint a board of three, and with appropriations furnished by Congress to direct them to make a glossary of the tariff, or an encyclopedia, by which any layman might inform himself as to the meaning of the terms in the tariff and as to the actual ad valorem rates imposed, although specific rates were provided, and all the other facts enabling one to take up a tariff and intelligently to study its meaning.

The movement for the permanent organization of a Tariff Commission, after the passage of a bill for that purpose was put forth through both houses, failed by reason of a filibuster and the shortness of the last session of the Sixty-first Congress. Sufficient money was given me, however, to continue the board which I had already appointed. I increased its membership by two, in order to make it a nonpartisan board, and I directed it to do the work that the bill which failed had prescribed for the permanent Tariff Board to be appointed thereunder. At the instance of a Democratic Senator, the permanent Tariff Board, in an appropriation bill which is now law, was directed if established, to make a report on schedule K on the 1st of December next. I issued an order to the Tariff Board, newly constituted, to prepare a report on schedule K and schedule I, the woolen and the cotton schedules, by that date, which bring in the reports at the opening of the regular session of Congress.

In order to secure an adoption of the Canadian reciprocity treaty I called a special session to discharge the promise I had made to the Canadian authorities. At this special session the three tariff bills were passed which I vetoed, and I vetoed them chiefly on the ground that no time had been taken to investigate the effect of the changes which were proposed and that they ought to await the coming in of the report in December, when we should have full information at least on the question of wool and woolens and cotton manufactures. There were other grounds for withholding my approval from the bills, which are set forth in the messages, but for the present I do not wish to consider them. I am anxious here to bring forward the issue as to the necessity for a Tariff Board to advise Congress of the facts in respect to dutiable articles and the operation of a tariff before it shall be adopted into law.

It has been said that the Tariff Board is a mere pretext, that it is a board of my hirelings and clerks, and that it is absurd for me to delay Congress in the enactment of that which is its highest privilege—to wit, revenue measures—until I can secure, through an agency of mine, information as to the wisdom of the proposed bills.

My exercise of the veto power at all is severely criticised as a remnant of the royal prerogative and my attitude is compared to that of George III. Of course I understand that these periods of rhetoric are usual under such circumstances, and I do not find myself greatly troubled by them when called upon to exercise a clearly imposed Constitutional function.

The Constitution of the United States says that—

Every bill which shall have passed the House of Representatives and the Senate shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the President of the United States; if he approve he shall sign it, but if not he shall return it, with his objections, to that house in which it shall have originated, who shall enter the objections at large on their journal and proceed to reconsider it.

I did disapprove these bills, and I therefore withheld my signature, following exactly the injunction of the Constitution. The truth is, that instrument makes the President part of the legislative power in the enactment of bills. I could not avoid the responsibility, and having the responsibility, I must meet it and exercise the function imposed on me in accordance with my best ability. I did not feel that the information was at hand, either for the use of Congress or myself, upon which the bills proposed ought to have been passed. The mere fact that in the case of certain schedules there ought to be reductions was not a sufficient reason for making any kind of a reduction. Revenue measures of this sort, in which the protective principle has heretofore been recognized and enforced, have a direct bearing upon the business and prosperity of the country, and a substantial change in the rates ought not to be made without an earnest inquiry as to the effect that may be had upon the industries affected. The reform aimed at in the organization of a Tariff Board for the purpose of making an impartial investigation into such facts as are relevant to these issues is of the highest importance to the country. In the long run I believe it to be of higher importance than the reduction of any particular schedule. The agitation for such a board in the last two years has been greatly in the public interest, and now to throw away the benefit secured by this public movement toward a better method of readjusting the tariff is to take a retrograde step.

The tariff board has been referred to sometimes as a board of experts on the tariff. This is hardly a correct description. It would be impossible to secure a board, all the members of which had expert knowledge upon all the subjects of the tariff, for the fourteen or fifteen schedules are very broad in their scope and include much of what is manufactured or produced in the world. Indeed, it is by no means clear that it would be of advantage to have in the board itself men who are experts upon the making and sale of particular articles mentioned in the tariff. It is far better to have in the board men who are in the habit of making investigations, who are in the habit of calculating costs, who are in the habit of digesting and analyzing great collections of evidence and reducing them to intelligent conclusions which may be stated for the benefit of those who intend to use them. That is the profession of trained economists, and, therefore, I put at the head of this board, Prof. Henry C. Emery, upon the recommendation of the presidents of a number of universities who were consulted.

Mr. Alvin Sanders was the editor of the Breeders' Gazette, a man of the highest standing, who had devoted his life to the study of the agricultural interests of this country, while Mr. Reynolds had been four years an Assistant Secretary of the Treasury under Mr. Roosevelt, in charge of customs, and had become very familiar with the operation of the existing tariff and its construction. To these three I added Prof. Page of the University of California, and then of the University of Virginia, a well-known economist, with the same general standing as that of Prof. Emery; and Mr. W. M. Howard, a former Democratic Congressman from Georgia and admittedly one of the ablest and fairest members of the half-dozen Congresses in which he served. The make-up of the board insures non-partisan action. The truth is, that with the exception of Mr. Howard and of Mr. Reynolds, the board may be said to have no political affiliations at all.

The board is a board of the highest intelligence and ability, and well qualified by their previous experience to act as investigators, analyzers of evidence, and judges of issues of fact. They are under instructions to draw their conclusions without respect to their effect, and I venture to say that there is no board in the country less likely to be influenced by political or other improper considerations than the tariff board as it is now constituted. Even the attacks made upon it, prompted by the heat of political controversy and impatience at my vetoes, cannot turn it from a judicial attitude toward all questions that it is now considering.

In preparation for this work, Prof. Emery visited Europe and devoted a very considerable time to consultation with bureaus in Germany, in Austria, and in other countries in which similar bureaus were engaged in this same work. He made a full report to the Secretary of the Treasury, and, proceeding upon the lines of experience which were pointed out by the reports of these foreign bureaus, the board have organized an office in which they employ eighty persons, of whom many are technical experts in the investigations that they are making and reporting to this tribunal for its analysis and consideration.

They were called upon to make a report upon the comparative cost of the manufacture of print paper in Canada and in this country. They first made a preliminary report, and then they made a final report, and I venture to say that never before has a report so complete, so comprehensive, and so satisfactory as to the comparative cost of any product in two countries been made as this upon the pulp and news-print paper. The data on pulp and paper included in the report were secured from fifty-three ground-wood mills, twenty-five sulphite mills, and thirty-eight news-print mills, making a total of 116 mills, and representing 940,475 tons of news-print paper, or 86 per cent. of the news-print paper production of the United States. The data for Canada were taken from thirteen ground-wood mills, five sulphite mills, and seven news-print paper plants. Reports were secured covering 78.2 per cent. of the news-print paper, 60.2 per cent. of the ground-wood, and 55.7 per cent. of the sulphite-pulp capacity of Canada. All of these figures, including those from Canada, were secured directly by representatives of the board from the books of the different companies. They prepared exact schedules, including all essential items of equipment, cost, and wages, and for each of the companies included in the tables they have the original schedules covering all items in detail. They first show the production of pulp and paper in the United States; then the cost of production in the United States, with an explanatory statement and tables and comment; then the result of the Canadian investigation of the cost of production of pulp and paper there. In the fifth chapter is a comparison of costs in the United States and Canada. The sixth chapter treats of the intermediate profits and cost of wood; the seventh chapter of the pounds of material per ton of news-print paper; the eighth chapter of the efficiency of equipment in paper mills in the United States and Canada; the ninth chapter, of the price of news-print paper; in the tenth chapter is a discussion of investment and depreciation; in the eleventh chapter are shown variations in cost of productions over a period of years; in the twelfth chapter are set forth the amount, value, and sources of wood-pulp imports into the United States, and in the thirteenth chapter there is a full discussion of the wages and hours of employment. It is a volume of 134 printed pages, with tables showing exactly the elements that go into the cost of making paper in Canada and making paper in this country, and disclosing both what the rates of wages are in the two countries and also what the labor cost is in the making of a ton of news-print paper in the United States and in Canada, and showing, in other words, the efficiency of the labor in the two countries, as well as the actual amount paid per hour or per day.

A study of this report will satisfy any candid, impartial observer of the completeness with which it is possible to secure information without the inquisitorial examination under oath, and the greater accuracy that may be had in a quiet, friendly examination of the books than by a necessarily antagonistic cross-examination of the proprietor of the business when on the stand. The report vindicates the judgment of the European authorities, whom Prof. Emery consulted, that the use of formal cross-examinations to secure facts in regard to the cost of the manufactured articles is not the best course for getting at the facts.

It is said with respect to the Tariff Board that its investigations are not to be relied upon, because it must secure its information from interested parties, and that no information is available to it that is not available directly to the Ways and Means Committee, and that the committee can secure testimony of such people more effectively than the Tariff Board. Such a statement fails entirely to recognize the real character of the investigations of the Tariff Board. Material secured by that board is not in the nature of testimony of different parties examined as to what they think on any of these facts. It is in the result of an examination of the books and records of producers and manufacturers and a tabulation from these by the expert agents of the board, resulting in perfectly definite and precise information as to the actual results given by the best industrial or commercial operations for a given time. In short, it is the substitution of records compiled from the books of the concerns for the testimony of individuals.

Then again it said that other bureaus or agencies of the government longer established and of better organization have made, or are making, all the investigations of this kind necessary. The maker of such an objection fails to appreciate the marked difference between the work of the board and most other agencies of the government. The work of the Tariff Board is not primarily statistical. Other agencies of the government, especially in the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Commerce and Labor, carry on statistical investigations of much importance, much of which has to be used by the Tariff Board, and in all cases the Tariff Board endeavors to avoid any duplication of work of this kind. But such statistical work as to production, imports and exports, number of people employed, earnings per week, etc., are a very small part of the investigation necessary for a consideration of tariff problems. No agency of the government has ever done even statistical work primarily with a view to considering the effects of tariff rates on producers and consumers. For instance, there is much printed material on the subject of wages in different lines of industry, but practically none of this is of much value for a discussion of tariff questions, since wages per day or per week signify little as to the actual labor cost per unit of article. The investigation now being made by the Tariff Board into the textile industries will develop a knowledge regarding wages in relation to the amount of output, efficiency of laborers and machines in this and leading foreign countries of a character never made public before and based on the actual wages paid and output secured of the thousands of laborers and thousands of machines, as shown by the pay rolls of the companies checked up by the earnings of individual men.

The Bureau of Corporations has in some cases made very careful examination into costs of production. These investigations, however, were not undertaken primarily with reference to their bearing on tariff legislation. So far as they cover the ground necessary for such purpose, there will be no need of this work being duplicated by the tariff board. This is especially true of the metal schedule. It is only necessary to supplement this material by such other information as may be vital to a consideration of the tariff proper.

The best way to understand the peculiar character of the investigations of the tariff board is to compare their published report on pulp and news-print paper either with the statistical work of other government agencies regarding this industry or with the hearings before the Ways and Means Committee. It is shown that this investigation does not in any way duplicate the statistical work of the other departments, but that its scope is quite different, and yet the investigation develops data essential to an understanding of industries from a point of view of the tariff.

It will also appear that the method of investigation is quite different from that of a Congressional committee, and the information afforded much more detailed in character, and, on the other hand, is much more condensed than the information developed by the verbal examination of witnesses. The work of the board up to date in the way of detailed inquiry has been through several dozen agents working on the books of persons engaged in the production or manufacture of the articles in question in foreign countries and abroad. What Congressional committee ever even attempted such an investigation, covering, as it must, many months of time? Besides this work of investigation, there has been much work done in the preparation of a glossary for many of the schedules covering not only the important statistics but a description of each article enumerated in the tariff, with an explanation of its relation to the industry, its importance to producers and consumers, and the nature of the tariff duty imposed. Besides this, technical experts have been employed to make special reports on special schedules of the tariff, which will serve as a basis for later investigation of a more detailed character. Preliminary work of this kind, for instance, has been done in the case of iron and steel, which will be the next subject of inquiry after the completion of the work on cotton and woolens.

It has been said that members of the Ways and Means Committee are themselves experts on tariff matters, and that they have had years of dealing with tariff statutes. The character of the investigations made by members of the Ways and Means Committees everybody knows. It consists in calling men engaged in the business and inviting their opinion as to the necessity for a tariff and as to whether it should be lowered or raised. Such investigations are the very ones which have met the criticism of the public and have given rise to a demand for a more scientific and impartial method of securing the facts upon the legislation which is to be passed.

It is objected that with reference to the cost of production there can be no scientific conclusion. If by this is meant that there will be found to be no exact mathematical measure of the difference in the cost of production of goods in one country and of goods in another, it is true. Conditions vary in different States, in different provinces, and in different countries. They differ between different manufacturers, and the difference in the cost of production between two countries is, therefore, a difference that cannot be stated with definiteness. It must be a variable amount, and must be so stated, but when thus stated with variations it may, nevertheless, be accurate and just, and ought to be, so that the tariff can be adjusted to the facts as they are rather than to the facts as interested parties would state them. The report of the board on the paper and pulp industry was illuminating. It gave the average cost of production, with all the elements; showed how it differed between the mills in the same country and between the mills of the two countries, and demonstrated that on the whole the real average difference in the cost of production was measured by the difference in the cost of the raw material, the pulp wood, in the two countries. It is such conclusions which, with the means of securing them, the American people have the right themselves to have, and to insist that their representatives in Congress shall have, before making radical changes in existing legislation.

I do not contend that the tariff can be taken out of politics, in the sense that it will never be made the subject of political discussion. Men differ radically as to the economical wisdom of a protective tariff, or a tariff for revenue only, and that must always be the subject of political discussion. But there is a means of taking the ascertainment of facts away from a tribunal like that of the Ways and Means Committee, which is necessarily hurried in its inquiries and necessarily lacking in thoroughness and the temper necessary to reach the most impartial conclusions. It is possible to transfer those investigations heretofore made by the Ways and Means and Finance committees to a tribunal which will make a thorough and impartial inquiry. I do not mean to say that the tariff board which I have appointed is constituted by the best method possible. I do not think it is. I think it would be better to have it appointed by the President, with the confirmation of the Senate, and to make it independent of the President and of Congress as far as that may be possible under our system. I do say that the present board is as independent as any board can be, but I admit that its method of appointment is such that conditions might arise having a tendency to rob it of its impartial character. Therefore, I ventured, with all the energy of which I was capable, the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, and I shall urge upon the Congress, as long as it is my function to do so, the establishment by law of such a commission.

But, meantime, Congress has enabled me to organize the present commission. They have shown by their work already done how thorough their future work will be, and they have demonstrated by what they have done that the material which they will place

CONDEMNATION OF THE RECALL.

We must blush as Americans that we have not kept pace with England, whose laws we copied, but where judges keep up with their dockets and punish crime promptly. Too many homicides go acquitted, too many are never brought into the courtroom. The tendency of our legislation of the future should be to give the judges more power and make them more responsible. This should not be done by recall, which is tantamount to killing the court. Impeachment is good enough means of getting rid of any judge who might prove corrupt or undesirable.

Surrender of Their Arms Fails to Put an End to the Savagery of Untamed Filipinos.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22.—The surrender of their firearms has not put an end to the head-hunting forays of the mountain tribes of northern Luzon, according to William Pack, governor of the provinces inhabited by 500,000 untamed Philippine Islanders.

On the contrary, he said, the raids go on with great regularity although the natives have been induced to turn most of their attention to the cultivation of rice.

Gov. Pack arrived from the Orient yesterday on a vacation. He is planning a trip around the world before he returns. Pack first went to the islands as a lieutenant in a volunteer regiment, and later was appointed provincial governor by President Taft, at that time Governor-General.

LIEU LAND SALES END.

No More to Be Put Up at Auction Till Adjustment Between State and Government Comes.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Until an adjustment is reached between the government and State relative to the amount of indemnity land which is still due California, there will be no sales of lieu land scrip at the office of State Surveyer-General Kingsbury.

The government and the State have a controversy on the question of whether or not, the State should give the government $20,000 and about 20,000 acres, alleged to be due the latter, because the State at one time allowed its sales of lieu lands to exceed the number of acres of school land it had already returned to the government.

On a sale of 23,022 acres of lieu lands the State has made a clear gain of $162,279 in the last two years, because of the auction law placed before the Legislature by Surveyor-General Kingsbury, and passed at the session of 1909.

Shannon has retained Judge Carrol Cook of San Francisco to represent him. Attorney Theodore Roache of San Francisco will appear as the personal representative of Gov Johnson and John Francis Neylan will represent the State Board of Control. The members of the committee are Senators Strobridge, Shanahan, Thompson, Black and Estudillo.

Conflict of Authority Over the Reptile's Body Results in Its Capture Near Marysville.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MARYSVILLE, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Clarence Hull of Terra Buena brought to this city this morning a double-headed snake that has been attracting considerable attention. The snake is of the common gopher variety and is a young one. Its two heads are side by side, and both are perfectly formed, the reptile watching its viewers with four eyes and sticking out two tongues at them. Hull thinks the two heads of the snake had opposing ideas as to which way was the safest to go, their inability to agree making the capture of the snake easy. When Hull perceived its two heads, he set about to take it. The snake showed it wanted to get away, but in its wriggling it made no headway. Hull thinks this was due to conflict of authority, two heads trying to manage one body.

Don't Believe the Report.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Associates of Robert S. Lovett, president of the Harriman railroad lines, placed little credence today in the report that Mr. Lovett is to become chairman of the board of directors, and that Julius Kruttschnitt would succeed him as directing head of the roads. Judge Lovett was not in town.

"This is the fiftieth time this report has bobbed up within the last few months," said a friend of ex-Judge Lovett. "We hardly think it is true."

WASHINGTON, Sept. 22.—[By A. P. Day Wire.] Gov.-Gen. W. TOWN OF VALDEZ, ALASKA, SHAKEN UP BY TEMBLOR.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

VALDEZ (Alaska) Sept. 23.—The worst earthquake experienced in Valdez since the town was founded thirteen years ago, occurred at 7:02 o'clock Thursday night. The oscillations were northwest and southeast and their duration covered fifty-two seconds. Valdez is built of wood, with no building more than two stories high, and no damage was done. The cable at Sitka was severed. This dispatch is sent by wireless.

EARTHQUAKES COMMON.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SEATTLE (Wash.) Sept. 23.—The section of country between Yakutat and Katalla, in which are situated the largest areas of coal and copper in Alaska, is subject to frequent earthquakes and to their influence is attributed the destruction of the Bering River coal veins. Secretary of the Interior Fisher, during his recent visit to Bering River, found the coal everywhere crushed and crumbled. Even in the long tunnel on the Cunningham claims the coal was cracked.

RECORDED ON FRIDAY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The earthquake reported at Valdez, Alaska, is evidently the same seismic disturbance recorded early Friday morning on seismographs in this and other cities. The seismograph showed the heavy shocks occurred between 12:20 and 12:45 o'clock Friday morning.

BLUE EYES OR BROWN.

nection with the theft of more than $100,000 worth of Pacific express bonds, has aroused the feelings of the residents, no matter which side they have taken in the Kimmel matter.

Chief of Police George Francis threatened to arrest Hunt if he did not leave town. He departed today. He was severely arraigned in the local papers here and it developed today that he had sent a telegram to Mrs. Kimmel from Arkansas City previous to his arrival, telling her to keep up her nerve.

HAS STAUNCH FRIENDS.

No matter whether or not "Kimmel" is identified by Mrs. Kimmel, he will be taken care of, according to Mrs. Harry L. Fox. "He has been given to us to be taken care of," she said, "and it makes no difference who recognizes him or who does not. I know he is George and nothing can make me change now."

"Some time I shall show all the doubters that this man is George A. Kimmel," said Mr. Fox as he was leaving with "Kimmel" in his car for the trip and rest in the country.

In telling the story of "Kimmel's" visit to the old Kimmel home, Mrs. Kimmel laid particular stress on the failure of Kimmel to identify the old kitchen stove.

"We had just polished the nickelware on the stove," she said. "He looked at it and said, 'Oh, I see you have a new stove.'

STRANGE INCIDENTS.

"George Kimmel bought that stove for me, brought it home and helped me put it up. It seems funny that he didn't remember that.

"Then there were my drawings, too. A long, long time ago I made a sketch of three horses. George liked it and had it framed for me. It still hangs in the old house. I showed him the sketch.

"'Did I draw that?' he asked.

"'Did you?' I asked.

"'Yes,' he said, 'I did and I remember you criticising it.'

"Doesn't that seem strange?" asked the little woman.

Meanwhile Dr. Fred W. Bonine, an oculist, said by no miracle could the man here be George Kimmel. Basing this assertion on the man's eyes, Dr. Bonine said:

EYES NOT RIGHT COLOR.

"I performed an operation on George Kimmel that left a scar for life. I inspected this man's eyes with the strongest of glasses. His eyes are perfect. Furthermore, I have asked the best-known eye specialists in Europe and America if it is possible for a man's eyes to change from brown to blue. All have replied that such a case has never been reported in the history of medicine."

George Immel's eyes were brown. The man here has blue eyes.

OUR NATIONAL PARKS.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Unanimity of opinion marked the conference of national park superintendents in Yellowstone Park last week as to the advisability of the establishment of a separate bureau for the administration of the national parks and monuments, according to Clement S. Ucker, chief clerk of the Interior Department, secretary to the conference. "At present," said Mr. Ucker, "there is no one in direct charge of the parks of the country. There should be some one who could give his whole attention to this work."

THE COAST ARTILLERY.

ASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—Ex-ing the belief that the artillery ict of California, of all others he country, should be supplied an adequate number of officers, Bliss, commanding the depart-of California, has reported to War Department that there is a deficiency in the number of of-s of that arm in his territory. He s an increase in the number of artillery officers. Gen. PREMIER TAKES OFFICE shipment from the prairie provinces to Liverpool via Hudson Bay. This competition, they declared, would force the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern to reduce their rates, provided the government operated the new lines. If it were turned over to an existing railway company, they feared the rates would be kept up by collusion.

Mr. Borden promised if he were elected the road would be operated as they desired by the government. The farmers have also claimed that they were cheated through mixing of wheat in the terminal elevators at Fort William and Port Arthur, Ontario.

FOR GOVERNMENT OWNERSHIP.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier introduced a bill giving sweeping powers to a grain commission, but refused to adopt the government ownership plan unless regulation failed. Mr. Borden declared for government ownership. To carry this out negotiations must now be instituted for the purpose of these great elevators.

Although he has been beaten, Sir Wilfrid Laurier will remain in the political game. "I must stay with the boys," he said.

Mr. Borden will be the new Prime Minister of Canada, but in his own household he is merely leader of the opposition. He admits it. When he was touring the West last summer he said on several occasions:

"I am leader of the opposition in two senses, in the House of Commons and in my own home. I hope and expect to change my position in the House of Commons, but in my home I have no expectation ever of changing."

LAURIER WILL YET HOLD SEAT IN PARLIAMENT.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

OTTAWA, Sept. 23.—"I will remain in Parliament as leader of the opposition for some time. I would be a deserter of my party if I ran away now," said Sir Wilfrid Laurier to the newspaper men today.

Sir Wilfrid said he had intended to retire and no doubt would do so in time, but not immediately. He undoubtedly will go through the next session as a leader of the opposition and he may continue there a good many sessions. Though 70 years old, his health is good. The Prime Minister stated that the government would resign as soon as possible to enable Earl Grey to leave Canada and the Duke of Connaught to succeed him as Governor-General.

LIBERALS STILL UPHOLD CAUSE OF RECIPROCITY.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MONTREAL, Sept. 23.—The Liberal ministers, those defeated in Thursday's election as well as the few who saved their seats, will meet in Ottawa the coming week to wind up the affairs of the present government and to tender their resignations to the Governor-General. They also will consider plans for the reorganization of their party.

Prominent Liberals here express the opinion that the party will not recant its belief that trade reciprocity would be a good thing for both countries and that they would at first favorable opportunity again appeal to the people of Canada to sustain them in that belief. Leaders lay much reason for their defeat on the present era of unprecedented prosperity through which the Dominion is now passing.

All the leading Liberals from Sir Wilfrid Laurier down have declared since defeat that they will hold to the view that reciprocity offered Canada a decided advantage.

RESENTFUL AMERICANS SNUB CANADIAN COIN.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PORTLAND (Or.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] As the result of the defeat of reciprocity in the Canadian elections last Thursday Canadian money no longer circulates freely at par in Portland. Many business houses are declining to take the coins from across the border and hundreds of customers are refusing them when proffered.

For several years past Canadian dimes, quarters and half-dollars have circulated freely in Northwestern cities. It was once customary to discount all such coins above the dime 20 per cent., but this custom long since passed away, and the money from across the border has been circulating freely.

Now a boycott has been started against it by resentful Americans, and it is making so much progress that several business houses today found it necessary to turn their Canadian money in at banks for exchange because it was refused by customers.

PAPER MANUFACTURERS WOULD RAISE PRICES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Proposed increases in the price of white, print and other grades of paper were discussed and virtually agreed upon here today at a private meeting of middle western paper manufacturers.

One of the manufacturers who attended the meeting, but who declined to permit use of his name, said:

"The recent defeat of the proposed reciprocity treaty between Canada and the United States will stimulate the manufacture of paper in this country, whereas, if the treaty had been ratified, Canadian manufacturers literally could have wiped us out. At it stands now, the Canadians can compete with us, even with existing tariff rates.

"The battle has been fought and lost, and prices may now be considered firm, with chances for going higher. Prices have been too low and it is time for reaction and a steady market."

FLOUR IN NORTHWEST NOT AFFECTED AS YET.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TACOMA (Wash.) Sept. 22.—Alexander Thomson, secretary of the Washington Millers' Association, says the flour market on the Pacific Coast has not been influenced as yet by the defeat of reciprocity. "Flour will simply follow the wheat market," he said, "and the wheat prices in this section show on effect of the Canadian election."

TROOPS ON THE MOVE.

Mexicans Hostile to Vice-Governor of Sonora, Who is Said to Have Got His Position by Frauds.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CANANEA (Mex.) Sept. 23.—An armed force, believed to be making a move hostile to the interests of E. H. Gayou, Vice-Governor of Sonora, who is said to have obtained his present position by election frauds, is marching toward this city.

About 200 men, with Isidro Escoboza, formerly a prominent resident of Arizpe, at their head, are marching betwen that city and this. Forty soldiers left here at noon today to meet Escoboza's men, and another force of 100 headed by Col. Juan Cabral, who arrived here today from Hermosillo, also departed for the south.

Escoboza's move is said to be entirely against Gayou, and no battle with the government forces is expected. He was given a reception when he and his men reached his former home at Arizpe.

RAPID WORK.

WASHINGTON, Sept. 23.—The promptness with which the provisional regiment of coast artillery troops assembled at San Francisco for duty in the vicinity of the southern frontier in connection with the late Mexican revolution, has been reported to the War Department by Brig.-Gen. Bliss, commanding the department of California. In four hours after receiving their orders during the night, the troops of this regiment from Ft. Baker, across the bay, and Ft. Miley, on the other side of the city of San Francisco, stood on the presidio grounds awaiting orders. In this connection, Gen. Bliss especially commends Lieut.-Col. Ira A. Haynes and Maj. T. B. Lamoreaux of the Coast Artillery corps.

BORROWS A BABY.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Borrowing a aby to display it as her own in an ef-rt to influence a jury to acquit her usband of burglary failed to impress Benton Harbor, Mich., jury and Mrs. arry Cliverton barely escaped a harge of kidnaping the borrowed hild, Sollie Smythe, 4 years old. The other recovered the child yesterday the aid of the police. The Cliver-s had no children, so Mrs. Cliverton lieving in jury persuasion by sentiment, borrowed the child of Mrs. Rosa Smythe in Chicago. Unknown to Mrs. Smythe, she boarded the first train to Benton Harbor, where Cliverton was on trial. Sollie played his part in the drama to perfection. All he was supposed to do was to cry at intervals and gaze on the jury. He did his part, but the jury did not live up to expectations. In the closing plea for the defense, counsel asked the jury in behalf of little Sollie not to send "papa" to jail. There were tears in the lawyer's eyes, in Sollie's eyes and also in his "mother's" eyes. It was a dramatic scene but the jurors voted guilty. In the meantime Mrs. Smythe became alarmed when Sollie did not return home. She told the Chicago police and they got trace of the child, which was returned to the mother.

SCORE OF STUDENTS HURT.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LA FAYETTE (Ind.) Sept. 23.—A score of students were hurt in the annual rush between the freshmen and the sophomore classes of Purdue University last night. Wagons were on hand to carry the injured to the fraternity houses, where they were cared for. Several were carried from the field unconscious. The freshmen had 550 in line and the sophomores 450. Several thousand persons watched the contest. It was one of the most fiercely contested fights in the history of Purdue. The fight was the eighteenth "tank scrap" and the sophomores have taken fourteen of the eighteen fights.

Van Liew yesterday when he freed Robert O'Callaghan, former Western League magnate. O'Callaghan was arrested several days ago charged with gambling by taking bets recently on the Gotch - Hackenschmidt wrestling match.

GERMANS LAGGARD INVENTORS.

Thomas Edison Amazed at Scientific Progress, But Comments on Out-of-Date Technique.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] That Germany, while leading the world in science, is lagging far behind America in the field of invention, is the conclusion of Thomas A. Edison as the result of a long motor tour through the Empire. Edison arrived here last night from South Germany, where an itinerary had been aranged to carry him to the heart of the industrial districts.

"What has impressed me most in Germany," said the American inventor this morning, "is its wonderful industrial expansion, especially in the northern part of the empire.

"I was struck, however, by the fact that with all their industrial growth, Germany's technical methods and appliances are far inferior to ours."

REVOLUTION IN ALL SPAIN.

EXISTENCE OF THE MONARCHY IS THREATENED.

King Alfonso Faces a Crisis More Profound Than Any that Has Arisen Since the Execution of Prof. Ferrer—Madrid Streets Deserted by All Save Armed Police.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The revolutionary situation in Spain is worse today than it has been at any time since the execution of Prof. Ferrer. Despite the strict censorship that permits the passage only of optimistic press reports, every one knows that King Alfonso's government is facing a crisis that threatens its very existence. This information was given to the correspondent of The Los Angeles Times today by the Madrid representative of a great American corporation, who is temporarily in Paris.

"When I left Madrid two days ago," he said, all the police were armed with rifles and patrolled the almost-deserted strets. Business was at a standstill and official notices were posted everywhere, warning the people that at the first outbreak the Civil Governor would be superseded by a military Governor, and that the entire garrison of 25,000 troops would be called out to maintain order. Despite this, every trade, skilled and unskilled, voted for a general strike.

"Outside of Madrid everything is chaos. The revolutionary fever has swept every town of any size in Spain and the government is unable to identify the instigators. It is certain there is a revolutionary organization throughout the nation, yet the government is unable to unearth it."

"What is the real cause of the trouble?"

"The outrageous taxes," exclaimed the correspondent's informant, leaning forward excitedly as he enumerated on his fingers some of the annual dues which he had to pay. "The first is 10 per cent. of the annual rent. Then there is a tax on food, the government taking it for granted that every one eats in proportion to the rent he pays, and he is taxed accordingly. I also pay 200 pesetas ($40,) for police protection and a tax on electricity in addition to indirect taxes of every description on tobacco, amusement and the like."

ITALY WANTS TRIPOLI. MAY FIGHT THE TURKS.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 23.—Advices from Rome say the entire Italian naval force is ready in case of emergency for a conflict with Turkey if the latter refuses to consent to an Italian protectorate over Tripoli. The Italian plan embraces a bombardment of Tripoli and simultaneously a military expedition of 20,000 soldiers to block the Turkish coast along the Adriatic Sea and to operate in Macedonia, Syria and Arabia with a view to protecting the numerous Italians living in those countries. While Italy is perfecting her military plans, every effort is being made to induce Turkey to come to an amicable arrangement, Italy being willing to leave Tripoli under the sovereignty of the Sultan in case Italy's preponderating influence is assured. It is understood Germany and Austria are supporting this plan and that France and Italy stand ready to indemnify Turkey.

FOREIGNERS SAFE. CHINESE REBELS CAUTIOUS.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PEKING, Sept. 23.—Foreigners have not been attacked in the disturbed province of Szechuen. The leaders of the agitation against the Chinese government's policy of building railroads with foreign capital evidently have instructed their followers not to molest foreigners. The obedience of the natives to these instructions indicates, it is believed, that the movement has behind it, a thorough organization, from which further troubles may be expected in the future.

COPENHAGEN STRIKE OVER. CAR EMPLOYEES LOSE.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COPENHAGEN, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Last night the street car strike in this city came to an end, the employees losing. The fight of the unions was lost long ago, but they would not give up, and rioting, with clashes between the mobs and the police, occurred daily. The companies have promised to give old employees preference when vacancies occur in the future. Both the employers and employees agree that it is necessary to establish obligatory arbitration for the settlement of disputes in which public service is involved.

RANEY TO RETIRE.

New Commander of the Patriarchs Militant Will Be Gen. Stocker of Miamisburg, Ohio.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

INDIANAPOLIS, Sept. 23.—Though the term for which Gen. M. A. Raney of Marengo, Iowa, was elected as commander of the Patriarchs Militant does not expire until January 1, 1913, he is to be succeeded within the next ten days by Gen. A. R. Stocker of Miamisburg, Ohio, according to the announcement today of Grand Sire John B. Cockrum of the sovereign grand lodge of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Cockrum declined to make a public statement of his reasons for superseding Gen. Raney. Over the opposition of Gen. Raney's friends and the military council of the Patriarchs Militant, the sovereign lodge empowered the grand sire to appoint immediately a commander of the Patriarchs Militant, hitherto elected by the military branch. Mr. Cockrum appointed Gen. Stocker, who is said to have championed the reform in the military assembly.

Who Holds the Tiger?

CUT AND DRIED HUNT TO PLACE BEFORE KING.

Maharajah of Nepal, Whose Other Name Is Shumeher Jung Bahadur, Will Provide Tigers for George of England to Pot-Shoot—All the Royal Visitor Has to Do Is Press the Button and Count His Game.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

POONA (British India,) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Already the announcement is made that the Maharajah of Nepal is to use 500 elephants for the King of England's tiger hunt in His Highnesse's domains next December. While King George is in Nepal, Queen Mary will be sight-seeing in Rajpootna.

In preparation for the King's visit a tract of jungle, perhaps fifteen miles long and half as broad, will be selected, and all the beasts in the much wider area will be slowly and patiently driven into it by men mounted on elephants, making just noise enough to induce the game to move on without alarm. By this means, in the course of a weeks' time, twenty or thirty tigers, with other beasts in proportion, will be gathered into the selected area, which will then be surrounded by a ring of watchmen, with the addition of fires by night. The space being so large and well supplied with the natural prey of tigers, the beasts will not seek to escape, nor even to approach the circling watchmen's huts and fires. This state of things will be kept up until the time for the great hunt arrives.

SUPERB CAMPS.

Meanwhile two superb residential camps, seven miles apart, are to be constructed, and accustomed as King George is to European grandeur, he will be surprised and pleased at the eastern variety of similar magnificence.

The object in having two camps is that his majesty may hunt in half of the inclosed area from one, and then pass to the other half from the second. A separate camp will be occupied by the Maharajah.

The shooting will be done from the backs of elephants. The shikarees, or native professional hunters, with an army of "beaters," having marked down two or three tigers in a dense patch of jungle, say one mile square, the sportsmen on their elephants, with rifles loaded and cocked, will proceed to move through the patch in a line.

Sometimes a tiger rushes out into the open and exposes itself to a shot. But if it persistently keeps in cover, allowing the elephants to pass quite near without showing itself, the army of beaters get the signal to raise a clamor, which they do instantly, "for all they are worth." Thus they drive the tigers out into the open.

THEN THE SMALL FRY.

The chief game having been disposed of, a day or more is to be given to the minor animals, which are easily found and easily killed.

Nepal, where all this is to take place, is an independent State with which the British Indian government has nothing to do, except exchange courtesies.

The country is al mountainous and includes Mount Everest, the loftiest peak in the world.

The Maharajah, or ruling chief of Nepal, is His Highness, Shumeher Jung Bahadur, which means "the sword, valiant in war."

ANOTHER UNION PRINTER IN BAD.

Will Be Prosecuted for Use of Hired Sluggers.

Chicago Detective Unearths More Evidence.

Eight Ruffians Said to Be Ready to Confess.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ira L. Beck, the detective who uncovered the alleged plot in which union sluggers were offered $50 for every non-union typesetter killed or sent to the hospital in the labor wars, said today that George R. ("Duffy") O'Brien, former president of the Typographical Union, would be prosecuted following the disposition of the charge of murder made against William J. Boener and Samuel Olson. The detective charged that O'Brien paid $50 to "Chicago Jack" Daly after Rush V. Denon had been slugged and killed.

HAS CONFESSIONS.

"I have confessions from Daly, who was foreman of the slugging crew, and eight others who worked under him," said the detective.

"So far, I have allowed only those of Daly, John Garrity and Samuel Cassidy to be introduced in court.

"After we finish prosecuting Boener and Olson we will take up the case of O'Brien. Another charge of some kind will be brought against him.

"Daly confessed that O'Brien paid him the money and he in turn gave Cassidy, who slugged Denon, $10; Garrity, who was near by, $5, and 'Mumie' Wilson and John White, other sluggers on the job, $10 each.

WANTED MORE MONEY.

"Daly was told, according to his confession, that he was to be paid $50 for each man put into the hospital or 'laid up' for a time, and $400 for each non-union shop closed. He was hired in a saloon by Boener and Olson. The first slugger he hired was John Barrett.

"Cassidy and Garrity were employed later. Meantime Barrett became dissatisfied and quit, after inviting Boener to fight because he did not get money enough from him.

"After killing Denon the sluggers fled. Cassidy went home and took his wife to a show. The others came up town to get their money. Cassidy and Garrity fled next day to Milwaukee. Later Daly called them on the telephone, and told them to come home, as it looked bad for them to run away."

MURDERER'S IDENTITY OUT.

Man Sentenced to Be Hanged, But Commuted, Claims Family Said to Be Living in California.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

WILKESBARRE (Pa.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] After concealing it for the last two years, George L. Marion, the wife-murderer in jail here, who is a theatrical man from New York, today revealed his real name and told of his family.

Secure in the knowledge that instead of being hanged next week the State Board of Pardons has commuted his sentence to life imprisonment, he determined to let his family know what had become of him. If he had to be hanged, he had decided never to let them know.

He said today that his real name is George L. Sullivan, and that his family was once prominent in Savannah, Ga. His first wife died many years ago, but his mother, and his two sons, both more than 20 years old, now reside in California, and have never known that he was convicted of murder.

Brooklyn Plumber's Son Swears He Will Marry Mrs. Suydam After Millionaire Divorces Her.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Papers in a suit for absolute divorce, naming Mrs. Louise Lawrence White Suydam as defendant and Walter Lispenard Suydam, Jr., a millionaire, as plaintiff, were prepared and sworn in Patchogue, L. I., today. They were prepared in the office of Joseph T. Losee, counsel for young Suydam. They named statutory grounds.

Pending the arrival of the divorce papers, Mrs. Suydam clings to her flat and declares she will remain there all winter. Fred Noble, the son of Plumber Noble of Brooklyn, is still a frequent calls. He persists that his love for the runaway wife is of the undying kind and that he will surely marry her when the courts dissolve her marriage bonds.

Chicago Thief, Killed By Doctor, Had Planned to Hold Latter for Ransom to Pay Landlady.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—A plot to lure Dr. William H. Folker to an unoccupied house, tie him with ropes fastened to staples driven in the floor and hold him prisoner in a small clothes closet for the payment of a large ransom by the wealthy parents of the physician, is now believed by the police to cover the killing yesterday of Emil Dignos.

Dignos was shot and killed by Dr. Folker in the vacant house, following a struggle. The physician says he was lured to the premises by Dignos on the pretense that Dignos's uncle needed medical attention. Dr. Folker declares Dignos pointed a revolver at him and compelled him to give up his watch and some money and following a struggle, he (Folker) obtained possession of the weapon and shot his assailant.

The theory that Dr. Folker's assailant had planned to hold him for ransom was advanced after detectives had searched the house where the killing occurred and discovered an improvised bed of excelsior surrounded by staples driven in the floor and threaded with a stout rope in a small closet under a stairway. In a corner of the closet was an ax and a small roll of black cloth.

Dignos had been identified as the man who rented the unoccupied house several days ago. The police have discovered that Dignos was without

EIGHT BROKERS UNDER ARREST.

Postal Inspectors Make Raid in the Metropolis.

Former Treasurer of the Nation in a Cell.

Minister Also Locked Up on Fraud Charge.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Descending upon the brokerage offices of Jared Flagg, on West Fourteenth street, today, United States postal inspectors arrested eight men, including Flagg, D. N. Morgan of Bridgeport Conn., once Treasurer of the Unite States, and F. Tennyson Neely, a broker, and formerly a publisher, all on a charge of attempting to defraud by use of the mails.

Seven fashionably dressed women, who were in the offices where the raid was made, were taken along with the prisoners.

The postal inspectors say Flagg has been doing a tremendous business by guaranteeing to his clients profits of one per cent. a week on their investments.

The specific complaint upon which the arrests were made was that an attempt had been made to defraud Miss Bertha Bentley, of Corry, Pa. Others arrested were E. L. Schiller, manager of Flagg's offices; Joshua Browne, alleged to be a solicitor for clients; H. P. Jackson and the Rev. J. T. Schock, said to be a minister of the Dutch Reformed Church. The raid was conducted by Postal Inspectors Reddy and Mahew, acting under the direction of Inspector W. W. Dixon.

SENT TO THE TOMBS IN LIEU OF BAIL.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Jared Flagg and seven other men were arrested on the charge of fraudulently using the mails in a series of endless-chain schemes to defraud investors. The prisoners were arraigned, and pleaded not guilty. Bail was fixed for Flagg at $25,000. Asst. Dist.-Atty. Smith asked for high bail because, he said, he understood that Flagg had $1,000,000. Various amounts were fixed for the others. All will be given a hearing next Wednesday.

Postoffice Inspector Elmer L. Kincaid, who made the complaint, said thousands of customers of the Flagg enterprise had invested about $1,500,000 in the scheme. Flagg, it is charged, had claimed that he would invest their money in gilt-edged securities which would pay them high dividends.

Inspectors reported that former United States Treasurer Morgan was interested in the enterprise to the extent of $200,000. The scheme, according to the authorities, has been in operation for more than eighteen months.

At a late hour no bail had been secured for any of the prisoners and they were locked up in the Tombs prison.

URTS THREE DAYS, MARRIES.

NKER'S SON WEDS MAID WITH FATHER'S CONSENT.

Ceremony Is Culmination of Light- ning Courtship, and After Brief Honeymoon Couple, With Friend, Will Leave on Vaudeville Tour. Mother Has Objections.

As the result of a three-day court- ip, Mark McDonald Jones, 21 years d, son of Mark G. Jones, president the Merchants' Bank and Trust ompany, and Edna May Alchen, ged 17 years, a vivacious little oubrette on the Bert Levy circuit, ere married last evening.

The wedding took place at St. aul's Pro-Cathedral, the ceremony eing performed by Rev. Dr. William McCormick, rector of the church. he fact that the marriage was to ke place was kept secret from all f the members of Jones's family, with he exception of his father, until hortly before the ceremony. An our before the time of the wedding ones stated that his mother had just earned that it was to take place and dded that she thought him too oung to enter upon married life. he was not present and a telephone nquiry at the Jones residence elicited he reply that she was out of the city nd did not know that her son was o be married. Mrs. Jones was the nly one of the immediate relatives f either of the couple who was not resent.

Young Jones received his father's approval. When questioned yester- ay afternoon, he said:

"Yes, I am in favor of the match. do not know the girl very well, but I have met her. Mark has been working in the bank for four years and has held several positions. Just now he is on a vacation, but will re- turn to the bank after his honeymoon. He was the manager of the Union Square Branch for some time and now holds the position of exchange teller.

"He has been on the stage, but that is only during his vacations. He is something of an athlete and likes that kind of a vocation better than anything else. The girl is quite a singer and I think she is a nice, sweet girl. They will make a fine couple.

"Mrs. Jones knows about the mar- riage, but I am not certain that she will be present."

Jones is a prominent member of the Los Angeles Athletic Club. Just before the ceremony last evening he said:

"I have been on the road with my partner, Orville Stamm, where we have been doing a vaudeville hand- balancing stunt. It was while on the stage at a theater in Long Beach that I met Edna. We were engaged just three days later, but didn't decide when we would be married until last night.

"Father says it's all right with him, but mother thinks I am too young. We got the license this morning. Mrs. Alchen went along because Edna is t yet of age.

"We are going North and will leave for Australia shortly, on a tour. We will do athletic feats in vaude- ville. The first part of the 'stunt' will be muscular posing, after which Stamm and myself will do some hand- balancing."

When asked if he would go back to the bank after his honeymoon, ones smiled and said:

"Father says I am going back."

elder brother did not know of the affair until he happened to meet him as he was attempting to break away from a number of his friends at the Athletic Club, so as to be on time for the ceremony. It was only when he asked one of those on the outside of the crowd what the meaning of his brother's "festive garb" was, that he learned.

After the ceremony the couple left in a machine for Ocean Park, where they will remain a few days before leaving for the North.

WITH A NOTE OF OPTIMISM.

New Pastor of Covina Christian Church Is a Kentuckian and Emits Sunshine Glints.

COVINA, Sept. 23.—A kindly-faced man with a note of optimism in his address was introduced last night to a crowded audience at the Covina Christian Church as the new pastor. Rev. D. F. Stafford, who comes here from Watsonville. The pastor is originally from Louisville, Ky., and has the reputation of building several churches for the church of his faith.

On the platform with the new pastor, to give him a cordial reception, were the evangelical ministers of the city, Rev. Bede A. Johnson, Rev. W. W. Catherwood, Dr. W. A. Hunter and Rev. W. S. Utter of Glendale. Each pastor participated in the exercises. A soprano solo was rendered by Miss Nellie Lawson of Glendora; violin solo, Grant Chapman; reading, Mrs. Joe Heath; recitation, Miss Violet Adams. The meeting was presided over by Otto Brouse. Rev. Mr. Stafford has taken a house on Center street, and his daughter, Miss Leanta Stafford, has entered the High School.

NO SUNDAY FUNERALS.

A ruling made this week at the annual meeting of the Oakdale Cemetery Association is to the effect that no more Sunday funerals will be allowed. The officials explain that it works a hardship on funeral directors, cemetery employees, stablemen and especially on ministers, who find this added task coming on their busiest day. It is also in line with the ruling laid down by a majority of the burial associations of the State.

ANTIS HAVE BIG DAY WITH VOTERS

MEN VOLUNTEER INFORMATION ABOUT SUFFRAGE.

One Says that Since Campaign Was Launched His Wife Has Left Him. Another, Just Returned from Tour of World, Tells of Conditions in Australia.

Anti-suffrage broke out at a dozen new points yesterday and last night. On the east side of Spring street, between Third and Fourth streets, a blazing electric sign alternately advised the public, "Women do not want votes" and "Do not vote for suffrage." These legends were signed by the Southern California Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage.

It was announced at the association's headquarters yesterday that an anti polled the vote at two precincts where annexation was voted upon Friday, and the results were gratifying from an anti standpoint. One precinct gave four votes for suffrage and thirty-four against it. Another gave seven for and eighteen against.

Two of the men who called at the headquarters of the women anti's yesterday gave remarkable reasons for their opposition. One said that since the suffrage campaign was launched, his daughter has persuaded his wife that he is a tyrant and that she is entitled to her freedom. He said that his wife has left him, although they lived together happily for thirty years, and that their daughter now has his wife in hiding.

The other caller was R. M. McLean, a retired business man, who has just returned from a tour of the world. He said that he saw enough of woman suffrage in Australia to shock any sane man into an upright position on the question of votes for women. By their blue laws, women are forcing capital out of Australia and more than half of the barkeepers in that country are bar maids, he said. The coarser element of women, he says, jeer the better type as they go to the polls to keep their own kind in office and in government control. After an experience like that, he said that it was tremendously gratifying upon his return to Los Angeles to find that his six sisters were free from the suffrage craze. Since arriving, McLean has had a letter from a business man in the State of Washington stating that the conservative element of the business world there is deeply disturbed by the emotional trend which the women are giving the politics of the State, and that capital is timid about making investments that depend upon a reliable public attitude

A third visitor at the woman headquarters yesterday is a Colorado official. He said that feminine politics has fairly paralyzed the business of Denver.

Mrs. M. E. Harrison yesterday declared that the Wednesday Morning Club of the East Side has been misrepresented as standing for suffrage, when the truth is that only seven or eight members out of a total of 160 are in favor of it.

At the anti-suffrage mass meeting at Wilcox Hall in Hollywood last night, Mrs. George A. Caswell, Mrs. Dora Oliphant Coe, Emory D. Martindale and others spoke and the Colegrove Brass Band furnished music.

Mrs. Caswell answered the argument of suffragists that if they carry the election, the women who do not want to vote can stay at home on future election days, by saying that the women who do not want to vote will not care to sit still while the voting woman makes a muddle of government. Mrs. Coe took up her brilliant platform of refutation, answering the chief arguments of the suffragists with counter truths.

Martindale took the suffragists at their word in alleging that they want a Democratic government, saying that nothing could be more undemocratic than to force the ballot upon the thousands of California women who do not want it. Martindale is a prominent prohibitionist.

COUNTY LAW IS INVOKED.

Maintaining a Slaughterhouse in an Incorporated Town Is Illegal and Lancaster Enforces Law.

LANCASTER, Sept. 23.—An interesting case was tried this last week before Judge Reeves of Los Angeles, when F. H. Robinson of Lancaster was arraigned on the charge of operating a slaughterhouse contrary to ordinance. Under this ordinance no slaughterhouse is allowed within the limits of an unincorporated town or village, and the Robinson place has been run in the very center of this community for some time past.

Four charges were filed against Robinson, but as he elected to plead guilty to the first charge, the others were dismissed, and he was fined $50. The town of Lancaster is much indebted to the operation of this late ordinance for the abatement of what had become a public annoyance.

Society Folk Victims.

JACK THE SLASHER CUTS DRESSES ON BROADWAY.

Three Women Have Costly Garments Ruined and Call on Police—Every Available Plain-clothesman Is Sent to Comb Streets—Skillful Use of Razor Leaves Victims in Ignorance Until Informed.

CONSTERNATION spread among fashionable society people last night when it became known that the infamous and dreaded "Jack the Slasher" at last had arrived in Los Angeles and had already commenced his work of destroying the handsome creations of the dresmakers' art.

Confirmation of the report was received at police headquarters shortly after 8 o'clock, when Mrs. A. J. Coe of No. 509 California street called at the detective department and displayed a ruined toilet to the amazed officers. The dress, which was originally a costly one, was slashed across the back, cutting through the folds of the garment a distance of nearly two feet.

Mrs. Coe said that she was walking leisurely along Broadway and when in front of Hale's dry goods store she felt a slight tug at her skirt, but thought nothing more of the incident until her attention was called to the gaping cut, which apparently had been made by a keen-edged razor. The victim was unable to recall any suspicious-looking person near her at the time, nor was she positive that the author was a man.

While the machinery of the department was being set in motion for the purpose of capturing the miscreant, the door was opened and Mrs. E. A. Sullivan of No. 339 West Fifty-eighth street was ushered in to tell a similar story of her encounter with the supposed notorious slasher. Her dress also had been cut in nearly the same position and had been utterly ruined.

Mrs. Sullivan not only was indignant at the loss of her beautiful garment, but also was much mortified over the necessity of postponing an evening engagement.

Scarcely had the last victim reached the street when Mrs. Rose Bard of No. 1637 West Adams street called on the police to solve the mystery surrounding a similar attack made upon her while walking on Broadway.

As in the previous cases the lower garment had been cut across the back by some sharp instrument at an instant when the owner's attention was centered on a newly decorated show window. She was not aware of the act until a woman pointed out the damage that had been wrought.

Within a half hour all of the down-town streets were patrolled by detectives and plainclothes men on the lookout for the latest freak criminal and every artifice known to the police is being employed to effect a capture.

There were rumors of other attacks made upon women who disliked to visit police headquarters to make a complaint.

The records of the department show that "Jack the Slasher" has never visited this city although in the East a long list of victims desire his capture. From the similarity of the method of operation the officers believe that the criminal is a pervert with a nature similar to that of the pen-knife wielder who took fiendish delight in cutting unprotected young women on the streets of St. Louis a few years ago.

Shaken Up.

AUTO FULL OF WOMEN IN REAR-END COLLISION.

FRANK J. MITCHELL, a capitalist of 2936 Brighton avenue, drove his automobile into the rear of the machine occupied by Ellis Zemansky, a pawnbroker of No. 148 S. Main street, and five women, at Washington and Oak streets, last night, about 11 o'clock, andd all were more or less injured but none seriously.

Mitchell is being held by the police for investigation of a charge of driving an automobile while intoxicated. He was treated at the Receiving Hospital, where it was found his head, face through the glass front of his machine.

Zemansky was taken to the California Hospital, where his injuries were shown to be severe bruises only. Zemansky's wife and daughter, were taken home to No. 1527 Wilton place. The other women were: Misses Morris, Murphy, and Floato. None of them were more than severely shaken up.

Zemansky slowed his machine at Oak street and Mitchell, in attempting to slown down, touched the wrong lever and increased the speed of his car, which crashed into the other. Both Fowler Fails After Battle to Scale the Sierras.

Will Try Again Tomorrow With Strong Engine.

United States Mail Carried by Aeroplane in East.

COLFAX (Cal.) Sept. 23.—Aviator Robert G. Fowler, who failed to cross the Sierras today in his ocean-to-ocean flight, announced tonight that he will start at daylight tomorrow morning. He said that he believed the difficulty from winds that prevented him making the crossing today will be obviated if he makes an early start.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

COLFAX, Sept. 23.—A rampart of mountains shouldering up through the mists this morning beat back Aviator Robert G. Fowler, who made an unsuccessful attempt to scale the Sierras, in resuming his transcontinental aeroplane flight, interrupted September 11 by the wrecking of his biplane near here.

Fowler left the ground at 6:43 o'clock, flew twenty-four miles to Blue Canyon and, after a half-hour's battle with the mountain winds, returned to Colfax, alighting at 8:55. He said his engine was not strong enough to carry him over the summit and that he would put in a stronger engine and start again Monday.

When Fowler got into the sky the winds slapped his air craft about like waves toying with a channel boat. The mountain air from Colfax to Summit is cross-hatched with uncharted, outlaw gusts and they nosed the invader about the sky until his biplane bucked like a cayuse. Climbing higher he found stiller currents, but the air was thin and the planes would not "bite." It was this problem of rarified air that made him decide to return and substitute a stronger engine.

Fowler covered about seventy-five miles in his flight, going and returning. Encountering variable winds in the lower altitudes at the start he rose to a height of 2500 feet.

Keeping that level he passed over Caporn, Gold Run, Dutch Flat, Towle and Midas. At Blue Canyon he faced the most difficult ascent of his trip, which would have taken him, could he have continued, on a steady climb to Summit, twenty-five miles ahead, to the top of the range, 7008 feet above the sea. He made several long sweeps climbing a little into the air, but was unable to gain the height necessary to lift him across the wall of the mountains.

Cliffs and deep canyons lay ahead, and descent would almost certainly mean death or failure. He swept back over Midas and a moment later was homeward bound.

When Fowler alighted, almost at the place from which he started, a pioneer who came across the Sierras in the gold rush days watched Fowler's departure and return.

"Young man," he said, "I had to fight for my life to get over those mountains on foot, and I don't think you're going to ride over on a rod of sidewalk with a laundry wagon for a tail.

"Wait till I get a new engine and I'll show you," said Fowler. He rose to a height of 4000 feet during his flight.

MAIL BY AEROPLANE.

FIRST DELIVERY IN EAST.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—The first United States mail ever transported by aeroplane was carried today from the aviation field on Nassau boulevard, Long Island, to Garden City, a distance of five miles, by Earl L. Ovington in a Bleriot machine. His flight was the leading feature of the international meet's opening day.

Ovington took only one bag of mail, held it between his knees and when he was over Garden City he dropped it on the signal of a man who waved a flag, as prearranged. This bag contained about seventy-five pounds of letters and post cards.

The flying contests were mediocre, the most interesting being the search by aviators for a detachment of the Eighteenth United States infantry, which had been secreted in a wood three miles southeast of the field. Six of the aviators, including Tom Sopwith and Grahame-White of England, Eugene Ely, J. A. D. McCurdy and Beatty, could not find the soldiers.

Miss Matilda Moisant was the only woman to make a flight in the twenty-four-mile breeze which prevailed.

Dr. Henry Walden, who already has had several falls, had a bad spill when he tried to cut under Lee Hammond's machine in the finish of the cross-country flight. Walden ventured too close to the turf, the tail of his monoplane struck and it turned a somersault. Walden leaped and although he sustained a severe shock, he saved himself from serious injury.

With thirty-five aviators, among them four women, tuning up their aeroplanes and making short test flights, all was in readiness for the international meet, at 3 o'clock this afternoon, with a passenger-carrying race between monoplanes and to continue for nine days on a field on the Nassau boulevard, Garden City. Approximately $50,000 in prizes are to be distributed.

The management announced that the Wright brothers, who claim a controlling patent on airships, had licensed the meet at the last moment and would send aviators to take part in the contest. This reassured many of the aviators, who feared suits.

The first aerial postal service to be duly authorized was inaugurated this afternoon from the field. A regular branch postoffice has been established and is on the field, with a number of postal clerks; and the department has designed a new postmark stamp which will be placed on each letter. This reads that it is a "special aerial service" from Aerial Station No. 1, Garden City, L. I.

Capt. Paul W. Beck proposes to make two flights daily, carrying about 20,000 letters each day. He will take them from the field to some postoffice on Long Island or to Governor's Island from where the aerial mail will be transferred to the regular postal routes and forwarded. Postmaster-General Hitchcock has announced that he would witness this aerial delivery on Monday.

RODGERS IN TROUBLE.

COVERS SIXTY MILES.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

HORNELL (N. Y.) Sept. 23.—Forced to descend because of the failure of the spark plug of his biplane to work, C. P. Rodgers, the coast-to-coast aviator, landed three miles out of here today. When his machine touched the earth the rough surface caused it to tilt to one side, shattering the left plane and snapping one of the supports.

Rodgers was thrown from his seat, but was unhurt. The damage is not serious, and will be repaired in time for the aviator to resume his flight tomorrow at 9:30 a. m.

In addition to the engine trouble Rodgers faced a stiff breeze, and decided to give up for the day after being in the air an hour and seventeen minutes, in which time he covered sixty miles.

Rodgers left Elmira, N. Y., at 10:30 a.m. Rough ground prevented a good start, and he came down to escape telegraph wires. In landing some guy wires were pulled out and a hole torn in the elevator. Repairs required an hour.

that effect, Burbank was not named for "wizard" Luther Burbank, but in honor of Dr. David Burbank, who, in 1870, bought 17,000 acres in the San Fernando valley from a Spaniard who held it under an original Spanish grant. In 1887 the town was organized and named. Later came the steam railroad, then a macadamized road to Los Angeles, and now the linking of the village with Los Angeles by a through trolley line.

Recently Burbank was made a city of the sixth class. It has two hotels, a bank, two general merchandise stores, a drug store, two lumber, lime and cement dealers, four grocery stores, two blacksmiths, two garages, four real estate offices, and other business houses, to say nothing of a $34,000 high school, and many other accessories of a town in the center of a wonderfully rich and productive area.

The Burbank line's history dates back two years when H. E. Huntington, then at the head of the Pacific Electric Company, offered to build an extension to the Glendale line which would reach Burbank. He specified, however, in making this offer, that a right of way be given the Pacific Electric and a sufficient bonus raised to tide over until the road began to pay.

For some little time, while similar projects were being tried out, the matter lay dormant, yet those interested in the welfare of Burbank never gave up working, with the result that shortly after the Southern Pacific succeeded Huntington in control of the Pacific Electric, the money, amounting to $40,000 in round numbers, was raised and work started.

On April 16, 1910, the first grading camp was established in the Verdugo Wash. From then on the work progressed rapidly until September 6, when the first regular car arrived in Burbank over the Pacific Electric. At that time the citizens of Glendale held a mass meeting for the purpose of arranging a suitable celebration of the advent of the trolley, so successfully carried out yesterday.

EXPLOSIVES DISCOVERED.

Powerful Bombs Found on Beach by Boy.

Sufficient to Destroy Water-Front Buildings.

Police Unable to Throw Light on Situation.

VENICE, Sept. 23.—A mystery which baffles City Marshal Nettleton and the members of the police force developed late this afternoon with the finding on the beach of a quantity of high explosive sufficient in destructive power to wreck all adjacent structures.

The discovery was made late this afternoon by a small boy who was roaming on the beach, playing on the sand and keeping his eyes open for the sight of strange objects. His gaze fel upon a peculiar bundle, which he picked up and began to investigate. It was wrapped in oiled paper and after being unwrapped revealed to his astonishment something which looked to him verily like the dynamite bombs of which he had read and heard so much.

The mysterious package was cautiously conveyed to the police station, where an investigation followed. The bomb was found to consist of four shells, and in each of these was a stick of dynamite four inches in length. Surrounding the shells was a quantity of what has been determined as being nitroglycerin, while in the bottom of each shell was black powder. The entire conception was so arranged with a fuse as to be discharged at one time, a main fuse extending for a distance of about four inches from the bomb's outer covering.

The police officers have made a thorough investigation of the vicinity in which the bomb was found, but no others were discovered. They found nothing going to show by whom the bomb had been planted or when, although their conclusions are that it was laid with a design to later attach the clock work or such connection with the fuse as would result in the discharge of the explosive.

The matter has been passed up to the District Attorney for investigation, since recent experiences of that office have had a tendency to develop experts along this line.

Why the bomb should have been placed there is the question that the police have been unable to answer to their own satisfaction. The recreation place has no enemies so far as is known. The explosion of the bomb must have resulted in considerable loss of innocent life, as there are at all times many people within the zone which would have been disturbed. For this reason the work is looked upon as

HOGAN'S BID FOR PATSY SPURNED.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SACRAMENTO (Cal.) Sept. 23. — [Exclusive Dispatch.] Charley Graham today turned down an offer from Happy Hogan for the purchase of Patsy O'Rourke, the fighting leader of the Senators. Hogan offered to give the Sacramento club one of his best infielders and a cash consideration for O'Rourke, but Graham replied he did not want to let Patsy go under any condition.

HAP PROVES THAT HE IS A VERY GOOD DOG.

You never knew Hap Hogan was a retriever, did you?. Well, he is, and he has the best spaniel beaten forty miles for bringing things out of the water. And ice water, too, that not one dog in a thousand would go into.

Last year he was down at Laguna with Roy Brashear and a lot of other ball players. Just why they go to Laguna is hard to guess, unless they want to get away from everybody and figure on the amount of swearing they did during the past season. Anyway, Hogan was there with the bunch and went out hunting one day with Brashear.

There is a mud puddle down there they call a lake and one morning Hogan and Brashear were out there hunting mud hens for breakfast, for they wanted some kind of a nice stew and mud hens are good for this if you don't know the difference between them and ducks.

Well, they got to kidding and Hogan thought that Brashear was such a bum shooter that he agreed to retrieve anything that Brashear could shoot. Accordingly, Brash sneaked out through the mud and banged away at a bird sitting on the muddy water. It was a terrifically cold morning in the winter, and so cold, in fact, that there was a thin coating of ice on the muddy water.

Naturally, the water was very cold and in order to get that bird Hogan had to swim out through the mud, breaking the ice as he went. Some persons who know the story think he has never been the same since, but he had the satisfaction of getting the bird. A few who think they know called it a wild swan. Others say it was a mud hen, but Hogan retrieved it and he and Brashear ate it.

HAP GIVES THE DOPE UNDER PRESSURE.

"A lot of people in this town don't know that Hap Hogan was a nurse once, but he was, and a good one, too," said an old ball manager yesterday. "I'll never forget the time he was up in Fresno four or five years ago.

"During the winter some of us got him a job as night nurse in the County Hospital and about his first case was to attend to a man who had the delirium tremens. Hap was supposed to sit up with this guy all night and administer him medicine.

"The doctor gave the fellow sleeping powder to quiet his nerves and then left instructions for Hap to give him one powder every hour. Well, the hour passed, and the poor man was in a deep sleep and enjoying himself apparently.

"When the hour was up Hap goes over to the bed and after shaking the fellow for about five minutes managed to get him half awake.

" 'What the hell you doin',' asks the sleeper, opening his eyes half way.

" 'Well, I want to give you this powder,' replied Hap.

" 'I don't want any powder,' says the tired man, already under the influence.

" 'Well, I don't care whether you want it or not,' says Hap, 'but you've got to take it even if you don't.' "

"And he made that poor helpless fellow take it."

WHAT HOGAN WANTED TO DO TO JIMMY TOMAN.

One day up in Sacramento several years ago when Jimmy Toman was umpiring in the Coast League, he had had a bad day according to the ball players. That evening he was standing in front of the Doyle place when Hogan drove down the street with a fine double team.

Hap stopped his team in front of the store and not seeing Toman, asked if he was there. This was a big bluff but Toman spoke up and called it.

"Say, Hap, what do you want? Goin' to take me out ridin'? Why, you ought to know that umpires are not supposed to associate with the players because some crazy fans might think they are in cahoots."

"No, I don't want to take you out ridin' " yelled back Hogan. "You're so rotten I just want to take you down and dump you in the river."

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Chicago was placed further away from the pennant today when Boston defeated the locals 14 to 6. The game was a batting bee, punctuated with weird fielding by both teams.

The visitors started by driving McIntyre off the mound, and continuing their slugging tactics until the locals had used four pitchers. Tyler pitched fine ball, with the exception of one inning, when he was touched for four hits, behind two errors and a pass for a total of five runs.

Miller starred with the bat and also in the fielding, his one-hand catch of Schulte's long fly which looked like a home run being the feature. There will be two games tomorrow. Score:

PAT HIGGINS' U.S.C. TEAM TRIMMED HOLLYWOOD HIGH

BY OWEN R. BIRD.

PAT HIGGINS'S U. S. C Rugby cohorts did a little better yesterday afternoon on Bovard field when the Hollywood High School was trimmed by the score of 18 to 0. The game was far from perfect, as both the college and high school players were ragged at times and the game lagged.

During the first half no score was made, owing to the fact that Higgins was trying out his freshmen. The "Pea Greens" had the best of the argument, keeping the ball in Hollywood's territory most of the time, but slips came several times just when it would have meant a score.

In the second half a few of the Law school "vets" and other 'varsity men were run in, changing the aspect of the contest at once. The old stagers began to get in their heavy work and the Hollywood defense weakened perceptibly, and the score began to roll up for the Cards.

The work of the U. S. C. squad in general was much better yesterday than in the game Friday with Polytechnic. The backs got their passes and kicks off with more accuracy, while the work in the front rank had a more definite purpose.

The Hollywood team played a plucky game against the heavy college men, showing a great deal of speed with the ball, though they were pretty badly bunged up after the game. During the first ten minutes of play Briggs was carried off the field badly hurt while several others were bruised but stayed with the game.

Higgins had four of his best men put on the hospital corps yesterday in the persons of Caster, Davis, Wright and Berryman. However none of these hurts are serious and the coach expects to see his stars in their battle togs by the middle of the week.

The work of Caster at full back brought the stand to its feet on several occasions. This tow-headed young man has great promise and without a doubt will make the team this fall.

"Tod" Wright, the prep football star, made good yesterday until his bad knee took him out of the fray. Don Wallace, another prep star, was much in the limelight. His kicking and passing was far better than in the game with Poly and Higgins thinks he will soon be one of the best bets on the squad, though there are a lot of rough edges to be smoothed down before this stage is reached.

Schwartz surprised all when, on being shifted to the back field, he developed a great burst of speed. Up to the present time, he has been working among the forwards but with the showing made yesterday, should be kept in the back field from now on.

In the second half the first score came before this period was five minutes old. The Cards rushed the ball to the twenty-yard line, then Schwartz broke loose after a scrum and by a brilliant run, and a neat fake pass, dodged the whole Hollywood line, and ran over for a try, which "Truck" Manning converted.

Hollywood kicked off and in a few minutes the Cards were again knocking at the goal door. Once more it was Schwartz. He broke out after a short dribble and smashed his way over the line and Manning once more made the extra two points, bringing the score 10 to 0.

The third try was scored by Boyer, who nailed the ball after a dribble over the line. It was a hard goal, but Manning kicked true. Score, U.S.C., 15; Hollywood, 0.

The last score came near the end of the second half, and was made in the far corner of the field by Manning; this was a very difficult goal and good old "Truck" did not make the boat, so the score stood, U.S.C., 18; Hollywood, 0.

The teams lined up as follows:

Hollywood.		'U.S.C.
Fleischer		Clark
Coulter		Henderson, Cummings
Mahoney		Hollingsworth
Evans	Forwards	Adamson
Pogson		Banta

THREE HURT AT STANFORD.

CARDINAL RUGBY 'VARSITY IS WINNER.

Two Los Angeles Lads Carried from Field in Clash With Olympic Club—Score 19 to 0, but 'Varsity Fails to Show Same Class as a Week Ago.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

STANFORD UNIVERSITY, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Stanford, 19; Olympic Club, 0.

The Cardinal Rugby 'varsity defeated the winged O aggregation in a hard fought game today, in which three players suffered injuries that will keep them off the field for several days.

Louis Cass, '13, of Los Angeles, half-back on the Cardinal team, was kicked in the back and had to be carried from the field. Courtney Decius, '13, of Los Angeles, full back for the Olympic club, sustained a twisted arm while saving at the goal line. Risling, crack freshman five-eighths, who was put on the 'varsity for the first time today, got a bad Charley horse in a collision while making a catch and had to quit.

The 'varsity did not put up as good a game as it did a week ago, however, the Cardinals were up against an aggregation led by J. O. Miller, that was composed almost entirely of former 'varsity men of Stanford and California.

Ted Geissler, '14, of Los Angeles, put up a whirlwind game throughout. Brown, '11, center three-quarters, scored four points by drop kicking a goal from the twenty-five-yard line after the ball had been heeled out of the scrum.

The freshmen defeated Mission High, 42 to 6.

L. A. HIGH TEAM BEAT MANUAL ARTS.

In a closely contested game yesterday morning, the L. A. High boys managed to win from Manual Arts by three tries to one. As this was the first contest for either team, the playing was ragged throughout. Both teams made frequent changes in their line-up, the blue and white coach using thirty-one men.

The scoring was all done in the first half when the hill-top backs took the ball across twice in the early part of the contest and just before the whistle blew for the end of the half Boesche fell on the ball back of the Manual Arts goal for the third try. Captain Nolan Allen made the score for his side by picking up a fumbled kick and running ten yards for a try.

As the goal posts were not yet in position, no goals could be tried, so the score can be 9 to 3, or 15 to 5, as you please.

NET FINE BAG OF DEER, BEAR AND QUAIL.

GLENDALE, Sept. 23.—Seven deer, two black bear, the limit of mountain quail and an abundance of trout were the fruits of a six weeks' hunting expedition just terminated by a party of residents of this place, consisting of Capt. and Mrs. J. A. Neel, Master J. A. Neel, Jr., J. W. Mehaffety and Miss Alice Mangdon. The party's camp was at the head of Salt Creek, which is about twenty miles northeast of Antler, in Shasta county.

BOB BRAIN HUNTING.

Under-Sheriff Bob Brain, his brother, Webb Brain and D. C. Van Court of the L. A. Athletic Club left this morning on a hunting and fishing trip in the San Bernardino Mountains. The party will be out for a week and are expecting some fine sport with the doves and trout, which are said to be quite plentiful in the region in which they will visit. They will spend tonight at Murrietta Springs where it is said that they will mix quite thoroughly with the mud.

EXCITING HANDBALL.

An exciting handball match was played yesterday at the Los Angeles Athletic Club when Bill Parker defeated Lou Guernsey.

Guernsey has challenged the Southern California handball champion, Gordo Whelan, of the L. A. Athletic Club, for a match which will be held the latter part of this week. There have been two games between the two, each getting one of them. The coming match will play off the tie.

GREAT STRIDES.

The great strides made in battleship building will be realized when it is remembered that the original dreadnought built by England, and which is the unit for the modern fighting ship, had a displacement of only 18,000 tons.

The Moreno will carry twelve 12-inch guns. Her contemporaries in this respect are the Arkansas, built in Camden; the Wyoming, now being constructed by the Cramps in Philadelphia, neither of which are yet in commission; the Austrian Viribus, the German Thuringer, the Japanese Kawachi; the Russian Sevastopol, the Brasil Sao Paulo, the Italian Dante Alighieri, and the French Courbet and Jean Bart. The Bart was launched yesterday.

The next step forward in battleship building so far as armament is concerned is a reduction of two in the number of main guns, at the same time increasing the caliber to 14 inches. The super-dreadnought New York will have ten 14-inch guns and a ship of the same class is under construction in Great Britain. The Moreno under her contract will have to develop 22½ knots. She is expected to develop 40,000 horse power, while the engines in the New York are designed to develop 32,000.

The Moreno and Rivadavia are 595 feet long over all; the Utah and Florida are 521½ feet. The Argentine ships have a breadth of 98 feet, and will have a normal draft of 27 feet. Each battleship will cost about $12,000,000.

AGED WOMAN TRIES SUICIDE.

When Rescued From Lake by Detroit Police, She Says Son Is Wealthy Rancher of Barstow, Cal.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

DETROIT (Mich.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Starving and with no place to lay her head, Mrs. Belle Martin, 70 years old, attempted to commit suicide today by drowning herself in the lake at Clark Park.

Patrolman Thomas Creedon rescued her, and when she was taken before Police Justice Jeffries she said that her son, John Martin, is a wealthy ranch owner at Barstow, Cal. She said she would sooner die by her own hand than have her son know she is without a home of her own and without anything to eat. She says she was despondent and decided to end it all.

She will be cared for at the Wayne County Jail until Tuesday, when it is believed the police will be able to hear from her son.

ENDS INDIGESTION

Heartburn, Gas, Dyspepsia and Sourness Vanish and Your Stomach Will Feel Fine.

If your meals don't fit comfortably, or you feel bloated after eating, and you believe it is the food which fills you; if what little you eat lies like a lump of lead on your stomach; if there is difficulty in breathing after eating, eructations of sour, undigested food and acid, heartburn, brash or a belching of gas, you can make up your mind that you need something to stop food fermentation and cure Indigestion.

To make every bite of food you eat aid in the nourishment and strength of your body, you must rid your Stomach of poisons, excessive acid and stomach gas, which sours your entire meal—interferes with digestion and causes so many sufferers of Dyspepsia, Sick Headache, Biliousness, Constipation, Griping, etc. Your case is no different—you are a stomach sufferer, though you may call it by some other name; your real and only trouble is that which you eat does not digest, but quickly ferments and sours, producing almost any unhealthy condition.

A case of Pape's Diapepsin will cost fifty cents at any Pharmacy here, and will convince any stomach sufferer five minutes after taking a single dose that Fermentation and Sour Stomach is causing the misery of Indigestion.

No matter if you call your trouble Catarrh of the Stomach, Nervousness or Gastritis, or by any other name—always remember that a certain cure is waiting at any drug store the moment you decide to begin its use.

Pape's Diapepsin will regulate any out-of-order Stomach within five minutes, and digest promptly, without any fuss or discomfort, all of any kind of food you eat.

MAGAZINE LOSES COSTLY "SCOOP."

SHADOWING OF FEDERAL JUDGE WITHOUT RESULT.

Special "Muck-Rakers" Hired for Two Years and Hundred Thousand Dollars Spent, but Investigators Fail to "Land" Material—Grosscup's Stand.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] It cost an eastern magazine $100,000 to conduct its two years' "shadowing" of Judge Peter S. Grosscup of the United States Circuit Court, and, it now appears, it didn't "land the story," at that.

These figures were given out by one of the investigators. The magazine made the search thorough. On the special staff were two trained writers, prominent as "muck-rakers." Laurence Richie, former secret service man, investigated only the private life of the judge.

The man who did the investigating at Mattoon, Charleston and in West Virginia, was not Richie, as supposed, but Samuel Hopkins Adams.

One of the investigators says he does not believe there was any sentiment back of the scheme save the desire to develop a big story. He does not think there was any animus toward Judge Grosscup.

As regards recalling his resignation and demanding an inquiry by a commission, the jurist has changed his mind. He now says he will make no move until definite charges are made.

What he will do after that depends on the nature of the allegations.

He was in conference with his attorney and Marshall E. Sampsell, also involved in criticism of the conduct of the Chicago Union Traction receivership. At the end he said he had been advised to say nothing. Sampsell gave the same announcement, adding a denial of all charges.

ALHAMBRA.

ALHAMBRA, Sept. 23.—The residents of Granda Park are anxious to be taken into the corporate limits of Alhambra. They desire the establishment of a boulevard connecting them with Los Angeles, and point to the taxes that they would pay if annexed to Alhambra. The annexation boosters are producing figures to substantiate their claims that annexation will not burden Alhambra, but will be a profitable move for that town.

Annexation—Granada Park to Alhambra:

Misleading statements have been made concerning annexation. The district would gain laws governing incorporated cities, providing all public improvements. The cost is 28 cents per $100, valuation. Alhambra gains this, also 60 cents additional, new road tax. Total, 88 cents per $100. A small fraction of the 88 cents in increased expenses is incurred by Alhambra. Street improvements are assessed to property directly benefited. The law providing for assumption of bonded indebtedness, was passed so Los Angeles could collect pro rata of aqueduct cost and this question only came up after expense of petition for election was incurred, and at the time the Country Club opposed annexation. It is said, this club is against annexation as it expects to serve intoxicating liquor if outside Alhambra. Voters—vote as you think best—defeat annexation, and added revenue and probably have liquor near by. Cary annexation, defeat liquor and encourage general improvements. Respectfully, M. M. Bancroft, property owner in proposed annexation.

Ex-Gov. Brown of Georgia Announces His Candidacy to Fill Hoke Smith's Unexpired Term.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ATLANTA (Ga.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Ex-Gov. Joseph M. Brown, who was defeated for a second term by Gov. Hoke Smith, announced today he will be a candidate to fill the unexpired term of Smith when the latter resigns in a few weeks to take his seat in the United States Senate. Brown declared he announces for Governor from a sense of duty and in response to the people.

The entry of Brown will precipitate a bitter fight, as the Smith adherents will use every effort to compass his defeat. They look on Brown's entry as part of a plan of ex.-Gov. J. M. Terrell and the old machine which Hoke Smith defeated to gain control of the Georgia Democracy and defeat Smith when he goes before the people for re-election as United States Senator.

Prohibition will figure in the campaign. Judge Russell is running on a local option platform, while J. Pope Brown stands for the present State-wide prohibition law.

Ex-Gov. Joseph M. Brown in his announcement straddles the prohibition question.

STABBED BY FRIEND.

OXNARD, Sept. 23.—Endeavoring to play good Samaritan to a friend who was intoxicated, Tom Kelly, a bean ranch foreman, was probably fatally stabbed this afternoon. His assailant, John McCormick, is in the City Jail, while Kelly lies near death at the Receiving Hospital.

Despite the terrible wound, just below the left shoulder, Kelly dragged himself nearly a block, and when picked up by passers-by was walked a distance of two blocks, when he collapsed on the sidewalk. He had been endeavoring to take McCormick home, when the other suddenly developed a mean streak, took from his pocket a knife, and slashed him.

MAN KILLED INSTANTLY.

Angeleno Meets Tragic Death in Crown City.

Cranked Auto Without Disconnecting; Is Run Over.

Woman's Leg Broken When She Jumps from Car.

[Office of The Times, 32 S. Fair Oaks Ave.]

PASADENA, Sept. 24.—Elbert E. Osborne of No. 1806 Harvard boulevard, Los Angeles, was killed instantly at the corner of Bellefontaine street and South Grand avenue, in this city at 11 o'clock yesterday forenoon. He had stopped to crank his heavy automobile, apparently having forgotten that he had not thrown out the clutch, when the machine leaped forward and ran over him. One of the front wheels crushed his skull.

Gaining rapidly in speed, the car shot forward with no one at the wheel, and four women and a two-year-old girl in the tonneau. Mrs. Osborne, who kept her head despite the fact that her husband's dying scream was in her ears, made a brave effort to climb over the front seat and gain control of the runaway automobile. It had traversed a distance of about seventy-five yards and she was just reaching for the lever when it struck the curb and was brought to a standstill.

In the meantime Mrs. E. W. Deibler, who lives at No. 1800 Harvard boulevard, had leaped to the ground. She sustained a compound fracture of her left leg.

The other passengers, all of Los Angeles, were Mrs. A. W. Dick of No. 727 Hobart boulevard, and her little daughter, and Miss Pettit of No. 1800 Harvard boulevard.

The party had stopped at the corner to eat luncheon and in leaving was descending the Bellefontaine-street hill when the accident occurred.

Almost as soon as a start was made Osborne saw that the way was barred by some boards and stopped the car and got out to remove them. Having done so he walked back and turned the crank at the front of the machine. He was killed so quickly that there was but a single outcry.

The accident was witnessed by several persons and Chief of Police Wood, Sergeant O'Dell and Patrolman Griffith were soon upon the scene. The body of the dead man was removed to the morgue of Reynolds & Van Nuys in this city and Mrs. Deibler was taken to the Good Samaritan Hospital in Los Angeles. She is 70 years of age and was severely shaken up, but is expected to recover.

Coroner Hartwell investigated the case yesterday afternoon and no inquest will be held. Funeral arrangements have not yet been made.

Osborne was 48 years old and a native of New York. He had lived in Los Angeles for the past six years and was a well-known broker in woolen goods.

The shock which the death of her husband caused and the shaking up she received in the automobile has nearly prostrated Mrs. Osborne.

Although it wrought such awful havoc, the automobile was uninjured and Police Detective Shultz drove it to Los Angeles later in the day.

SCIENTIFIC PLAY.

The second anniversary celebration of Carmelita playground yesterday attracted a large crowd of Pasadena children and their parents. The programme of sports and entertainment opened early in the morning and continued until late in the afternoon.

The most picturesque feature of the day's events was a parade of flower-bedecked perambulators and small carts fashioned into handsome little floats with thousands of bright-colored flowers.

The baseball game between the Carmelita and Washington teams, played in the forenoon, resulted in a score of 7 to 3 in favor of the Carmelita nine.

The three teams that participated in the dodge ball game scored in the following order: Carmelita, first; Washington, second; Grant, Third.

Results of the other events follow: Fifty-yard dash for boys under 14 years of age: Harold Hurchinson first prize, Floyd Hutchison second, Douglas McAlpine third.

Fifty-yard dash for girls: Hattie Shafer first, Viola Richard second, Eva Shafer third.

One hundred-yard dash for boys under 14 years of age: Harold Hutchinson first, Macy Chambers second, Charles DeLong third.

Girls' baseball-throwing contest: Viola Richard first, Katherine Shafer second, Clara Shoots third.

Boys' sack race: Roy Downs first, Macey Chambers second, Peter O'Connor third.

Girls' rope-skipping race: Katherine Shafer first, Edith Heartley second, Eva Shafer third.

Three-legged race: Robert Kahl and Arthur Aten first, Clark and Franklin Ives second, Glen Madison and Willard Downs third.

Girls' wand race: Louise Sitlif first, Viola Richard second, Dorris Conlon third.

Shoe race for boys: Floyd Hutchinson first, Leslie Robinson second, LeRoy Downs third.

Parade of doll cabs: Roselle McFarren first girls' prize, Elsie Edlunds second, John DeWilder first boys' prize, Gordon Jackson second.

SPEAKS TO TEACHERS.

"Do some one thing; have a definite purpose. As a normal school teacher I have ever advised my pupils to go out prepared for a definite task and resolve to do one thing better than it has ever been done. The task itself is to be considered? Yes, but far more are we to think of the way in which it is to be done. You are not to be promoted on the basis of your complaint that your merits have not been appreciated. You are not to make best progress in your labors by continually watching the clock. Will the world recognize your worth? Yes, if you do something."

This is one of the many points of good advice that Superintendent of Schools Jeremiah M. Rhodes gave to the city school teachers at the meeting held at the High School yesterday, where plans were made for the opening of the fall term of school. To his address he gave the title, "The Motive, the Means and the Method of Education."

The public schools will open tomorrow and the enrollment this year, the school authorities say, will be far in excess of the customary annual gain in pupils.

TUNA CAUGHT AT NEAR BEACH

First Fish of the Kind Brought to Gaff in the Santa Monica Bay.

SANTA MONICA, Sept. 23.—The first tuna ever taken in the waters of this bay was reported today from the municipal pier. It weighed eleven and a half pounds and was a pretty specimen of that game variety. The fish was not of the leaping variety.

At the same time a yellowfin was hooked. Mackerel are running freely, the season having been the best in the history of the sport here. A new variety of mackerel has appeared in local waters during the past few days. The new fish has a tail consisting of but one part, the division line common with the ordinary mackerel being a minus quantity.

Nature's Setting.

HOLD UNIQUE CATHOLIC SERVICE IN THE WOODS.

AZUSA, Sept. 23.—It is not every day that something happens in Azusa, but when the town undertakes anything she carries it through to a triumphant conclusion, as witness the barbecue held today in Slauson Grove under the auspices of Gaudelupe Council No. 642 of the Young Men's Institute of the Roman Catholic Church.

The parade started at 9:30 from Center street and Pasadena avenue, gathering volume as it went. There were pedestrians, baby carriages, burros, carriages and autos. There were Indians, clowns, cowboys and girls, a queen, Miss Evaline Aguilar, and her maids-of-honor in a beautifully decorated float, a three-seated carriage-load of members of the Chamber of Commerce, with W. H. Evans, secretary of the Monrovia chamber, the Monrovia band, and many representative citizens of Azusa and vicinity.

At the grove a white altar had been set up with the red, white and blue on one side and the red, white and green on the other. Here mass was celebrated by Rev. Father Michael, rector of San Gabriel. The beautiful scene must have reminded some of the older spectators of the days of the mission fathers.

Following the mass there was an address in Spanish by Father Michael, one in English by Rev. Father Fagan of Columbus, O., who was reminded by this celebration of the oldest sacrament of the Christian church in the open, of the crowds that followed Christ in Galilee; and then Father M. H. Geary—the moving spirit of the whole affair—in terms of highest appreciation, introduced Thomas White of Los Angeles.

Mr. White gave a brief account of the Institute, which began twenty-six years ago on a street corner in San Francisco, the result of a desire to bring people into friendly relations; their motto being, "For God and country." Speaking of the friendly spirit exhibited by the other churches and the civic bodies of Azusa, Mr. White said: "We need your help and appreciate it; and if we can ever help you, we will do so, regardless of creed."

To this speech, Dr. W. A. Atkinson responded on behalf of the Chamber of Commerce.

Then the audience stood while they sang "America," and a choir of young girls sang a Mexican national air, and then all, with one accord, fell upon the dinner. And such a dinner! A roast ox and every other possible good thing in the same generous proportions.

The afternoon was given up to games and sports of various kinds, and evening found a crowd of people tired, happy and feeling that the day had been one well spent.

Long Beach.

NEW FACTORY IS SECURED.

Long Beach Lands a Big Glass Concern.

Chamber of Commerce Brings About Its Location.

Two Thousand Michigan People Enjoy Outing.

LONG BEACH, Sept. 23.—Following the successful close of negotiations which have extended over four months, the Chamber of Commerce today made the announcement that it had secured for Long Beach a glass factory, for which machinery is now being purchased in the East. Building will be commenced as soon as bids can be secured and the factory will be in full operation February 1.

The corporation is known as the California Glass Insulator Company and comprises among its officers and directors Los Angeles business men. The officers and directors are Jules Kauffman, president; E. H. Fosdick, vice-president; John Morris, treasurer; Stanley Stonaker, secretary; Robert P. Frist, general manager; and directors, John Orth, Arthur C. Munn, William Schrade. Manager Frist is an experienced glass man with twenty years' experience in the business.

The Chamber of Commerce secured a site of ten acres for the factory at the corner of Hayes and Anaheim avenues on the inner harbor and agreed to pay for the cost of a spur track connecting the factory with the Pacific Electric.

The plant is to be built in units taking in the pressed ware, hollow ware and plate glass branches. The initial investment will be $45,000, the company beginning the manufacture of pressed ware such as insulators, prisms, sidewalk lights, and electric light shades, and will employ fifty men. This will be followed by the blowing or hollow ware department, employing 150 men, and then the window plate department manufacturing exclusively the reinforced wire glass under a new process which will reduce the cost 33 per cent. The company will secure its silicia sand from a high grade deposit recently discovered on the Bixby ranch at Horseshoe Bend in Orange county and said to be the only deposit west of the Rocky Mountains. Other factories rely upon shipments from Belgium and Indiana.

This is the first big enterprise actually secured since the acquisition of the Craig ship plant and the Chamber of Commerce directors are highly elated today over the deal. All papers are in escrow and the factory is said to be an absolute certainty.

MICHIGANERS MEET.

Two thousand members of the Michigan societies of Southern California attended the semi-annual outing at Long Beach today. The visitors on their arrival were directed to the lower deck of the Auditorium where they were tagged according to the county they hailed from and directed to headquarters of that county to register, as a result of which there were many happy reunions of ex-Wolverines.

At noon the visitors sat down to a basket luncheon and this was followed by a social session. In the afternoon the throng gathered in the Auditorium where a programme of speeches and readings was enjoyed. Mayor Windham's address of welcome was followed by a breezy talk from President O. W. Blaine of Hollywood. Then followed an original poem by Dr. G. B. Waring of Alhambra, in which the rains and snows of the East were contrasted with the sunshine of California. One of the interesting talks was by Councilman O'Brien of Los Angeles, who has recently returned from a visit to Michigan. Dr. G. S. Case of Pasadena also spoke, telling of the 15,000 residents of Michigan now living south of the Tehachepi. The day was one of true fraternal sociability.

GOVERNOR TALKS.

Gov. Hiram Johnson addressed a large audience tonight at the Auditorium on the subject of the various constitutional amendments which are to be voted on in October. Short talks were also made by several members of the Governor's party.

Previous to the speaking a Governor's salute was fired on anvils from the bluff. Gov. Johnson arrived this evening by automobile, accompanied by Congressman Stephens, Meyer Lissner, Marshall Stimson, John R. Gains, R. A. Dickson and others. He was met by a Reception Committee of the Republican Club and escorted to Hotel Virginia, where a banquet was tendered him, plates being reserved for 110 guests. Short talks were made by the Governor, Congressman Stephens, Assemblyman Hinshaw and others, after which the party proceeded to the Auditorium.

BIDS IRREGULAR.

Having been advised that the bids made recently by the water companies for the water bond issue were irregular, new bids were received last night by the Council conforming with the requirements and the same bids, par and accrued interest for the $850,000 issue was accepted. All the papers are ready and there will be no delay in the city coming into actual possession of the two water plants. Pending the sale of the bids the city operated the plants, paying the water companies rental. During last night's session Mayor Windham announced that during the city's control in July and August the water department's receipts had been sufficient to pay operating expenses, interest on the bonds and show a profit of $6000, besides reducing water rents to patrons about $31,000.

NEWS BRIEFS.

Announcement was made today that the Exchange National Bank will on Monday open its business in the State Bank building at the corner of First and Pine avenues, pending the erection of its own home. The chief stockholders of the national bank recently acquired control of the State Bank.

The Chamber of Commerce has secured quarters and power for a novelty manufactory, which on Monday will begin operations in the old asbestos factory on the inner harbor, employing about a dozen men. The concern will manufacture advertising novelties.

In an effort to make the Long Beach harbor known, by securing one of the transportation companies to make it a port, Mayor Windham will appoint a committee of five business men to visit San Francisco and arrange for one of the steamship lines to make regular calls at the city docks.

City Clerk Boynton and City Attorney Long have been appointed to represent Long Beach at the annual convention of the League of California Municipalities at Santa Barbara October 23-28.

Dr. R. A. Terry last night collided with a buggy in which were seated two young daughters of Leonard Head. Dr. Terry swerved his machine as he struck, but not enough to avoid striking the buggy, which was overturned and the girls thrown out. They escaped with a fright and some minor bruises.

Several small burglaries reported to the police the last two nights indicates the presence of one or two crooks in the city. The home of J. Bullard on Pacific avenue and a Pike concession were burglarized last night and a few dollars secured. Entrance was secured by forcing the front door.

CANYON SPUR IS WANTED.

Paul Shoup of the Pacific Electric Will Confer With the Citizens of Monrovia.

MONROVIA, Sept. 23.—Paul Shoup, general manager of the Pacific Electric system, accompanied by representatives of the Board of Trustees, Board of Trade and Merchants' Association, will make a personal investigation Wednesday as to the desirability, from the corporation's financial viewpoint of a spur line to Monrovia Canyon from the Monrovia-Glendora branch of the Pacific Electric. The length of the proposed line is about two miles and the grade is light. No difficulty is anticipated in securing right of way.

The canyon is much frequented throughout the year and is one of the few portals to the wilderness still open to the public and within an hour's journey from Los Angeles. The conformation of the mountains is such that a trolley line to the heart of the unspoiled wild land can be built at relatively low cost.

It is believed that if the Pacific Electric decides to build to the canyon, the return line will loop the city and form the first section of a local system.

Indications are that Mr. Shoup will have a crowded hour or two of diplomatic receptiveness. Among other grievances is a Pacific Electric horse-power stub to the Santa Fe station. This has long been a source of civic mortification and apology. The Pacific Electric acquired the right of way some years ago and put down heavy ties suitable for modern trackage, but continues to operate its prehistoric equipment.

In vain has the Board of Trade plaintively expostulated with the Pacific Electric for subjecting the "Gem of the Foothills" to the gibes and jeers of tourists arriving on the Santa Fe, whose first and unforgettable impression of Monrovia is given by a sleepy, indifferent team attached to a car that might have been backed off the ark. South Myrtle-avenue property owners have let the contract to pave the street with oil macadam and a strong effort will be made to induce the Pacific Electric to install a modern line in place of the present antiquated mockery.

MOTHERS' CONGRESS.

The annual reciprocity day of California division of the Mothers' National Congress will be held in Monrovia Tuesday, September 26. Three hundred representatives of State local chapters, which are known as parent-teacher associations, will attend. Mrs. Mary H. Gridley of Glendale, chairman of the State Reciprocity Committee, will preside. Mrs. A. L. Hamilton, State president, will address the convention. Mrs. F. L. Scofield of Los Angeles is chairman of the Transportation Committee. The special train for the delegates will leave the Pacific Electric station, Los Angeles, at 9:20 a.m.

The local committee of entertainment, acting for the Board of Trade, the Parent-Teachers' Association, woman's and suffragist clubs, W.C.T.U., etc., will meet the guests on their arrival and escort them to the canyon picnic grounds. A call for volunteer autos to convey the visitors to and from the canyon has been generally responded to and more machines offered than could be used.

The programme for the day has not been issued, but in general will consist of an interchange of experiences.

ORANGE SEASON CLOSED.

Glendora Heights Association Ends a Year of Unusual Profit to Its Members—News Briefs.

GLENDORA, Sept. 22.—The Glendora Heights Orange and Lemon Association closed its packing-house Thursday for the season, after a record run of 279 cars, two-thirds of which were Navels. The fruit was a superior quality and brought a high average price on the market. The packing-house will be thoroughly renovated and overhauled for the coming season with a view of being well equipped to handle the growing crop which was never more promising.

NEWS BRIEFS.

Hal Slemmons of Monrovia has let the contract to R. M. Goble for the erection of a business house on his lot fronting Michigan avenue, Glendora.

The ranch of J. West was the scene Friday of a big ingathering of citrus fruit growers. The attraction was a combination orchard cultivator which was to be thoroughly demonstrated by the J. F. Ropp Manufacturing Company, inventor and builders. So enthusiastic were the farmers over the successful trial of the machine, that several orders were placed at once for the machine. The advantages of the machine lies in the fact that it will do the furrowing, shoveling and cultivating—no other tool being necessary to do the orchard work.

COLLEGE WILL OPEN MONDAY.

Pomona Institution Will Throw Open its Doors to the Largest Freshman Class in Its History.

POMONA, Sept. 23.—Everything is in readiness for the opening of Pomona College the coming week, and indications are that the entering freshman class will be larger than ever.

President Blaisdell and Dean E. C. Norton and Dr. George Sumner are home from their vacations, and are arranging a large amount of work preliminary to matriculation activities. Most of the professors and instructors have returned from their summer outings, and are ready for work.

The freshman class will be represented by more graduates from the Pomona High School this semester than ever befort.

L. Shutt, formerly of this city, captain of the 1910 eleven, will probably be football captain for 1911. Clifton Barnes, Ray Seward, Theodore Rice, Will Crawford, Floyd Lorbeer, Gillette, Ash, McFadden and Sanford will be back for the football team. Most of the freshmen pigskin men who will register from high schools are Rugby-trained, therefore it is difficult to forecast how they will line up in the intercollegiate style of play. One of the most valuable men in track athletics to register will be Robert Merriam, who is good for 6 ft. 2 in. high jump, and 11 ft. or better in the pole vault.

Dr. Bim Smith, who formerly resided here, where he has numerous friends, and who has been in Southern California for a month, left last night for his present home, Hermosillo, Mex. Dr. Smith has a private sanatorium there.

Mr. and Mrs. F. H. Paine, Miss Hattie Paine and Mrs. Thomas Crawford and daughter have left for Clifton, Ariz., to visit Fred Paine and family. They will be absent three weeks, and stop at the Grand Canyon en route home.

Extensive preparations have been made by Dr. A. J. Cook and V. V. LeRoy for the big picnic of the Claremont Pomological Club to be held at Ganesha Park on Monday. Among the speakers will be Gov. Hiram Johnson and State Senator L. C. Gates.

TELEPHONE MERGER.

Sunset Company Absorbs an Independent Company at Glendale, Taking Over the San Fernando Lines.

GLENDALE, Sept. 23.—Fred Deal, manager of the Glendale office of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company, announced the completion of negotiations whereby another large independent telephone company has been added to the Glendale system. This most recent addition took place this week at San Fernando, where over 300 subscribers in that city and surrounding territory are being given the benefit of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company's service, both long and short distances.

NEWS BRIEFS.

The movement for the annexation of the Casa Verdugo and North Glendale sections to the city of Glendale is moving along rapidly. Ralph Lockwood, who has been canvassing the northern Casa Verdugo section, has a petition bearing the names of thirty-five voters favoring the move, out of the forty-five interviewed. No opposition has as yet been heard in the West Glendale section on which a vote for annexation will be taken October 14. The effort of this whole annexation scheme is to form a sufficiently large territory to take care of the Casa Verdugo wash during the rainy season.

The regular meeting of the Glendale Valley Improvement Association will be held next Thursday evening at Knights of Pythias Hall on Brand boulevard. Frank G. Tyrrell of Los Angeles will speak on the "Initiative, Referendum and Recall."

CORPORATION VERSUS CITY.

Escondido Threatened With Water Famine Until It Meets the Demands of Local Company.

ESCONDIDO, Sept. 23.—From the fact that the directors of the Mutual Water Company have adopted a resolution directing the superintendent to turn off the water from city taps on Monday, provided the city does not acquire, either by purchase, or lease, additional stock of the company, indicates that the directors of the water company and the trustees of the city have been unable to get together on an agreed statement of facts for presentation to the Superior Court in the water controversy.

The water company contends that according to its rules no patron of the system can be supplied with water only in the ratio of stock held. Admittedly, the city has ovedrawn its stock account, although it is paying for the water it uses at the regular rates. The shutting off of the water applies principally to the water used for the flushing of the sewers.

IMPROVED SERVICE.

It is said that the result of the movement for the launching of a mutual telephone system, to take the place of the Pacific Telephone and Telegraph Company's system, will be an agreement on the part of the latter to make important improvements in the local service, and that the mutual company will discontinue its efforts in soliciting stock and subscribers. If the agreement for betterment carries, which seems likely, Escondido will have a finely equipped station and local service. The company has about 500 subscribers in the Escondido country, and the station is the checking center for a large tributary country.

NEWS BRIEFS.

The first man to try out the proposition of an apartment-house in Escondido is Peter Schnack, who has had the plans drawn for a sixty-room structure, on his lot at the northwest corner of Kalmia and Indina streets, which lot is 100x140 feet It will be a two-story wooden structure, 80x100 feet, and the rooms will be divided into suites of two, three and five, each suite having a buffet kitchen, disappearing beds, solar and gas heaters, electric lights, and all modern conveniences. The plans have been drawn by the D. M. Tittle Construction Company. The contract will be let within the next few days.

On account of ill health, Rev. J. C. McReynolds has been obliged to resign the pastorate of the Christian Church, although he will continue to live in Escondido. Rev. McReynolds has been at a sanatorium in Long Beach for treatment, and his general health is improved, although not sufficiently restored to allow of his resuming his pastoral work.

W. F. Speith, for the past five years general manager of the Cleveland-Pacific mine here, has left for Cleveland, O. his home, as well as the home of most of the stockholders of the company. He expects to return later with ample funds for the operation of the mine.

Trout fishing and deer hunting are fine at Wheeler's Springs.

LOST SIX DAYS IN MOUNTAINS.

MAN HAS TOUGH EXPERIENCE SEEKING BALDY'S TOP.

Falls Over Precipice and Lies Unconscious Two Days and After Regaining Faculties Lives Several Days With Only Two Sandwiches to Sustain Him—Brother's Search.

UPLAND, Sept. 23.—Charles King, overseer of the gas department of the Edison company, with headquarters in Los Angeles, had an unusual and thrilling experience in the mountains north of this city, and for some days was completely lost in the labyrinth of trails which lace the fastnesses of those mountains.

Accompanied by a friend, also from Los Angeles, King had gone into the mountains, by way of San Gabriel Canyon, several days previously, the intention being to seek to reach the top of Old Baldy, as well as to hunt deer. After a few days spent in fishing, King's companion set out for the trail up Baldy, while King set off by himself in search of a deer, and with the understanding that they were to meet the next day, at a given point, for the ascent of Baldy, together.

King failed to appear at the time agreed, and when, the following day, no trace was had of him, the alarm was spread, and his brother, who resides at Pomona, was notified, and joined the searchers. That evening word was received at Camp Baldy that nothing had been found of King, though Landlord Dewey, who runs the "inn," on the summit of Baldy, reported having found a pair of rubber heels for shoes, on one of the trails. The parties of searchers separated with the understanding that, when the missing man was located, a "smudge smoke" was to be started, to apprise the other searchers of the find.

The second day of the general search the poor fellow was found, and his story of his experience is a harrowing one. It seems that, soon after leaving his companion, King shot a deer, and in his effort to get to where the animal fell, he slipped and fell over a falls, onto the rocks, some distance below, where he lay stunned, and practically unconscious, for two days. Upon recovering his faculties, in part, King found himself utterly confused as to his bearings, and to add to his discomfort, he had but two sandwiches, for lunch, these having been purchased early on the day of his start. He was ravenously hungry, and during the days, in which he was lost, the sandwiches constituted the only food he had.

One of the pitiable elements of the entire search for King, too, was the anxiety of his brother, who absolutely refused to rest, until the missing man was located. He kept reiterating that he "must find him," before he could go back and report to the aged mother, residing in Los Angeles. King has now fully recovered from his experience, but he will, doubtless, take precaution to secure a guide, or at least a companion, before he again attempts a trip into unknown sections of the mountains.

ANOTHER QUEEN IS CHOSEN.

Anaheim Scores Its Political Privilege and Selects a Pretty Girl to Run the Town.

ANAHEIM, Sept. 23.—The Carnival queen contest closed last evening and the honor is bestowed upon Miss Monica V. Magee of the Olinda oil wells. Miss Magee is a beautiful and attractive brunette, and is well fitted for the high position which her many friends were determined that she should have.

The contest was one of the most interesting ever conducted in the country, with Miss Suzanne Beebe of this city, and Miss Magee shoulder to shoulder in the race for the last few days of the contest, and much to the surprise of many, Miss Magee came out ahead in the race.

The other two contestants, Miss Beebe and Miss Leona Esmay of Fullerton, will act as the queen's maids together with Miss Estelle Newcombe of Buena Park and Miss Dee Damron of Huntington Beach, who have also been chosen to attend the queen. A young lady from Orange and one from Garden Grove, are yet to be chosen to act as the queen's attendants.

The pages are to be Miss Grace Nelson and Miss Vivian Fox, both of this city.

Queen Monica T. Will be in Los Angeles all day Monday, selecting her royal robes from the various stores, and they promise to be elaborate creations.

FRUIT MEN ARE BUSY.

Corona Packers Are Building Additions, Arranging for Water Supply and Otherwise Moving Along.

CORONA, Sept. 23.—The Corona Foothill Lemon Company has completed the installation of its pumping plant at the corner of Second street and the boulevard. The plant consists of a 250 horse power, twin, De La Verne engine of the interior combustion, crude oil burning type; a two-stage Jackson turbine pump for lifting, and a five-stage Jackson turbine pump for forcing the water to their lands in the foothills, south of the city, a distance of 17,500 feet. The plant has a capacity of 100 miner's inches.

The packing-houses are busy preparing for the coming campaign. The Orange Heights Association is erecting an extensive addition to its orange house and will equip it with all the latest labor-saving machinery. It is also asking bids for the erection of an addition 115x75 feet. Much new machinery will be added to the equipment of this house.

The Corona Lemon Company is building detached brick and concrete sweatrooms of the latest improved design, which will have a capacity of six carloads.

The other houses are very busy in the way of necessary repairs and will most of them install new and additional machinery.

AUTO AND MULES.

Messrs. Sugg and Hedges of Claremont passed through this city this morning on a tryout trip to Elsinore in preparation for the Pomona-San Diego road race, in a "Buick 30." On their return at the corner of the Temescal road and Lester street, an obstinate pair of mules disputed the road with them, forcing them to take to the ditch; they were traveling at the rate of about sixty miles an hour and the machine skidded, tearing off one of the rear wheels. Fortunately no one was hurt.

The public schools opened this week with an enrollment of 647, an increase over last year, of 25 per cent. Twenty-six teachers are employed.

ORANGE.

ORANGE, Sept. 23.—Fire of unknown origin last night destroyed the planing mill of the Ainsworth Lumber and Mill Company. The loss is $10,000; insurance, $3500. Firemen with two streams of water kept the flames from spreading. Had there been any wind other property would have been destroyed. The yards of the company and the buildings and yards of the Griffith Lumber Company and the packing-houses of the Santiago Orange Growers' Association and Richland Walnut Association were threatened.

COLTON.

COLTON, Sept. 23.—Mrs. Mabel Clark and Marion Dodson evaded their Colton friends and quietly slipped over to San Bernardino and were married today. The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. M. Barrett of South Seventh street and the groom has been a resident of Colton for over twenty-five years.

Marshal F. W. Weaver has resumed his official duties after a two weeks' vacation spent at the various coast resorts.

GETTING AFTER HUNNEWELL.

Writ of Ouster Filed in Kansas Supreme Court Against City Dads Who Oppose Woman Mayor.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

TOPEKA (Kan.) Sept. 23.—Charging that the Hunnewell Councilmen refuse to confirm Mayor Wilson's appointees, although she presented the names of nearly every reputable citizen of the town, including the village schoolmaster, a petition asking the ouster of the four Councilmen was filed in the Kansas Supreme Court today by Atty.-Gen. Dawson.

The petition was drawn up by C. W. Trickett, special investigator appointed by Gov. W. R. Stubbs to straighten out Hunnewell affairs. It is directed against F. J. Lander, B. Keir, J. P. Richardson and J. O. Ellis. It is alleged that Mrs. Ella Wilson "was elected Mayor of Hunnewell at the regular election last April, the voters writing her name on the ballot; that she did not seek office, but that the voters elected her voluntarily."

The petition took up the history of the dispute between Mayor and the Council, stating that the Council desired to meet "in an upstairs bedroom in a hotel," that Mayor Wilson objected to this and the Councilmen consented to meet the Mayor in Brockmayer Hall, but did not attend when she went there. Then, when the Attorney General notified them they would have to meet, they met, but refused absolutely to confirm any of her appointments, although she named every respected citizen of the town.

By reason of these failures the petition stated, two women friends of Mayor Wilson now are serving the city as City Clerk and City Marshal. The petition concluded with the statement that, by reason of the failure of the Councilmen to act, "the city is made helpless and is prevented from providing protection for the life and property of its citizens."

A STILL IN PRISON.

Mountaineer Waiter From Kentucky Produces Unadulterated Moonshine for Oregon Convicts.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

SALEM (Or.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] How half a dozen convicts in the Oregon Penitentiary have of late been supplied with liquor has at last been solved.

For several days the guards noticed that a few of the prisoners displayed signs of intoxication. Inquiry among the convicts failed to elicit any clew. Each convict asserted stoutly that he was sober as a judge and that liquor had not passed his lips since he had entered the big gate. It appeared that the convicts who accumulated the daily souse were those who were waited on at table by a prisoner named Edwards. In the ensuing campaign it was disclosed that with a fountain syringe and the prunes which the convicts are allowed, Edwards, who is a former Kentucky mountaineer, has set up a still in his prison cell. The crude plant had a daily output of a dozen drinks, and the stuff was genuine moonshine whisky undiluted. One drink was enough to make a convict drunk.

Now the distillery has been destroyed and prohibition reigns supreme.

RACE RIOT IN CLEVELAND.

CLEVELAND, Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] A race riot between whites and blacks broke out in this city shortly before midnight. Three riots in less than two hours occurred, knives and revolvers being used. Most of the participants were under the influence of liquor. Of three sent to hospitals up to 1 o'clock this morning, Joe Carlina, a Porto Rican, was stabbed probably fatally.

All available policemen were sent to the district in which the fighting occurred. When a patrol wagon loaded with officers arrived, a crowd of men unhitched the horses, leaving the wagon stranded. Several hundred persons filled the street and blocked efforts of the police. Patrolman McNally was badly beaten when he arrested Charles Lyons, white, said to have been a leader of the gang which started the fighting.

The police at 1:30 o'clock had succeeded in restoring order after making several arrests. Thirty policemen were stationed in the district to patrol the streets until daylight.

The riots were the result of a feud of several weeks' standing between the whites and blacks. The latter, the police say, started out to find the former and when the two factions met there was a fight with pistols, knives, fists and missiles. The fighting spread several blocks down the street and continued until the negroes fled.

D. A. R. to Quit.

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] At a meeting of the San Francisco chapter, Daughters of the American Revolution held today a resolution was adopted by a vote of 17 to 14 advocating the dissolution of the California State conference of the order. There are thirty-four chapters in the state and the resolution will not become effective until the other chapters have passed upon it.

The vote to dissolve grows out of the fight in the national convention held in April. At that convention the delegates from California cast their vote for Mrs. S. S. Wymore of California as State regent. There is a provision in the constitution of the order that provides that the State regent shall not be elected from the State in which she is to serve. The candidate for the national convention was Mrs. S. S. Stilson.

Santa Monica.

SOLDIERS WILL PRESERVE ORDER.

SANTA MONICA PREPARES REGIMENTAL QUARTERS.

Contractors in Beach Town Are So Busy that They Ignore Advertisements of Fat City Jobs—Barretto Wants to Be the Next City Treasurer.

SANTA MONICA, Sept. 23.—The Seventh Street Park, which occupies a full block at Nevada and California, is being placed in condition to accommodate the camp of a hundred men from the Seventh Regiment, who will pitch their tents here October 13 and 14.

These soldiers have been engaged to serve throughout the day of the automobile road races, October 14, as guardians of the track. Their duty will be to hold the crowds in check. They will be assisted by seventy-five uniformed members of the Knights of Pythias and a like number of Los Angeles patrolmen.

The uniformed men will see service on Nevada and Ocean avenues and plain-clothes men will act as guards along San Vicente. The bridge across Nevada, the erection of which had been started at Fifth, has been moved again. This time it is rising at the Seventh street intersection. Fifth street property owners, whose corners are at Nevada, objected to the placing of the bridge at that point.

NO BIDDERS.

That the grading contractors all have more business than they can properly attend to, has been demonstrated to the satisfaction of the Board of Education, which was in a hurry to start operations in preparing for the new site for the group of High School buildings. Before the foundations can be laid or excavations made, it will be necessary to clip about nine feet off the top of the hill.

Thinking to get this dirt out of the way so that the contractor would have no trouble in starting work on the buildings, the board advertised for bids for cutting down the hill, and although the notice was publicly given for several weeks, there was not a single tender to do the work. The board is advertising anew for bidders, hoping to be able to have the new buildings completed and ready for the opening of school next year.

With two candidates already in the field, for Mayor and Max Barretto in receptive mood for Treasurer, and C. S. Dales in the running for Assessor, the municipal campaign is opening early. Election day falls on December's second Tuesday, and as there are no hold-overs, there will be many servants to choose. The freeholder charter being silent on the question of nominations, those who get into the running, do so by being nominated by petition. All nomination petitions must be in by November 3.

This will rush those candidates who are waiting to see if the women are given a vote at the constitutional amendments election in October; they will have to hurry after the result of that vote is determined, if they would have their petitions circulated before the nominations close. Legal authorities here are agree that if the women are given a vote, those who become properly registered by the first of November, will be entitled to a voice in naming the municipal officers for the next two-year term.

SUFFRAGETTES BUSY.

Suffragette workers are busy with preparations for the staging of a playlet which is depended upon to win votes for women. "How the Vote Was Won" is the title of the production, which was imported from London, and is to be staged at Columbia Hall by amateur histrionic talent. Suffragettes are well organized from end to end of the bay, but the antis, while evidently numerous, have thus far, neglected to band themselves together for either defensive or offensive purposes.

The Greatest Electro Magnetic Healer in This Country

Dr Glass, the noted English specialist, more commonly known all over this country as the Great Electro Magnetic Wonder, who is performing such wonderful cures at 316 S. Broadway, says there is nothing so remarkable about his wonderful cures; he simply finds the cause and removes it by putting new life and energy into the affected parts. Medicine alone will not do this. Some people are skeptical; some say they have tried everything else and, to their astonishment, are cured in a few days. Anyone calling at his office can find some one who has been cured of their same trouble, which is better than a testimonial a hundred times over. With the aid of the New Chemical Inhalant the chills, fever and night sweats in consumption disappear in a few days and they gain strength from the beginning of treatment.
The doctor is fully able and prepared to cure and restore to health the most obstinate cases, as he has done for thousands of others during the last three years, and should not be classed with the too common and unscrupulous charlatan and quack. Dr. Glass is a graduate of the regular schools of medicine and still uses medicine in some cases, but all of his remarkable cures are produced by the use of the ELECTRO-MAGNETIC. ALL CHRONIC DISEASES treated by him, but the doctor prefers to treat patients that have been pronounced incurable by other doctors. After an examination, if the doctor finds your case incurable, he will frankly tell you so. NO INCURABLE DISEASES TAKEN FOR TREATMENT. ALL DISEASES AND DEFORMITIES TREATED.
Free To Prove That He is Able to Give Immediate Relief the Doctor Will Examine and Give One Free Treatment to All Who Call During the Next Fifteen Days.
For further information call or write to Dr. Glass, 316 S. Broadway.

ECZEMA CAN BE CURED TO STAY, and when I say cured, I mean just what I say —C-U-R-E-D, and not merely patched up for awhile, to return worse than before. Remember I make this broad statement after putting ten years of my time on this one disease and handling in the meantime a quarter of a million cases of this dreadful disease. Now, I do not care what all you have used, nor how many doctors have told you that you could not be cured—all I ask is just a chance to show you that I know what I am talking about. If you will write me TODAY, I will send you a FREE TRIAL of my mild, soothing, guaranteed cure that will convince you more in a day than I or anyone else could in a month's time. If you are disgusted and discouraged, I dare you to give me a chance to prove my claims. By writing me today you will enjoy more real comfort than you had ever thought this world holds for you. Just try it and you will see I am telling you the truth.

N O individual, firm or corporation has a monopoly of either woods, metals or men; so that, where capital can easily control all of these, it would be possible to produce a high-grade piano. That statement sounds logical, BUT—

The possession of canvas, paints and brush does not necessarily enable their owner to create a world's masterpiece. A PAINTING THAT LIVES requires the touch of A MASTER HAND.

It is THE KNOWING HOW to combine the right materials that produces the most perfect results. It is that finished touch—that perfectly balanced combination—that fine art—that knowledge of a true adjustment of all parts—which makes THE STEINWAY PIANO different from all others, and has made it the recognized STANDARD OF THE WORLD.

In brief, it is THE KNOWING HOW.

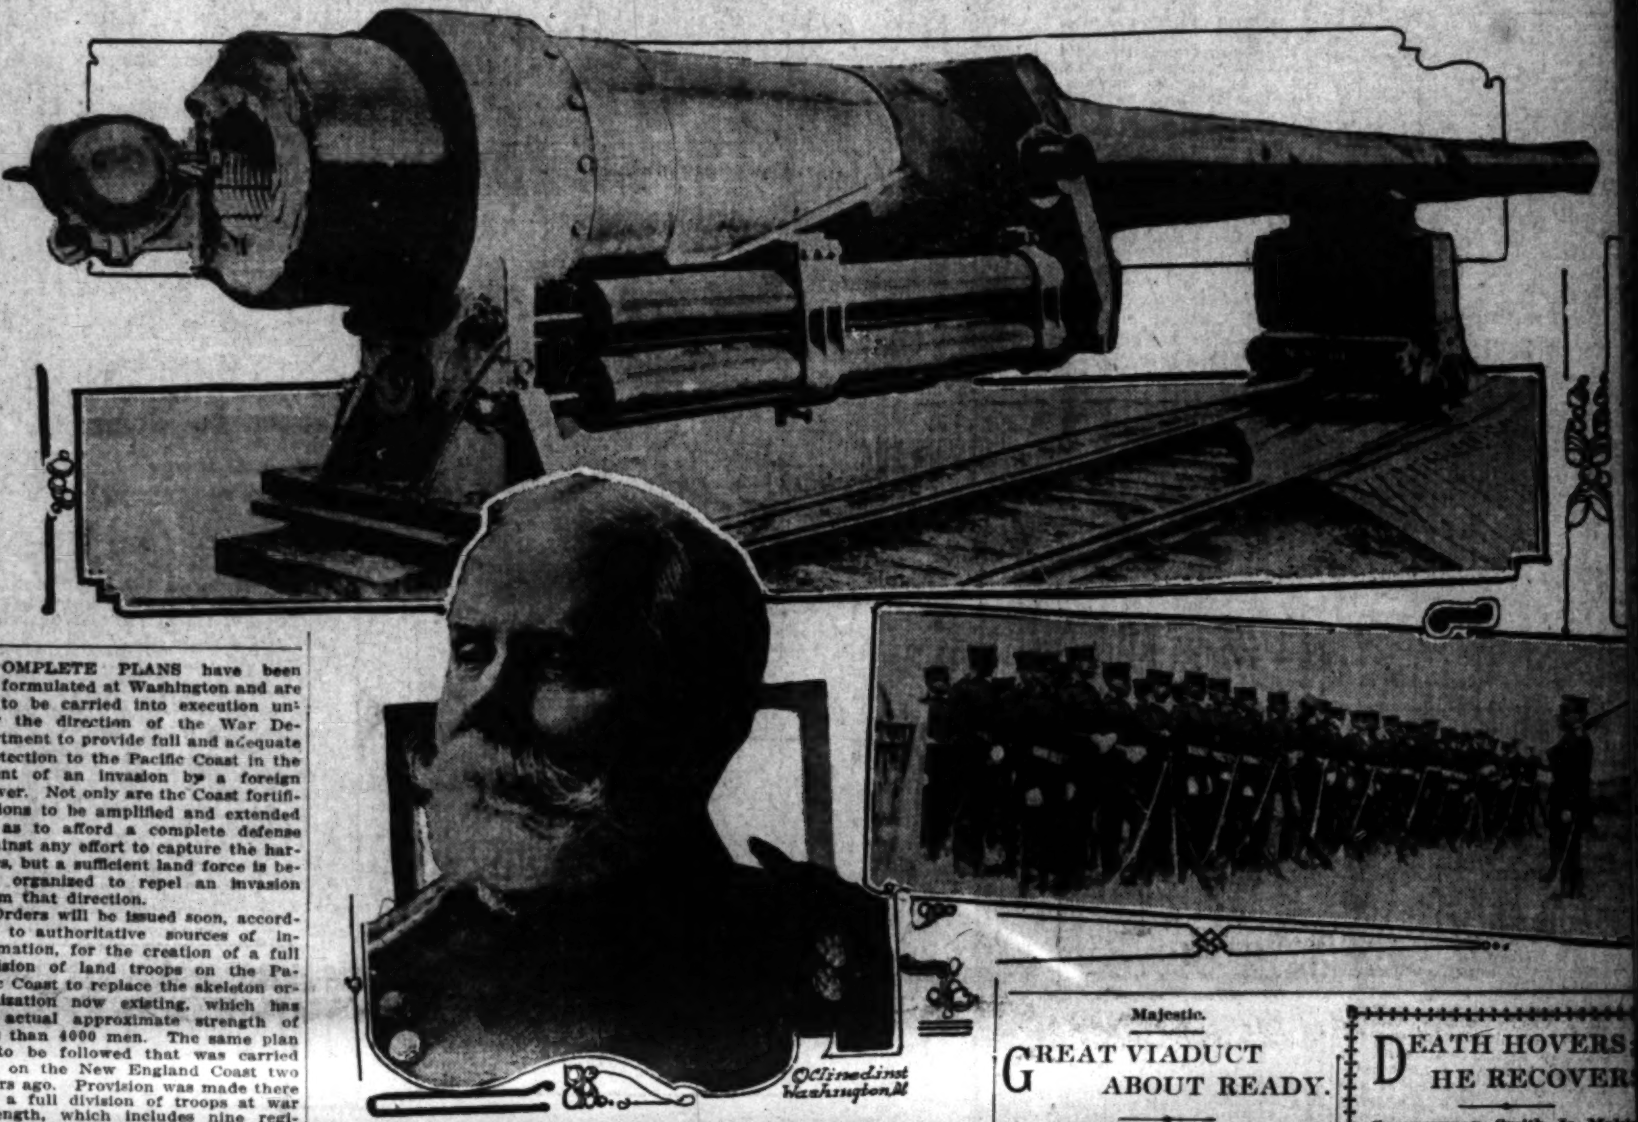
MILITARY LAND FORCE OF TWENTY THOUSAND MEN WAR DEPARTMENT'S PLAN FOR PACIFIC COAS

Full Division to Replace the Present Skeleton Organization, According to Arrangements Now Un Way at Washington, and Militia to Be Included—Ample Harbor Defense, and Possibly Two-Regiment Post Here—A Perfectly-Complemented Fighting Machine.



Strong Factors in the Defense of the West.

Maj.-Gen. Arthur Murray, commanding the Western Division, U.S.A., and one of the mighty fourteen-inch guns to be mounted at San Pedro. Gen. Murray will naturally command the proposed Pacific Coast Division, approximating twenty thousand men. This may include a two-regiment post at Los Angeles.

COMPLETE PLANS have been formulated at Washington and are to be carried into execution under the direction of the War Department to provide full and adequate protection to the Pacific Coast in the event of an invasion by a foreign power. Not only are the Coast fortifications to be amplified and extended so as to afford a complete defense against any effort to capture the harbors, but a sufficient land force is being organized to repel an invasion from that direction.

Orders will be issued soon, according to authoritative sources of information, for the creation of a full division of land troops on the Pacific Coast to replace the skeleton organization now existing, which has an actual approximate strength of less than 4000 men. The same plan is to be followed that was carried out on the New England Coast two years ago. Provision was made there for a full division of troops at war strength, which includes nine regiments of infantry, two regiments of artillery, one of cavalry, four field hospitals, four ambulance corps, one battalion pioneer engineers, and one field battalion signal corps, and the necessary pack, supply and ammunition trains. This provides for an organization numbering 19,850 men.

MILITIA TO BE INCLUDED.

Following precedent the militia organizations that are up to government standard—which includes the California National Guard—will be used in making up the division. It is the purpose to have a perfectly-complemented land fighting machine, and to this end sufficient regular troops will be brought here to make up, with the militia organizations, the full division as outlined. There are not more than 7000 militia troops in the three Pacific Coast States, including the recently organized field batteries in this city and San Francisco. In order to perfect the proposed division it will be necessary to bring West approximately 12,000 men. The Pacific Coast division, as it will be called, would naturally fall under the command of Maj.-Gen. Arthur Murray, who assumed command of the western division of the United States Army at San Francisco last week. In addition to the Pacific Coast States Gen. Murray commands the troops in Arizona, Utah, Idaho, Montana, Wyoming and the Territories of Hawaii and Alaska. The plan provides for organizing the complete division, and the assigning of the various militia commands in the three Pacific Coast States to places in the division. It may mean a two-regiment post at Los Angeles.

STUDY OF THIS COAST.

For some time past the War Department, under the direction of the War College, has been making a "study" of the Pacific Coast States. The inquiry has been close and complete, including a survey of the country with a view to defining camp sites, quartermaster depots, supply bases, a study of every means of transportation, highway, steam, electric, mountain trail, etc.

The government is thoroughly informed as to the water supply, the resources, the crop returns, and a thousand and one other features, affording complete information along all lines that might possibly be of use in the event that a foreign invasion should make this part of the country a possible battle ground. There is not a mountain pass that has not been carefully surveyed and its possibilities for attack or defense studied. Careful statistics have been compiled as to the crops, their location, availability, and the extent to which they could be used in subsisting troops.

And there are many other things on file at the War Department that are to be compiled and made available for instant use. The War College has also worked out detailed information estimating the movement that could be made by an invading force. These include the number of Finding a Way.

TO MAKE LOAFERS WORK AND TO CRUSH ROCK.

THE STONE CRUSHER which Capt. Lehnhausen of the East Side police station asked the City Council last winter to furnish when idling labor unionites attempted to overcrowd the jails in a vain endeavor to show the police they could not cope with the pickets, has been granted. The captain said yesterday that he will install the machine as soon as possible.

When the laborites frequented the industrial district last winter and openly picketed, believing that they could soon fill the jails and thus prevent further imprisonment, Capt. Lehnhausen declared a stone crusher would prove the most effective answer.

The laborites who freely went to jail after having violated the picketing ordinance would become scarce, Lehnhausen thought, as soon as some heavy employment was found for them. Under the conditions which eixsted then and now, life in the East Side Jail is very pleasant. The men pass their time in reading, sleeping, playing cards, enjoying themselves generally with but a comparatively little work to do and plenty of their associates to keep them company. Capt. Lehnhausen declared the food the unionites got in the jail was better than they obtained outside.

Before winter rolls around conditions will be different. A stone crusher of 100 tons daily capacity will be ready for operation, and the East Side Jail will no longer be a labor union club room.

The men will be routed out of their beds at 6 o'clock in the morning and put to work cracking rocks with sledge hammers and carrying the broken pieces to the crusher, where they will be thrown into the machine and reduced to much smaller size.

Ten hours a day wielding a heavy hammer under the supervision of guards, who will not allow any to "soldier," will not prove so pleasant as playing cards and smoking, and the police believe that being the case it may have some influence on laborite deportment.

"Principle is one thing and a stone crusher is another," said Lehnhausen, laughingly.

The prisoners, under armed guard, will also be made to gather the rocks they break up with the hammers. The grounds of the jail adjoin the river bed and the crusher will be placed on the bank. The prisoners can then be conveniently marched down into the bed and pick up rocks and carry them to the crusher.

PEOPLE'S NEED MAKES DEMAND.

CROSSTOWN LINE IS URGENT FOR THEIR ACCOMMODATION.

Cry First Heard in District Under Review—All Classes Represented. Too Much Zigzagging to Get to the Place You Want to Reach. Pressing Need.

BY GEORGE W. BURTON.

Who wants the cross-town streetcar line? First of all, not the railroad company. Secondly, not the inhabitants of the city of Los Angeles whose homes are in Garvanza any more than the people who dwell in Milpitas or in Mesopotamia.

The demand for a cross-town car line is not a new thing. It first came from the people living in that portion of Los Angeles city lying west of Figueroa street and south of Temple. This Macedonian cry arose spontaneously from the mouths of the people whose homes were in that section of the city, and was directed to the railroad company, primarily, as it only could "come over" and afford the desired help. The call has echoed and re-echoed many times during recent years, and its tones have been loud, earnest and acute.

It may be asserted with confidence that the railroad company (for its own sake) cares nothing about this cross-town line. The Times does not arrogate to itself the title of "expert" in all matters terrestrial, celestial and infernal, but it does dare to say that it knows enough of municipal affairs to lead to the opinion that this cross-town road will not, under any imaginable conditions, be at first a paying investment to the builders. It will gather in comparatively few nickels from direct fares because those who use it will board the cars, for the most part, with a transfer in their hands. At some future date (and it will be hard to fix the exact time) it no doubt will pay.

If, therefore, the railroad builds it at this time, it will be in answer to a demand on the part of the people and for the purpose of accommodating the clients of the railroad, with no doubt the subconscious or entirely conscious notion in mind of making itself popular.

PRESSING WANT.

Why do the people in that portion of the city mapped out above ask for this accommodation? Because it is not only a long-felt, but also a pressingly-felt need on the part of nearly all whose homes are in that section.

The district of the city in mind, while it contains the homes of many professional and business men of

GREAT VIADUCT ABOUT READY.

CARS RUN OVER THE BUENA VISTA STRUCTURE.

Concrete Bridge Across Los Angeles River Weighs Nearly Forty Thousand Tons, Cost Two Hundred and Seventy-five Thousand Dollars—Without a Peer in West.

The Buena Vista bridge is in use. Yesterday the first cars of the Los Angeles Railway to pass over it on a single track dedicated it to one of its chief purposes. In a few days wagons and automobiles will be free to cross, and gradually thereafter it will become the important link it was intended to be between the busy heart of Los Angeles and the growing regions of the northern foothills and the eastern slopes.

The completion of this majestic structure is the realization of seven years' of hope. It is not only one of the greatest improvements the city has made, in point of utility, but it is one of the triumphs of bridge designing and construction and becomes an ornament where any other structure might fail in that purpose.

Today a visit will demonstrate the contrast between the old and new bridge construction. The new concrete bridge with its 968 feet of artistically curving concrete, supported by its eight massive piers, stands between the old Downey-avenue viaduct and the Pasadena-avenue wooden bridges. Its environment emphasizes progress and progress is and has been for many years the emphasis of Los Angeles. While the old structures typify utilities of necessity the new bridge typifies not only present need, but confidence in decades to come for it is for all practical purposes a thousand feet of solid rock.

Its first use yesterday was by the north-bound cars of the North Main-street and Griffin-avenue lines. For a time they will use one track over the new bridge and return by the single track over the old one. It will not be many days before the old track is abandoned and both lines will come and go over the new bridge and the old one will be torn away and relieve the landscape of a blot. Later on, when necessary details are arranged the Downey-avenue viaduct, still sturdy with its combination of iron and wood, will also go and the landscape in the other direction will be improved. Other car lines will pass over the new bridge.

At its west end there is a Y leading to Pasadena avenue and Avenue 20 and to North Broadway (formerly Downey avenue.) This plan was adopted to dispose of both old bridges.

BEGINNING AND END.

Seven years ago East Side people, who multiplied rapidly, saw the necessity of providing better means of access to the city. With a single track on the Pasadena-avenue bridge car service was irregular. The Downey-avenue viaduct served double track uses, but it was not regarded as the best and most direct connection. Discussion resulted in the East Side Improvement Association, considering the rebuilding of the condemned and abandoned San Fernando-street viaduct, but this was laid aside for a proposal made by R. W. Dromgold. He believed one great bridge, to great wealth whose use of the street railroads is mostly a direct one from their homes to the business center, yet contains not hundreds, but many thousands of citizens of moderate means whose incomes are in the shape of salaries or wages. It many cases the families in this district number several persons who must go about the city to their daily occupations.

PEOPLE'S NEEDS.

It is not only the industrial members of the families who feel the pressing need of the cross-town line. This need is felt as generally and as acutely by the grown-up members of the family who stay at home. There may be included in this category the school children of the family. These families are made up of mechanics, office boys and girls, small merchants, and all sorts and conditions of the citizenship of Los Angeles.

Look, for instance, at the building trades. Carpenters, plasterers, plumbers and painters live in this portion of the city. They are employed often in portions of the territory directly north or south of their homes. With a cross-town street-car line these working people may rise from their breakfast tables and be at their employment in fifteen minutes to half an hour.

Without the cross-town line they must come from Western avenue, perhaps near Melrose avenue, zigzag around, now southward, then eastward, again north, until they come to the city center. The transit cannot be made in half an hour under ordinary circumstances, but more frequently requires forty-five to fifty minutes. At Figueroa or Broadway a transfer must be made to a line going away out Washington street, Adams Heights, or away out Jefferson street. This often requires another three-quarters of an hour, making an hour and a half for a workingman to get from home to his job.

TORTUOUS ROUTE.

It is the same with the members of the family who are not engaged in gainful occupations, but in keeping house for the rest of the family. If a woman in such circumstances wishes to pay a visit to a friend perhaps ten to twenty blocks directly south of her own home, a transit which might be made in fifteen minutes, it will be compulsory to follow the same tortuous route gone over by the wage-earner in the morning, with the consumption of an hour and a half to go and as much more to return home. This means a whole afternoon to make a short visit to a friend.

Children attending school must often go "straight down the crooked lane and all around the square" to go a distance of a few blocks from home to the class-room. In many such cases there will be one, if not more, transfers necessary, and every transfer means an increase of danger of accident to small children.

The district here reviewed has been selected because here arose the first demand for a cross-town road, here it has been heard oftenest, and here it is most needed. A few of the reasons have been set forth above, but by no means all of them.

Now there may be altruists with a clear flame of love for their fellowman burning in their hearts who live on Boyle Heights, East Los Angeles or Highland Park who will insist, first of all, that a franchise for the cross-town road shall be fixed upon a basis of "even-handed justice," especially if that programme means harrying the railroad company a good deal.

NO NARROW POLICY.

The people in the district are composed of as small a percentage of "undesirable citizens" as those found elsewhere. They wish no injustice to be done to the interests of the citizens of any part of Los Angeles, nor to the railroad company. But if they are members of a family of hard-working people they certainly will object to any uncalled-for obstructions being put in the way of this much-desired cross-town road, or of any unnecessarily harsh and narrow policy toward the builders of the road.

"Even-handed justice" is a fine thing when the two scales of the balance hang absolutely level and the beam occupies a perfectly horizontal position. Alas, "even-handed justice" (especially in the mouths of secretaries of clubs who earn a living by dreaming over theoretical literature rank with socialism and keeping up a continual agitation the effect of which is to retard the progress of the city and deprive the mass of citizens of many comforts and conveniences they very greatly desire) means not infrequently a pair of scales, one member of it in the cellar and the other in the garret, and the beam standing at right angles to the plane of the earth.

SURVEYS CONFLICT.

Important Hearing Before Land Register May Clean Up Disputes Between Old and New Lines.

Three thousand acres located eight miles west of El Centro, and along the line of the San Diego and Arizona Railway, being constructed by the Spreckels interests, is involved in a complicated hearing which will be heard by Register Buren of the local land office, tomorrow. The action arises on account of the conflict between old and new surveys of government land in that vicinity. In the number of contestants the case will be one of the most important heard recently. It will be the last of the big suits brought about by overlapping surveys, and is expected to clean up that section of the State in that regard.

Among the contestants are John R. Seifert, San Diego; Robert W. and Thomas Davies, El Centro; N. R. Titus, San Diego; Denton D. Copenhaver, Imperial; Arthur Ewens and Milton B. Adams, Silsbee, Cal.; Robert Barry, Los Angeles, and D. F. Harbison, National City.

UNCLE SAM SUES.

An action was brought in the United States Circuit Court yesterday by the Federal authorities against H. E. McCrea for the recovery of $1419. This amount is alleged to be due from the defendant, who went on the forest reservation in San Bernardino county, and cut down juniper and pine trees, converting them into 120 cords of firewood.

He has served in the British South African Police, Mashonaland, Natal Mounted Police, in South Africa, in the Imperial Light Horse and the South African Constabulary. He was awarded medals for bravery in the Mashona Rebellion in 1897; the Queen's medal for participating in the relief of Ladysmith and the Transvaal, during the Boer War; and the King's medal of two clasps, for service in 1901 and 1902 as lieutenant in the South African Constabulary.

Pryce says that he joined the insurrecto forces at Mexicali, Lower California, last February. At that time, he asserts, he thought there was but one force in the field against Diaz, and that the Los Angeles junta were the local agents. He enlisted under Gen. J. M. Leyva, commanding the Liberal forces at Mexicali. In March he was transferred to the division organized by Gen. William Stanley, who was mortally wounded in action on April 8, near Mexicali. Later on he was elected general to succeed Stanley and was commissioned by the junta.

Pryce says he led the Liberal Army into Tia Juana on May 8, remaining there until the latter part of the month. Then seeing that Diaz had left the country, that Madero and his followers had assumed the reins of power, that the objects of the revolution had been accomplished, he withdrew from the field. He also asserts that Madero did not cease fighting until long afterward, and that it would have been within his power to have captured Ensenada if he had desired to do so, as that place was poorly garrisoned. When peace was declared and Madero had assumed power, Pryce declares that he retired from the service.

Pryce left Tia Juana on May 29, after twenty-one days' occupation by his forces, and reached Los Angeles the next day. On June 4, he went to San Pedro, sailing for San Francisco, June 5, where on June 7 he was arrested on complaint of Joaquin Prieta, Mexican Consul at San Diego, charging him with violation of the neutrality laws. The charges involving the murder of Francisco Cuevas, postmaster of Tia Juana, and the looting and burning of stores at that place arose afterward.

THE CONFLICT OF LOVE AND FAT.

The average man will "jolly" with the stout girl; but he steals glances over her shoulder at that Miss Slender. He would sooner hold the hands of the latter in a fatuous silence than really enjoy himself with the other. Such is the power of line. Just a line—from chin to toe, or nape to heel—that's all. But it rings the merry marriage bell.

Fat women should not repine—but refine—their own lines by means of that phenomenal—the Marmola Tablet. No exercising or dieting is necessary. Simply take one tablet after each meal and at bedtime, and in a little while the overplus of fat—the coarseness of aspect—will disappear. The figure will become slight enough to permit of a maidenly contour, a pure outline, being fashioned with corset and gown. Then victory—if not revenge.

Although Marmola Tablets often take off uniformly a pound of flabby fat a day, they are quite harmless (being made of the famous fashionable prescription: ½-oz. Marmola, ½-oz. Fl. Ex. Cascara Aromatic, 3½-oz. Peppermint Water). Consequently, even timid ones are safe in using them, for no ill—not even a wrinkle or stomach ache—will follow their use. 75c secures a large case at any druggist's or by mail from the Marmola Co., 235 Farmer Bldg., Detroit, Mich.

to Kinney—no reflection on Abbott Kinney, the doge of Venice; Schilansky to Shill; Jarwonunscow to Jarnow; Seamansky to Seaman; Ordesenstoi to Odry. Sometimes the same object is obtained by cutting a "little bit off the top," as, for instance, Andsteiner to Ardnt Steyn, and, curiously enough, Steinhardt to S. Harde.

The records at the Courthouse show that Adolph Jules Warner changed his name to Truly Warner, Vahan Seboux Narguildjan to Vahn Seboux, Norman John Oppenheimer to John Norman, and Francisco Sellusky Kadasky to Frank Selius. Max Cohn preferred Sam Wilson and his request was granted. Isaac Bothowschino thought Harry Butler more euphonious, and he now wears that name on his letter heads. Running through the list at the Courthouse at random, one may obtain a fair idea of the various reasons which induce people to change their names.

Hdchhada Shutzehgadsky in his petition, recently filed, stated that he wanted his name changed to H. Shutz because "everybody laughed at his other name," and while it would pass muster in the land where he first saw the light it was not a suitable package for an adopted American to lug around 365 days in the year. The court concurred with the petitioner without remarks.

A corporation, which is an artificial person, has to go through practically the same rigmarole when its name is changed as a human being. After perusing some of the jawcracking names of the petitioners one is certainly led to believe that there is something in a name, after all. That something may be an odious appendage or appurtenance—but that is for the court to determine.

OMMON COMPLAINT.

WORKERS AND CITY POLITICS.

Whether the McNamaras shall or shall not be found guilty of the crimes of which they are accused, no man will ever be able to say that they will not have had an absolutely fair trial, with every intendment in their favor that the law gives them. No journal in Los Angeles has printed a word that would tend to their legal prejudice, even in reply to articles in socialistic newspapers in which indecent attacks have been made upon the grand jury which indicted them, the officers who arrested them, and the District Attorney who is rigidly yet impartially performing his duty in prosecuting them. Unless the evidence shall establish their guilt beyond a reasonable doubt there is no possibility of their conviction. No hearsay or other improper evidence against them will be admitted by the judge before whom they will be tried, even if the District Attorney should attempt—as he will never do—to introduce such evidence.

It is unfortunate that the coming municipal election will probably take place before the McNamara case shall be submitted to a jury, possibly indeed before a jury can be empaneled. It is more unfortunate that one of the candidates for Mayor is one of the principal counsel for the accused. No greater calamity could come to every interest of Los Angelenos than the election of Harriman; partly because his election would be claimed as not only an exoneration of the McNamaras even if proven guilty, and an indorsement by union labor of dynamiting and murder, and partly because an approval of the doctrines which his candidacy represents would inflict a blow upon the reputation of Los Angeles both abroad and at home that would wreck her prosperity, impede her progress and paralyze her industries.

The manufacturing industries of San Francisco have been smitten by the heavy hand of socialistic union labor leaders, and the result of their rule appears in smokeless chimneys, silent factories, and tenantless buildings. It does not need to be told that capital demands safety as a condition precedent to investment. It will not venture out of its strong boxes to place itself at the mercy of destructive politicians, any more than an emigrant will make a home in a city infected with yellow fever. Labor alone is as powerless without capital as a carpenter would be to drive a nail without a hammer.

If the workers of Los Angeles—union or non-union—would thrive; if they desire employment at compensatory wages; if they would build up their homes, they will co-operate to sustain law and order; they will refrain from forming a judgment as to the guilt or innocence of the men accused of dynamiting and murder; they will assert their own manliness and independence; they will refuse to accept the evil counsel of those who would misguide them into idleness and disorder; they will vote according to their political and personal convictions for candidates for municipal office.

NEED FOR A SOCIAL RENDEZVOUS.

What Los Angeles society needs is a recognized social rendezvous, where one can be sure of meeting dozens of one's friends and exchanging compliments and criticisms—and incidentally showing off one's pretty clothes.

London has its Hyde Park, its Ranelagh, its Hurlingham, and there is always something going on. The Academy, Ascot, Goodwood, the horse shows, charity fetes and charity balls, fashionable skating rinks and the river.

Paris has its Bois de Boulogne, where rank and fashion and beauty are wont to drive and to walk, and the salons, Fontainebleau and any number of centers around which the social whirl can revolve.

Yet Los Angeles, the cosmopolitan, which attracts visitors from all parts of the world, a metropolis with an incomparable climate, has absolutely no social center.

One of the first things we ought to do is to create a beautiful park of generous dimensions, with a wide, magnificent avenue down the center, through which to take one's afternoon drive, bordered on either side with a spacious promenade. A first-class band should play at regular intervals, and there should be a membership enclosure, where afternoon tea and light refreshments are served.

What the Marquis of Queensberry is advocating for Chicago sport we should advocate for Los Angeles society. Americans abroad are the first to appreciate the great social rendezvous, where everyone can see and be seen.

In Kensington Gardens, London, there is a large enclosure set apart for afternoon tea and strawberries and cream. The daintiest tables are set in the open air beneath shady trees and huge Japanese sunshades, and one can stroll up there any afternoon in the happy confidence of mingling with a gay crowd of charming people, and probably meeting a number of one's friends.

Ranelagh is a sort of universal country club. Actual membership is exclusive, but not expensive, but members have the privilege of giving daily tickets to their friends which entitle one to all the privileges. The great polo matches, garden fetes, balloon ascensions, as well as all kinds of sport, take place there, and tea is served on the lawns. One long sweep of lawn is given over to promenade, and here all the fashionable world in its smartest gowns strolls leisurely to and fro. In addition to membership there are season tickets and on special days the general public is admitted at a gate fee. A really good band discourses excellent music at most of these social centers in Europe, as it gives a sort of raison d'etre to the gathering, besides shedding a pleasurable atmosphere.

The fashionable parade in Hyde Park, London, and the Bois de Boulogne, Paris, are institutions patronized by all and sundry. In Hyde Park one sees Duchesses and Countesses, Prime Ministers and Princes strolling upon the selfsame promenade as plain Mrs. Smith. Suburbia comes up on Sundays to inspect Mayfair, and Mayfair amiably turns out to be inspected.

In Paris one always drives in the Bois the first day after arrival in order to see who of one's friends are in town. A lot of good in this respect a drive through Westlake Park would do one in Los Angeles!

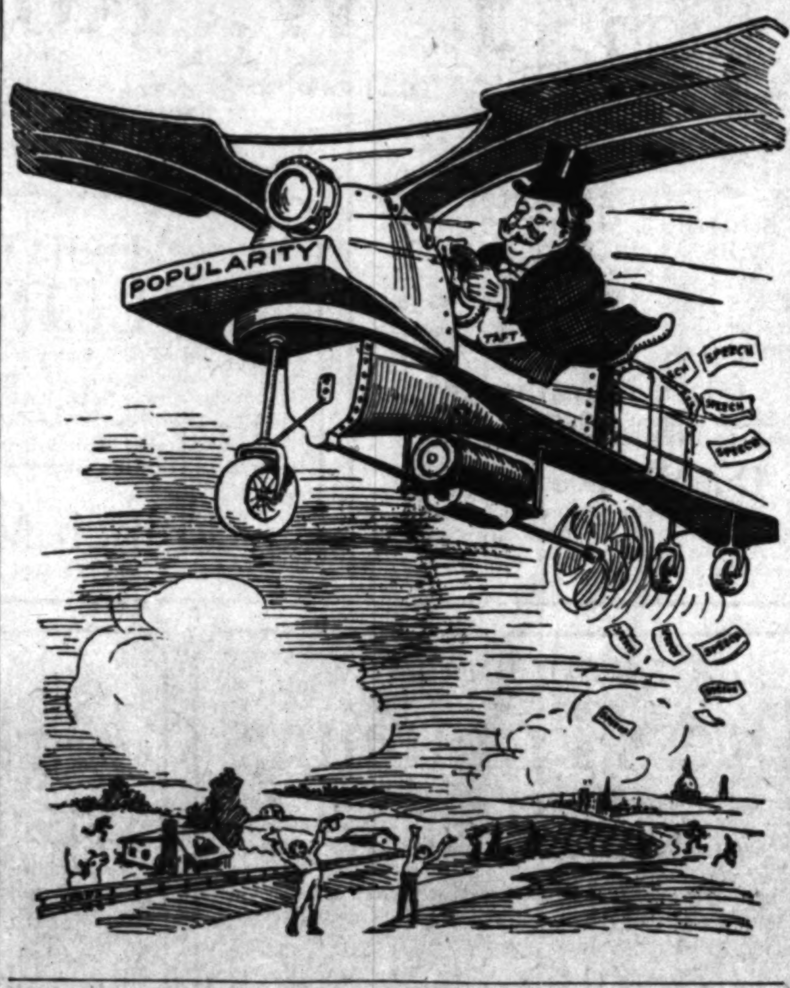
Why, even in India and Africa the social rendezvous is a sine qua non! In Cape Town the Botanical Gardens have a broad avenue running through them, facing Government House, which is lined with smart carriages and automobiles every afternoon during the season, and the shady walks are crowded with the social elect.

And none of these places have half the natural charm that Los Angeles can boast. With so little effort we could eclipse them all.

At present everything is left to the individual hostess, and the burden is too great for her to bear. For when she does entertain on a large and generous scale half her guests don't know each other and the remainder are barely acquainted, so that there is none of that gay small talk continued from the Bois yesterday, none of those intimate little quibs and criticisms and continuous flirtations that make life so delightful in the great European cities.

Wake up, Los Angeles, you have the chance to become the great social mecca of the United States, with your delightful climate, your unsurpassed scenery, your charming and well-dressed women and your strong and wholesome men, if you will but condescend to borrow a leaf from the European social book.

Only Real Cross-Country Flight.



IT PERSISTS.

To expunge the real story of the life and death of Jesus of Nazareth from the history of the civilization of the earth (as the anarchists and some of the socialists would do) would be to cut the tap-root whereby every branch of growth, mental, moral, physical and political, would fall in blackness, and horror and despair would overspread the earth and the kingdoms thereof.

Probably the strongest argument in support of the claims of the Christian world to the story of the birth and divinity of Jesus Christ is to be found in the patient persistence with which Christianity has made its way down through a bewildering jungle of ages of new faiths and old fallacies. From time to time indeed a Voltaire or a Volney, a Tyndale or an Ingersoll has seized the old faith by the throat, but—

"Upon no Israel to its ill the grip of Pharaoh closes, Without the liberating skill of some anointed Moses."

Fiery and zealous cohorts have ever come swiftly to the aid of Christianity, and it has risen vindicated and regenerated, and stronger for the encounter.

From every point of view the world is better for Christianity. It teaches, in the Golden Rule, equal rights. It assists free and just government. It keeps the sympathies alive. Its traditions furnish healthful stimulus for the imagination. The garden of Gethsemane, the vale of Kedron, the dark cedars of Lebanon and the furrowed slope of Mount Calvary, each furnish a picture to the believer's mind more precious than rubies or fine gold.

Some minds find it difficult to understand just why the sufferings of any one man, though he be half divine, should have the power to move the heart more deeply than those of another. There exists the same martyr-spirit in all the saints of history who have burned at the stake, or in other ways have died for their convictions. One singly furnishes the type for the world. Every mental picture must have its type in some symbol. There may, there must be, degrees, but the representative idea is fixed and arbitrary. All there is of originality is in the adaptation of principles. A painting may be larger or better, it may differ in subject and in detail, but in it is nothing creative; only treatment and application of existing principles. And as we comprehend Christ the man, to what idealized extent soever, but stand confused, every one of us, before the idea of Christ the God, because He has no type in all the phenomenal or natural world. In a word, the human mind cannot go outside of itself. But above and beyond all hair-splitting theologies the rankest of unbelievers would not, if he could, eliminate the sweet and sorrowful story from the literature of the world. It is a story sanctified by the blood of martyrs, by the lives of holy men, by the best efforts of inspired hosts of the worshipers of Art. All along, from the sandaled tracks of the disciples at Damascus, down through the ranks of medieval schoolmen, even to the porch where the sweetest of our departed singers penned those sweetest of lines:

"In the beauty of the lilies Christ was born across the sea,
With a glory in his bosom that transfigures you and me."

The way is strewn with beacon lights builded for the feet of the followers in the faith of the Redeemer. If it be an error, a delusion, let us have something better to take its place.

PERSIAN SUFFRAGETTES.

It is odd reading, that even in the midst of all her turbulent upheaval, an agitation for women's rights is in full swing in Persia. Persia, that is 300 years behind the times in most things, is right up to the minute in the feminist movement.

The women's champion in the Mejliss bears the lovely name of Hadji Vakil el Rooy—a name to roll off one's tongue with unction.

It appears that in the bill for the next election the usual clause appears about no woman being allowed to vote, and it was being slurred amongst the obvious things when the aforesaid champion rose in his seat and astonished the world by embarking upon an impassioned speech in which he declared that the women of the harem had souls and rights and should possess votes. The house positively shivered with the shock. Hadji, etc., has up till now been accepted as a serious politician with considerable status in all Europe, as well as Persia. He appealed for support with all the yearning of a lost spirit and, when support failed him, he called upon the Ulema, Mujtehid by name (this gentleman is a sort of glorified leader of the House) to second his just amendment.

This imposing and sacred gentleman was dreadfully shocked and, rising in his place with awful dignity, he solemnly declared that "never in a life of misfortune had his ears been assailed by such an impious utterance!" Then he proceeded to wax eloquent and heartily denied that these women had either souls or rights, and that any such doctrine meant the absolute downfall of Islam!

So appalled was the respectable old gentleman by the dreadful disgrace that had befallen Persia that he implored the reporters to omit all mention of the unfortunate incident, that the Mejliss might not be degraded in the eyes of the world.

Selah!

THE BOGY LAID.

The defeat of reciprocity by Johnny Bull Canuck has relieved the insurgent press of Los Angeles from the unpleasant necessity of saying a good word for President Taft on any subject. "They held some slack allegiance until this hour, but now their swords are their very own," and they can wield them in behalf of the Wisconsin Dervish without inconsistency or embarrassment, and indeed with greater vigor, for did not the Dervish oppose reciprocity? The hot Canucks are wild with delight over the result of the election. Their ballots have consigned to everlasting flames the bogy of annexation to the United States which Champ Clark called from the deeps. It was not really a wraith of anything that ever existed on this side of the line. It was a pumpkin scarehead with blazing eyes, a crooked slit for a nose, and a hideous grinning mouth which the fun-loving Champ placed upon a pole along with the Stars and Stripes, the while he carried terror to the loyal Canuck heart by his derisive shout of annexation. The precious autonomy of "great imperishable Canada" is now out of danger. "The fair dominion is saved for Canadians and the British empire." Let the drumbeats of Britain continue to sound from Labrador to where the waters of Puget Sound wed the Pacific under a license from British batteries.

UNCLE WALT.

The Poet Philosopher.

I do not care a tinker's cuss about those vital things, concerning which the statesmen fuss and crow and flap their wings. I saw my little pile of wood, and pay up as I go, and all the world's serene and good and I am shy of woe. If men would cease to fret so hard o'er public ills and crimes, and tinker round their own back yard, they'd have much better times. It is a narrow, selfish view—of course, that's understood—but folks who're always in a stew don't seem to do much good. I think that I do just as much to help the world along when I mow weeds and sing a Dutch or Alpine yodling song. I do as much when I produce my little roll of bills, and pay the milkman for his juice, the druggist for his pills. I've often noticed that the men who paw the air and bawl, are slow at digging up the yen when bill collectors call. I'll let the nation go its gait, I'll simply let it slide; I couldn't keep the blamed thing straight, no odds how hard I tried; I'll let the statesmen blow the foam from lips that never rest, and I'll just tinker round at home, and do my little best.

THE DESERT'S WORD.

There's an earth that recedes to a far-drooping sky,
There's a crack of the heart at the winds straining by,
With the friendship of God where the circle draws nigh.

There's forever and ever the stretching of space,
The swooning of worlds, the arrival of race,
And the eye meets the sun, looking God in the face.

There, on the wide wing, lies the first naked soul
Of the creature evolved; unrolled as a scroll
Are the heavens within—the plan of life's whole.

There's the infinite swing of the cycles a-far
Of what is and shall be from the moth to the star,
With the vision unblurred, grappling things as they are!

First—The nature treatment: Take a high enema, a raw tomato, a cold bath, and a ten-mile walk. Keep the temperature subnormal.

Second—The indoor treatment: Take a steam massage, a boiling sitz bath, remain very quiet, and don't let the temperature of the room fall below 102. Perspire.

Third—The fasting cure: Refuse absolutely to eat anything for forty days. Allow your system to get into a depleted and emaciated condition so that the poison in the system will be eradicated by natural absorption.

Fourth—The food cure: Eat incessantly. Keep the stomach crowded at all hours of the day and night. Only by filling the stomach and compelling all the organs to work overtime is a cure possible.

Fifth—The diet cure: Eat nothing but nuts, swieback, rolled oats, new mown hay and whole wheat. Chew everything thoroughly.

Sixth—The digestive cure: Eat only indigestible foods. Boiled cabbage, roast duck, fried eggs, salt fish, roast pork, stewed oysters, and boiled potatoes are recommended. Bolt your food.

Seventh—The new thought cure: Remember that disease is sin, and that God is good. Be sweet and think beautiful thoughts.

Eighth—The massage cure: Hire some big husky brute to pommel your spine and bore his knees into the hollow of your back.

Quiet Playhouses.

Welcome news comes to us from Chicago and New York. It is that theaters have begun to dispense with orchestras.

There is really no necessity for orchestras in a theater. They are superfluous, and have quite lost their original meaning. Orchestras are a survival of the old Greek choruses. The Greek chorus had something to do with the drama. But the most that an orchestra does now, with our modern drama, is to butt in and annoy the audience.

One enters the theater a few minutes before the curtain rises and the orchestra is hammering away at some overture. The opening number isn't so bad, for there is almost enough noise, (the rattling of seats, removing of hats, polite conversation, crinkling of silk petticoats and the jingling of coins in the pockets of our predatory rich) to overcome the direful influence of the music.

No one knows what the orchestra is playing before the curtain goes up. No one pays the slightest attention to it; it is merely part of the bustle and din of getting ready for a performance.

But between acts, it is very discomforting. When one has paid several dollars for the purpose of taking a handsome blonde to the theater, one should be entitled to talk to her in peace between acts, without being disturbed by the passionate strains of "Poet and Peasant," Liszt's "Rhapsodies," Von Tilzer's medleys, and other favorites of the union musicians.

How lucky is the man who can sneak to a soda fountain between acts and avoid the clash of cymbals and the trombone blare!

People at the theater always trv to carry on a conversation and listen to the music at the same time. How can an earnest young man talk advantageously to his lady friend when she keeps interrupting him by such remarks as "Ain't that sweet? I just love it;" "I wonder what the name of that piece is;" "I am learning that on the piano."

It is very discouraging especially when one has paid several dollars for this opportunity.

Then again, all orchestras have the habit of playing about eight bars of "Turkey in the Straw" or "Auld Lang Syne," while the curtain goes up. One would think that a curtain couldn't go up unless the orchestra played a jig for it.

And even when the curtain is up, they do not stop their playing. Thev always keep the jig going so that one loses the opening speeches of the play.

Then the orchestra makes a commotion getting out of the theater. They turn off their lights, bang their instruments around, upset at least three music racks, stumble over the chairs, fall down the stairs under the stage, and bang the door. By the time this commotion is over, you have lost most of the opening of the act.

Pretty soon it is time for the heroine to tell the story of her life, or for the wronged female in the black sheath gown to confess to somebody. Or maybe it is time for father to weep because the mortgage on the farm is past due.

We always know when these lugubrious scenes are coming, because the members of the orchestra begin filing back to their places—tripping again up the stairs, banging the doors, arranging the chairs, scraping their feet, gathering up their instruments, and turning on the lights.

It would seem that no actor or actorine could possibly tell a sad story unless the orchestra was playing "Hearts and Flowers." It is bad enough to have these tearful orgies on the stage, without having an orchestra playing.

A Ban on Kissing.

We, of Los Angeles, are not the only noble and virtuous people in the world. Kansas City, evidently envious of our reputation, has got busy herself in making everybody moral.

It was only a short time ago, in that metropolis, that a man and his wife were arrested for kissing each other in public. When brought before the judge they were fined $100 apiece for their indelicate conduct.

I relate this story merely by wav of warning to fond husbands and wives, who may, inadvertently, while strolling through one of the public parks, kiss each other.

When Mrs. Spannos was arrested in Kansas City, she became indignant and said, "I thought a woman could kiss her husband whenever and wherever she pleased. What's the use in being married if you can't love your husband?"

This would seem reasonable. But of course there is another side to it: the terrible influence which public kissing might exert on the minds of the young. Perhaps, after all, kissing should not be encouraged, even among married people.

There are several societies in this countrp which are opposed to this barbaric custom, (for, after all, kissing is merely a relic of the days when we were not civilized.) But as yet, these anti-kissing associations have not been overburdened with membership.

But, let us hop, oh, by brtethren, that, ere long, our minds will be turned to more noble and uplifting things than kissing.

On with the good work!

COSTS TO SHIP CARS.

The cost of shipping an ordinary touring automobile across the Atlantic to Liverpool, where most tours have their beginning, ranges from $50 to $60. An unusually large car might cost the owner $75 for delivery on the other side, while the runabout or "flyabout," as the little machines are sometimes called, may be accepted for $35 or $40. Everything depends on the size, because steamship cargoes are generally measured by cubic feet, unless a bulk cargo is under consideration and can be computed by dead weight.

HARBOR SUIT HURTS PROJECT.

LEGAL DRAGNET SEEMS TO DO MORAL INJUSTICE.

Officials of Pacific Wharf and Storage Company Appeal to City Authorities Not to Destroy Reclamation Project that Has Cost Half a Million—Dodge Monopoly in Fight.

Two men who started a harbor reclamation and improvement project five years ago, when they found San Pedro Harbor "bottled up" as they term it, pleaded with the Mayor and harbor officials yesterday against litigation that may ruin their project which has already cost $500,000. The men were Robert N. Bulla and Thomas Hughes, who originated, with Mark G. Jones, the Pacific Wharf and Storage Company, one of the larger water-front enterprises.

Col. Hughes explained that the announced purpose of the city to bring suit to annul the lease and tide-lands grant held by the company had stopped their supply of funds and that they were in a position "where we cannot go ahead and we cannot quit, without danger of losing most of our investment."

Five years ago Bulla, who is president of the Central Oil Company, and Hughes, who is head of the Hughes Manufacturing Company, visited the harbor to find shipping facilities. "We found everything bottled up," explained Bulla. By consulting the United States Engineer they found that a company that would undertake a reclamation project at the end of Terminal Island would meet with government favor as it would provide a place to deposit the dredging from the channel which the government was making. To acquire this area the company would be expected to build a granite breakwater to protect the fill. Hughes and Bulla decided to undertake the project and the government gave approval.

They have been at work ever since and have constructed a slip back to the acres they have reclaimed. They created available land for storage and warehouse and industrial sites where the ocean waves beat and this year, by lease from the city, added a 1200-foot strip of water front along the channel, giving the city five acres in exchange. Now, after years of work without objection and an investment of half a million, the city has announced its purpose to contest every right held by the Pacific Wharf and Storage Company.

But the city is legally consistent in its attitude toward all tide and submerged lands under the decision of Judge Bordwell. If that decision is the law (and it is now before the Supreme Court,) Leslie R. Hewitt, harbor counsel, believes there should be no discrimination among the other holders of tide-land privileges and that they should all be ousted, just as the Bannings were by the Bordwell decision. That is the reason why the harbor advisory board has urged actions against all water-front concessions. In this net the Pacific company, with others, is caught and its fifty-year grant threatened.

If the work is stopped, Hughes explained, the uncompleted portions will be in danger of destruction by the angry waves and progress cannot be made because, when the suits were evident, the company could no longer get money on its bonds.

T. E. Gibbon of the Harbor Commission suggested at a conference yesterday at the Mayor's office that the Pacific Wharf Company's case is one of fact and that it may be a fact that a portion of their project comes within the Bordwell decision, that on the water front, while the remainder is not affected by it. He suggested a committee of experts to determine this question.

Those who attended the conference besides the Mayor and Gibbon were Hewitt, Councilmen Andrews and Stewart of the Harbor Committee, City Attorney Shenk, Gen. Chaffee and W. M. Humphreys of the Board of Public Works. They all recognized the legal situation as well as the ethical side of the company's case.

Two questions seem paramount. One is a ruling by the officials which will exclude a large part of the Pacific company's project from the rule of tideland domain. The other is compensation for the amounts already invested. To decide either is to establish a precedent which may effect other cases.

In such a complicated situation the subject to the Harbor Advisory Board, which will take it up Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock.

Lack Water Mains.

Cypress Park's demand for an engine house and fire protection failed yesterday when the Mayor and the Fire Commission with Acting Chief O'Donnell visited the region and found only two-inch mains serving the district. Until mains of sufficient capacity are laid neither fire hydrants nor fire fighting equipment would be useful and the Commission decided nothing can be done now.

Preparing Bond Sale.

City Attorney Shenk will report a resolution to the Council Tuesday for the issuance and sale of $525,000 power bonds and $520,000 of harbor bonds. The amounts differ because of the necessity of arranging full annual series for forty years.

BITTER FIGHT OVER ESTATE.

WIDOW AND NEPHEW ARE ON OPPOSITE SIDES.

Will of Late Railroad Builder Had Codicil Which Furnishes Legal Contention—Deposes Spouse as Executor and Names Others. Public Administrator Appointed.

Frank Bryson's appointment by Judge Rives as administrator yesterday signalized what promises to develop into a bitterly fought contest over the estate of Capt. John Cross, who amassed a fortune as a railroad builder. Arrayed against each other are Mrs. Laura L. Cross, his widow, and Albert P. Cross, his nephew, and others. The case was continued to October 24.

The legal contention is a codicil which the contractor added to his will. It deposed Mrs. Cross as executor, naming in her place Albert P. Cross, John E. Loomis and Charles R. Diver.

Cross, who for many years was prominent in civic affairs in Southern California, died on August 5 last. His widow filed for probate his will, dated March 22, 1898, and asked for letters testamentary.

Cross and Loomis, through Attorney Edwin A. Meserve, opposed her action. They petitioned that the codicil, which was executed in March, 1909, and witnessed by F. J. Whiffin and H. C. Goodwin, be given precedence over the will which they alleged it was drawn to supersede.

This move was met by Mrs. Cross, whose attorneys, Case, Barstow and Cross, petitioned the Court to place the Public Administrator in charge. She said that among the properties and cash was a payment of more than $15,000, due shortly on a contract which her husband had carried out for the Southern Pacific.

The petitions of Mrs. Cross set forth that the estate consists of property in Southern California valued at $30,000 and a bank account, the amount of which is not given. Her nephew estimates the estate at more than $50,000.

DOESN'T WANT TO RUST. PICKS PRISON WITH SPORTS.

"Send me to San Quentin. They've got a ball team there and there is none at Folsom," said John Kerney, found guilty of the theft of a suitcase from a Broadway department store, when he was brought before Judge McCormick yesterday for sentence. The Court complied with the prisoner's request, adding that he must stay there three years.

Kerney, once a successful prize-fighter, known as Callahan, appeared well educated. He said he understood there were many athletic diversions permitted at San Quentin, and that much good reading was furnished the convicts. He asserted he was a sort of student when it came to reading and would appreciate having the matter handy.

"I want to say this, too," Kerney remarked before he was led away. "The police of Los Angeles are fine fellows. They don't beat you up like those of other cities."

HITS DIVORCE AGENCY. CASE TAKEN OFF CALENDAR.

When Judge Monroe learned yesterday that Earl L. Metz had dealt with a divorce agency in bringing suit against Mabel D. Metz, he took the case off the calendar.

In questioning the plaintiff, the Court was told the divorce bureau head's name, how the woman had entered into the case and what she had done. Metz also gave the name of an attorney he saw seated in the bureau office.

WIFE GOES ON BOND. BECOMES SHERIFF'S SURETY.

Sheriff Hammel's wife yesterday qualified as one of his sureties in the [illegible] Mrs. Hammel appeared before Judge Hutton and testified she is the owner of property in San Jose, which the court estimated is worth from $250,000 to $300,000.

Sheriff Hammel is bonded in the sum of $112,000. Two of his bondsmen, G. F. Lang and D. M. Sutherland, recently were named as administrators of an estate. Their bondsmen requested that they cancel any surety they had extended. This made it necessary for Sheriff Hammel to look elsewhere for the amount of bond his wife assumed.

DAMAGE SUITS. AGAINST THE TIMES.

In the names of Lebia M. Harvey Elder and Emma Harvey Elder, suit was filed yesterday against the Times-Mirror Company, H. G. Otis, Harry Chandler and Harry E. Andrews, officers, for $50,000 damages, for the death of Arlioni Churchill Harvey Elder in the blowing up last October of the Times Building.

The attorneys are Harriman, Ryckman and Tuttle. As in similar suits threatened by this firm within ten days, the plaintiffs alleged through their counsel that The Times and its officers were negligent in permitting the building to become permeated with explosive gases, and charge that it was not adequately equipped with fire escapes.

Nothing Doing.

Judge Monroe yesterday denied a habeas corpus motion offered by Attorney A. W. Sorenson in an effort to free William J. McCandless, in jail for the eleventh time for failing to pay his wife $15 a month alimony. Counsel for McCandless held that sufficient evidence had not been submitted to show that his client was able to pay the alimony. Judge Monroe declared that "the very fact that this defendant was living with a woman not his wife is evidence enough for me that he could pay this money."

His Trial Set.

B. D. McCoy will be placed on trial in the Superior Court on December 11, charged with the killing of Alfred Peters at El Monte. McCoy pleaded not guilty. There are two versions of the murder. One is that the men got into a quarrel over a bull, and another is that Peters was quarreling with his wife and threatened the defendant for interfering. McCoy is alleged to have fired two charges of buckshot into Peters's body.

Damage Suit.

Appointed by the Probate Court as administrator of his estate, Mary Jane Barr yesterday started suit for $100,000 damages against the Southern California Edison Company for the death of her husband, David M. Barr, an employee of the company. Barr was electrocuted, it is averred, at San Pedro, while in the discharge of his duties. The plaintiff charges the defendant with negligence.

COURTHOUSE NOTES BREVITIES MISCELLANEOUS

DAMAGES FOR LEASE. Suit filed yesterday by the Maier Brewing Company against the Turn Verein Germania, seeks to have executed a lease the plaintiff alleges it entered into with the defendants at No. 312 South Main street. It asserted that the plaintiff first secured a 26-month lease, which it was afterward agreed by the defendants should be extended to five years. The plaintiff avers that the Turn Verein Germania has since leased the property to others, and also asks $6000 damages.

WANT ROAD OPENED. An injunction has been invoked by Joseph Mesmer and others to force Martin Uharriet to reopen a road he recently closed and which was open to the public, the plaintiff asserts, for more than forty-five years. Mesmer states that he is one of the owners of 7436 acres in the Rancho La Ballona, which was purchased from Macedonia Aguilar, one of the original owners, and that the closing of the road affects their property interests.

OFF DUTY. Hoping to get many fish and a coat of sunburn, Deputy County Clerks Robertson, Poluse, Ward, Adams, Riggins, Hughes, Devlin, Noel and Baxter, have chartered the launch Eagle at Long Beach for a day's outing on October 10.

Inferior Courts.

FINDS NO FRAUD IN BACON CASE.

POLICE JUDGE HANDS DOWN IMPORTANT RULING.

Declares Intent of Ordinance Is to Prevent Fraud, but Where Customer Buys Wrapped Goods Covering May Be Weighed in—Dismisses Action Against Packing Company.

In cases where foodstuffs are sold both unwrapped and wrapped in a protecting material to insure against contamination by dust, insects or other agency, Police Judge Chambers yesterday held that the wrappings may be weighed as a portion of the commodity.

The decision was given in the case of R. M. Meek, a meat dealer, against James Ingram, the latter representing the Cudahy Packing Company. Meek, on February 20 last, ordered forty pounds of bacon from the packing company. The meat was delivered and when unwrapped and weighed proved to be several ounces short of the amount ordered.

Ingram was arrested so that the case could be tested. In Police Judge Chambers's court considerable time was consumed in arguing it, as considerable litigation of similar nature would be determined by the disposal of this case.

The complaint was drawn under Section 25 of Ordinance No. 18,000, new series. After discussing the legality of the manner in which the ordinance was passed, Judge Chambers said that he believed the City Council had the power to pass an ordinance providing for the maintenance of a bureau of weights and measures, though it is not specified in the city charter. Consequently, believing that the ordinance was legally drawn, he gave judgment as follows:

"The purpose of the measure is to prevent or punish a class of fraud which ordinarily would pass unnoticed, or if noticed, would be so small as to make it unpleasant or impracticable to protest, but if unchecked would result in great revenue to the party practicing it. Wraped bacon is a staple article. The custom of wrapping it is well known and is to prevent contamination. Either wrapped or unwrapped can be purchased, but in this case wrapper was ordered, and consequently the article can be weighed as ordered." The case was then dismissed.

WAGE CASE DISMISSED. LAW IS AMBIGUOUS.

The case against W. H. Stone, a building contractor, charged with having neglected to pay George Christianson, a former employee, $9 which was due him for labor, was dismissed by Police Judge Chambers yesterday on the grounds that the complaint was incorrectly drawn.

The court did not enter into the constitutionality of the wage law, but declared, nevertheless, that in his opinion the second section of the law which relates to the making of payments for labor at least once a month is ambiguous.

The result of Police Judge Rose declaring Thursday that he believed the wage law is unconstitutional is that yesterday the city prosecutor's office begun preparations to test its constitutionality in the higher court.

WANTS TEST CASE. SAYS ARREST PENDING.

No more cases will be brought in Police Court under the day of rest law against proprietors of hotels and rooming-houses, according to a statement of Henry H. Lyon, Assistant Deputy Commissioner of the State Bureau of Labor Statistics, yesterday afternoon. He will proceed against a large corporation and endeavor to get it to carry the case to the Supreme Court for a test.

Lyon said yesterday that an investigation is now being made in the affairs of a Los Angeles public service corporation and an arrest will probably be made on Wednesday or Thursday to force a test of the case. He expects to receive instructions from the headquarters of the bureau this week, when he will proced.

Goes to Jail.

A. Hahn, charged with having stolen a speedometer from the Pacific Electric garage Friday, was sent to jail for sixty days by Police Judge Rose yesterday.

Pays the Penalty.

George Melvin was sent to jail yesterday for thirty days on a charge of having stolen a suitcase from No. 235 Hewitt street, Friday night. It was the property of Harry Hilman.

TO ENTERTAIN MISSIONARIES.

Under the auspices of the Baptist City Union, the party of outgoing missionaries, who will appear at the Auditorium this morning, will be entertained at the First Baptist Church on Friday afternoon, from 3 to 5 o'clock.

serve both Pasadena and the north and another to serve Downey avenue and the east a true solution. He conferred with the Los Angeles Railway officials and they concurred in the idea and promised to share the expense. To vitalize the plan Dromgold was sent to the City Council as the first ward member and he succeeded in carrying it through, having been made a member of both the Bridge and Finance Committees of that body.

To make the plan all it should be Dromgold gained the consent of the Southern Pacific for a right of way across its web of tracks and its dedication of a strip twenty feet wide along Buena Vista street (now North Broadway,) so that the street could be widened as an approach to the west end. The twenty-foot strip is about half a mile long. In addition the railroad agreed to share the cost of improving this street and gave the city $10,000 bonus for a slice of the hill in Elysian Park, near the west end of the Pasadena-avenue bridge, to increase its track facilities at this narrow point. It took until August, 1909, to get all these matters arranged, but Dromgold never lacked for effort. The first appropriation was made in 1909, and the work was begun the following winter under a contract with the Union Iron Works.

Their construction work immediately became an object of great interest. High towers 1000 feet apart sustained the cable tram over which the material for the piers was transported. The river bed furnished the sand and gravel for the mammoth piers that rose slowly from below the surface.

The general facts about the construction of the Buena Vista bridge (that is its official name, an apt one, too, because it preserves the name of the former street and because it offers a "good view,") are interesting. Its piers are thirty-six feet below the level of the river bed and forty feet above. They rest on piles driven to bedrock. When these great holes were made they had to be filled with solid concrete, and represent enormous weight.

The bridge has seven spans varying from 105 to 119 feet in length. The four river spans are ribbed with hollow spraddel wall construction, as shown in the illustration. The railroad spans at either end are solid and filled with earth.

The bridge is 968 feet over all, not including approaches, is 70 feet wide, has sidewalks five feet nine inches wide, and a roadway 56 feet wide. The remainder of the width is taken up with the ornamentation.

The roadway and sidewalks have been filled with earth and this will be graveled at once and let settle for two winters, after which it will be paved with asphalt. The treatment of the "Y" aproaches on the east will be the same until the thirty-nine foot fills have settled and improvement is feasible without danger.

Only a portion of the sidewalks will be cemented for the same reasons, but all the remainder of the superstructure will be completed. The ornamentation of the floor includes an artificial stone balustrade with balconies, twelve in number, and at either end pylons of artificial stone twenty-one feet high, surmounted by entablature. The pylons with pedestals and entablatures will reach a height of thirty-seven feet and present an artistic effect. The balconies will be view points where the people traversing the bridge may rest or enjoy the mountain landscape.

SOME WEIGHT HERE.

To build this monolithic structure, 1000 feet long and 50 feet high, 11,200 cubic yards of concrete were used. Estimating a cubic foot of concrete

Colonial Furniture Always the Fashion

Paradoxical as it may seem, the furniture that popular today—that now holds first place in American homes—is the furniture that found back in the early Colonial days—in the workshops of our forefathers.

While chivalry and patriotism are sentimental factors in the popularity of this its supremacy is due to the beauty, sturdiness, characteristic of those early which have been so faithfully preserved in the ductions of today.

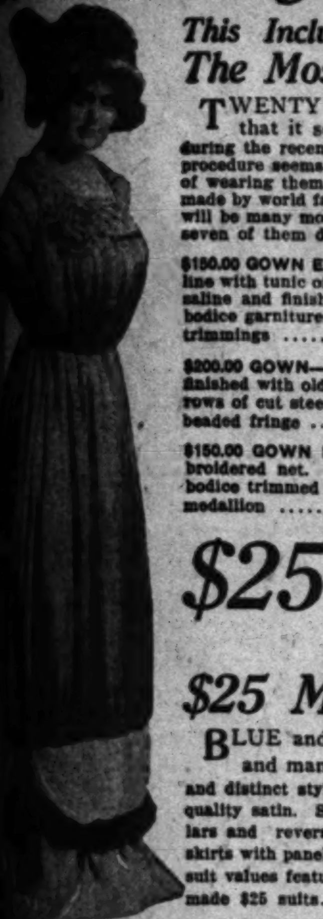
traordinary Announcement --- Twenty $100 to $200 Imported Gowns



This Includes All Models Shown in the Recent Fashion Show---Paquin, Poiret and Doucet Represented The Most Remarkable Sale and Greatest Opportunity Ever Offered Los Angeles Women

TWENTY women tomorrow are going to secure twenty of the most beautiful gowns shown in Los Angeles, at a price so far below their real value that it seems insignificant indeed. The 5th Street Store does not carry in regular stock such high priced gowns as were displayed in our windows during the recent Fashion Show. They were bought expressly for the occasion and now that it is over every one will be sacrificed Monday. Radical as this method of procedure seems we nevertheless believe it to be good business as we would rather take a loss on these garments now and afford our customers the satisfaction and pleasure of wearing them all the season than to sell them for less than regular price later on. No merchandise event has ever brought such a startling value. To secure such gowns made by world famous dress makers expressing the latest whim of fashion at $49.50 is a value absolutely without a parallel in this city. Remember there are only twenty. There will be many more than that number of women who will want one. So if you wish to participate in this extraordinary sale be here early. No two alike—exclusive models—seven of them described here.

ster Hotel. The occasion was marked by the presence of a number of ladies at the head table, and the speaker was well received. She is a glib talker and a good story teller, and her address was generally devoted to recounting the struggle of the women of Chicago for the passage of a child-labor law.

Miss Todd said, in opening, that she came to give some information at first hand; not through post-graduate courses at the universities, but from life. Touching upon the subject of equal suffrage, she said:

"It is hard to realize just what this struggle for woman suffrage means all over the civilized world. There is no question of the result here in California, where we have the best men back of us, with a strong civic spirit to aid us. Women have a natural instinct for the protection of human life, and we are asking to be given the protection of the working people. Women have been struggling along at a disadvantage, because they can have no voice in the execution of the laws, and it is this that has aroused them going to work to make a lot of new laws. If there is anything that makes me sick, it is this everlasting rushing after new laws. We have enough of them now, and our duty will be to see them enforced. There are only men and women in the world, and it is our duty to go hand-in-hand to work will stand by us and give us a right to a voice in the affairs of the country."

The speaker was introduced by Judge Waldo M. York, who said: "We are not gallant enough to give the women this right without a contest, but they are

Then and Now.

URY REPORT IN LONG AGO.

resentment Sixty Years Old Remarkable Document.

ooming Spirit Rife Even in Those Distant Days.

oints Out Few Grievances Needing Correction.

Describing Southern California in xtravagant language, dealing with nditions in Los Angeles that the ajority of the present residents of e city never knew existed, and conituting as a whole a unique document is the report of the Grand Jury hich convened two years after the iscovery of the great western El orado.

The presentment, as it is self-designated, was filed with the County lerk of February 7, 1851, by A. H. lark, the foreman of the jury.

It was brought to light yesterday y Sam Kutz, clerk of Department ight of the Superior Court. He ad it stowed away in his treasure hest of relics of the early days of alifornia.

The document is penned on pieces f paper which were pasted together n a long strip. The handwriting, he ink now slightly faded, is excellent. The only peculiarity noticeble is the method of forming the etter "a."

The report speaks of a "laborious ession of three days," thus drawing sharp contrast with the jury of ixty years later which has now been n session within a few days of an ntire year.

FULL OF PROMISE.

The instrument in full follows:

"The Grand Jury for Los Angeles ounty, after a laborious session of hree days, have brought its manifold usiness to a close. In reviewing our ast labours, we find that our citizens ave much to pride themselves upon, ocated as they are in the very Garden of California, unequalled in fertility, possessing the most salubrious f climates, surrounded by means and acilities, the good and right use of hich would secure to us all the omforts, conveniences and luxuries f life, it would seem as if we wanted or nothing to make us a flourishing nd a prosperous people.

"It is true that, heretofore our orthern friends have enjoyed the enefits accruing from their close roximity to the Golden Sands of the Western El Dorado, but late developments are unfolding to us rich mines nd placers in our immediate vicinity hich bid fair to redound greatly to he advantage of our county.

"This is the bright side of the picture. In contra, the Grand Jury have been led to notice a few grievances under which we, as a people, are labouring. These matters will form the burthen of the appended Presentment, which in obedience to custom and duty we hereby present to the notice of the citizens of Los Angeles county.

"First. In relation to Public Education, the Grand Jury find that our city through its Council has employed a teacher who receives a stipulated amt. from the City Treasury. This is exclusively an English school. The pupils are taught in English and as a consequence the great majority of our population receives no benefit whatever.

"Now and for some time to come it is reasonable to suppose that the American population will form but a small moiety of our resident citizens. A similar disproportion will also exist in the revenues accruing to the city and county. Thus presenting us with two grand reasons why our native population should be in the enjoyment of good educational privileges. It must be evident to all that a Spanish pupil can receive but little information from a preceptor who is entirely ignorant of the Spanish language. Hence we find that the city school now established is composed of a few American pupils only.

"In view of these matters we would suggest the propriety of establishing a school to be under the direction of a master perfectly conversant with both languages to be supported from the city treasury to a similar extent as that already in operation, so that while obtaining an education through the medium of his own vernacular, the native pupil would receive every facility for obtaining a knowledge of the English language, which sooner or later is destined to become the common medium of communication throughout the State.

JAIL DIET.

"Second. The grand jury after an examination of the County Jail are of the opinion that said building is totally unfit for its ostensible object, viz., the safe keeping of prisoners, and we therefore present said jail as a nuisance. So far as relates to the treatment and condition of prisoners, the grand jury are of opinion that there should be a radical change in the fare afforded them.

"Dried meat, hard bread and water may be the just desert of condemned criminals, but men incarcerated upon suspicion merely should receive that treatment due to a human being, and we would therefore recommend that the jailer be allowed a sum sufficient to furnish the prisoners under his charge with good and wholesome food.

"Our attention has been called also to the fact that the inmates of the jail are heavily ironed, whether confined upon suspicion or serving out their sentence. In this course, we see neither law nor justice. We think it at variance with the very spirit of our institutions to load down an innocent man (for every prisoner is considered such until proven otherwise) with chains, as if he were the basest of outlaws.

"But if, owing to the inefficiency of the jail or other reasons, it appear necessary to iron, we say let it be done in every instance. We look upon that policy that manacles a Spaniard for the commission of an offense and allows an American (guilty of the same thing,) merely because he is an American, the greatest enlargement, a course entirely at variance with law and justice and very impolitic in the present state of feeling in and among our population.

POLICE PROTECTION.

"Third. In regard to the provisions made for the keeping of the public peace and good order, the grand jury are of opinion that this matter is susceptible of much improvement as at the present time. Our citizens appear to have but little protection from the efforts of evil-disposed persons. To such an extent does this thing exist that it has given us a reputation abroad for rowdyism and insecurity, which has and continues to affect us as a people, both in a pecuniary and moral view.

"We would therefore suggest the propriety of appointing, in addition to our City Marshal, a sufficient number of effective policemen whose duty it shall be to notice every infringement of law by apprehending offenders, when offending under their immediate notice or upon information given by other persons; and to secure the impartial execution of these matters we would say let it be made obligatory upon our civil authority from Sheriff down to take notice of every offense coming under his knowledge by observation or information at once. In default of which they should be made liable to a prosecution and fine.

"We would further suggest that in the selection of any future officers, care be taken that men are chosen who will best fill the bill, taking care that no renegades from justice (as heretofore) shall occupy a position in any portion of our civil administration."

How Many Men Keep Youthful

(From the Social Register)

It is well known that within recent years the men have become extensive patrons of beauty specialists and masseurs. Not only the fastidious, but men generally who have a care for personal appearance. This has also led to the employment by many of means calculated to enhance or preserve physical attractiveness, especially by those who abhor "beauty parlors."

Of these, perhaps the most widely used is ordinary mercolized wax—which explains the mystery of the silver-haired gentleman with the boyish face. The mercolized wax, obtainable at any drug store, is applied after shaving, the same as cold cream, only not rubbed in. This gradually absorbs the dead and half-dead cuticle in tiny particles, revealing the fresher, healthier-hued skin beneath. To secure best results many apply the wax at night, washing it off in the morning. Women not only encourage husbands in this, but use the treatment themselves.

$3.50 Recipe Free, For Weak Men.

Send Name and Address Today—You Can Have it Free and Be Strong and Vigorous

I have in my possession a prescription for nervous debility, lack of vigor, weakened manhood, failing memory and lame back, brought on by excesses, unnatural drains, or the follies of youth, that has cured so many worn and nervous men right in their own homes—without any additional help or medicine—that I think every man who wishes to regain his manly power and virility, quickly and quietly, should have a copy. So I have determined to send a copy of the prescription free of charge, in a plain, ordinary sealed envelope to any man who will write me for it.

This prescription comes from a physician who has made a special study of men and I am convinced it is the surest-acting combination for the cure of deficient manhood and vigor failure ever put together.

I think I owe it to my fellow man to send them a copy in confidence so that any man anywhere who is weak and discouraged with repeated failures may stop drugging himself with harmful patent medicines, secure what I believe is the quickest-acting restorative, upbuilding, SPOT-TOUCHING remedy ever devised, and so cure himself at home quietly and quickly. Just drop me a line like this: Dr. A. E. Robinson, 3750 Luck Building, Detroit, Mich., and I will send you a copy of this splendid recipe in a plain ordinary envelope free of charge. A great many doctors would charge $3.00 to $5.00 for merely writing out a prescription like this—but I send it entirely free.

THE POLITICAL WATCHTOWER.

The unusually heavy registration for the State election on constitutional amendments has not escaped the suspicion that, perhaps, a part of the increase is traceable to the floating population that has been invited to Los Angeles by the red elements. I am told that there is evidence that surprising increases in some precincts are due to red enterprise, and that the Good Government Organization has undertaken an investigation of the facts. Letters sent to some of those who are registered have been received by some one, though frequent inquiry for the individuals to whom they were addressed has not borne fruit. In other cases the mail has been returned because the postal authorities have been unable to find the persons.

It is not improbable that there is much illegal registration on the books, but there is also much duplication. For instance, many men who have changed residence do not ask transfer, but register again. Others who registered as Republicans or Democrats have made a new registration as Socialists. To untangle all this is a big job for the registration bureau and in many cases duplication must stand.

The thousands of illegal names on San Francisco's register were found last week by the simple process of mail inquiry. It was asserted that over 17,000 names had been "not found" by the postoffice and it is probable that a great many of them were of fictitious persons who were to repeat through the vicious classes, where the opportunity to do so without much danger was made possible by corrupt election boards. In the coming city election, registration for which closes a week from next Thursday, the election boards are not likely to be of the character that will make fraudulent voting possible through connivance with repeaters or the red machine.

Still it will not be amiss if the registration where it bears evidence of suspicion be investigated fully.

A conflict of dates between radicals and reds has caused the Harriman opening, announced for next Wednesday at Temple Auditorium, to be postponed until Thursday. The reason is that Gov. Johnson and his radicals are to hold the stage Wednesday night by previous arrangements.

The Good Government Organization, which is managing Alexander's fight, is now making up its mind when to start the "big doings," but it has already arranged a number of small meetings and is selecting its speaking staff.

Petitions of fifteen candidates for municipal office have been checked and found sufficient. The list now ready for the ballot includes Mayor Alexander and Assessor Mallard and thirteen candidates for the Council.

W. H. Rhodes, formerly a member of the Council, who served two terms, has taken out a petition for renomination.

Fred M. Roberts, colored, an undertaker at No. 1152 South Los Angeles for the Board of Education. His candidacy is based on the theory that the 18,000 negro residents of Los Angeles should have a representative. Roberts is a graduate of the Los Angeles High School and of Colorado College, where he became an A.B.

THE WATCHMAN.

Ever Read It?

HERE'S WHERE FICTION'S STRANGER THAN TRUTH.

BY LOU GUERNSEY.

AN OLD HIGH-DOMED, crooked-nosed Antedeluvian once said by the ray of the lantern that truth is stranger than fiction.

By-the-bye, what is the stuff we call fiction?

Harken to this, reader of fiction—dost thou not think the answer is here?

"Oh, have you read Thomas Ella Harding Caine's 'Trail of the Lonesome Apple Tree,' Adeline? You haven't? Why, it's just too sweet for anything. I've read it twelve times and am just finishing the last chapter again. Oh, the last chapter is just gorgeous, dearie."

"Oh, I just finished Laura Rudard Graham Glyn's latest novel, 'Black Cats and White Mice;' it's just great! You must read it, Clarice, I know you'll like it."

And so on ad infinitum we peruse the slush called fiction. For the benefit of those persons who haven't the time but the inclination to inspect a real long, live twentieth century, honest - to - goodness - spooney-wooney fiction tale the following brief one is offered. "He learned the soap business, but won her just too late," or better, perhaps, "You can't win 'em unless you've got a honk-honk-glad-wagon and the pale blue eyes," would be the title.

Listen!

CHAPTER I.

A beautiful stillness was in the air, disturbed only by the occasional croaking of the frogs in the town swamp. The dying sun dyed the sky a beautiful rosy pink in the west, where it was sitting—no, setting—not like a setting hen, but setting like a setting sun, which doesn't set itself anywhere, but sets itself out of sight. In a word the sun was setting. The faint low of the kine and the halloo of the hired man sounded pleasantly over the valley of the Tehachepi, which wimpled gently over the silvery pebbles which pebbled the soft river bed.

CHAPTER II.

Etheldreida was sitting on the veranda. Jack came gasolining up in his 800 mule-power tourabout. A delicate flush suffused his alabaster cheeks. She was in love, but didn't know it. It was an exquisite setting for a romance. The glad wagon stopped jerky like and Jack rushed up to the veranda exclaiming: "I just motored down from Newlenox for the week-end, Miss Fairshonts; outrageously warm in the city, dontcherknow?"

"Charming of you to come, Mr. Rockybilt; please sit down. The Vanderwads and Asterplutes are here for the week-end, too."

"Oh, we'll have a lovely time playing bridge and ping-pong! I just love ping-pong, don't you, Etheldreida?" purred Jack as he deftly weather with so much bridge whist and diablo, and all that sort of stuff. Papa says he is all out of patience with me. He wants me to learn the soap business; just fawncy that."

"How perfectly absurd."

"I refused and he cut me off without a cent."

"Oh, heavings, Jack—I mean Mr. Rockybilt, Isn't that abominable?"

"I wish you would call me Jack always."

CHAPTER III.

Etheldreida flushed a beautiful mock turtle green and murmured softly, "Jack," and he knew that she loved him madly.

She fled into the house and Jack lighted another cigarette and went to see her father, but the old gezabo handed him the blue envelope because he wouldn't learn the soap business. Old Man Fairshonts had made his in glue and was proud of it.

"No peg-topped Handsome Harry breakfast food kiddo shall ever drive in double harness with my gal," said he, brutally, and Jack slowly froufroued his way out to his father's red motor wagon and asked the "choof" to crank her up. Etheldreida was weeping on the back porch as Jack whirred away, dejected like. While on his way to town Jack was stopped by the town postmaster and chief of the fire department, who handed him a missive. With feverish haste he ripped it open with his pearl-handled knife and eagerly devoured—its contents, a look of joy lighting his manly countenance.

With Billy Ruess speed he beat it back to the Fairshonts's mansion and found Etheldreida drying her eyes on the porch, also on a delicate real Mexican drawnwork handkerchief, which bespoke untold wealth.

"It's all right, sweetheart," he cried, as he fairly aeroplaned from the auto with the grace of a South African gadzooks. "My silver mines in Death Valley have panned out and I am now a billionaire, with the accent on the billion."

"Oh, Jack?" she exclaimed with girlish simplicity, tears of joy glistening in her matchless orbs, and he bent slowly and kissed her scarlet lips which she had purchased at the corner drug store a few hours previously.

Next day Cupid Watson at the Courthouse presented them with a marriage license and they are now living in Broadcloth Heights. Mrs. Rockybilt will be at home every day in the week. Jack is never at home.

CHAPTER V.

And they lived happy ever after and then some.

[illegible] Boston there [illegible] in Providence, [illegible] Pittsburgh, Chi-cago and Boston. Now the idea has taken strong hold upon the West, and California has inaugurated a movement for open-air class and study rooms for her children that promises to revolutionize our educational system.

During the past year there have been such schools in three distinct parts of the State, all of which have proved successful beyond the greatest hopes of their promoters, and in every instance plans are under way to extend and improve the system.

These pioneers are the cities of Oakland and San Bernardino, and the little Dehesa school in San Diego county. Only in the former city was there erected a special building, San Bernardino and Dehesa school starting out with the makeshifts offered by chance.

The most primitive equipment is that of Dehesa school in the foothills east of El Cajon Valley. One warm day in the early part of the year the county superintendent, Hugh H. Baldwin, was visiting this little school and asked the students if they would not rather study out of doors. An enthusiastic chorus of affirmatives decided him, and a number of old desks that had been stored under the building were taken out and arranged in rows under the big pepper tree. The children themselves were the most enthusiastic exponents of the plan and worked earnestly for its success.

The result of the experiment is stated by the teacher, Miss Marie Coates, in a letter to Superintendent Baldwin as eminently satisfactory. She says she finds that the discipline is no problem at all. The fresh air stimulates the pupils and they are so glad to be out in the open and so anxious to stay, that they give even more attention to their work than before. The greatest punishment I could inflict would be to send them into the schoolhouse."

EXAMPLE FOLLOWED.

That this first attempt will bear fruit if an imperishable quality is evidenced by the fact that during the spring eight other schools adopted the plan of having out of door study classes, always with the greatest success. San Diego county is so pleased with the plan that Superintendent Baldwin advocates the establishment of open-air classes on this same primitive plan at every school, and the erection of suitable buildings as soon as possible. There are at present under construction two buildings for such schools, one at Normal Heights, San Diego, and the other at El Cajon.

In San Bernardino the beginning was less primitive, although the building was of an incidental nature. There was a serious congestion in the seventh grade in the fall of 1910, but fortunately the Board of Education had previously purchased land adjoining the Fourth-street school for playground purposes, on which stood a large brick dwelling house. City Superintendent Conrad received permission to fit up an open-air room in this building.

In Oakland the experiment was commenced likewise, in the fall of 1910 and has proven to be pre-eminently successful. Dr. N. K. Foster, head of the department of health and sanitation, reported:

"The fresh-air children received no extra care or food, taking the same studies, playing in the same yard, and eating and sleeping as did the other children. The average gain was strongly in favor of the fresh-air children, the inside ones gaining 2.36 pounds, the fresh-air children, 3.7, or 55 per cent. more. Their gain intellectually was also good, each one earning a promotion and some doing two terms work in one."

FRESH AIR VITAL.

The fact of children suffering from malnutrition doing the same work with nothing different except constant fresh air during school hours, and gaining more than normal children is proof that fresh air is a vital necessity to healthy development.

The movement has now become practically general. It is no longer an experiment—it is a proven success. Cities everywhere throughout the State are taking the matter up, and the crusade is on in earnest for fresh air for the boys and girls during the most vital, physical and intellectual period of their lives.

In Los Angeles there are to be open-air study rooms, lunch rooms and reading rooms in all the new buildings, while separate one-room buildings are being erected at Normandy avenue and Sixty-sixth street schools. In Pasadena there has just been constructed a nine-room grammar school building in which windows occupy a large part of the wall space on at least one side of the room, the windows themselves being adjustable to open outward with a sliding motion, and being fitted with venition blinds which admit light and air over the entire window space. There is also under construction, a high school which will have open-air study rooms on the style of the roof garden.

The little city of Colton has fallen into line, and El Centro is planning a high school building which promises to be one of the finest in the State.

Grace Benson says: "Had anyone told me such wonderful results could be accomplished so quickly, I positively would not have believed it. My arms and hands were covered with freckles; my neck was dark and wrinkled from the use of high collars; my hands were tanned and my knuckles red. All these defects were removed by one application of a free prescription, which I am pleased to give to anyone. It's just as simple as it is effective. Go to any drug store and get an empty 2-oz. bottle and a 1-oz. bottle of Kulux Compound. Pour the entire bottle of Kulux into the 2-oz. bottle, add one-quarter ounce of witch hazel and fill with water. Prepare this prescription at your own home, then you know you are getting it right. Apply night and morning. It makes the skin soft and beautiful, no matter how rough and ungainly your hands and arms are. One application will astonish you. I have given this prescription to thousands of women, and they are all just as enthusiastic as I am. Try it on your neck and shoulders, and you will be agreeably surprised.

FACTS, FEATURES AND FANCIES FOR ~~WOMEN~~ AND MEN

BY OLIVE GRAY

DAILY FASHION HINT: The fur pieces of the season, which are in many cases of exaggerated size and style, have names which are most appropriate. For example, a huge shoulder affair, with square corners which extend low at back and bust, is called a "shoulder rug." One of the enormous muffs is named a "granny muff." Many of the so-called "furs" are not furs at all, in the sense of giving warmth to the wearer; but are merely charming accessories of style. For instance, a set with large scarf and muff, is made from chiffon, merely "polka dotted" with fine fur.

During the rush of the Fashion Show, I chanced to be seated at a small table in a cafe with an interesting girl and we began chatting about the grand panorama and incidents thereof.

She struck me as extraordinarily thoughtful and as we touched upon the all important question as to women and their work, I learned that she was at the head of a large force of office girls.

"I feel," said she, "and I am sure is the case, that business girls need most of all a refined and quiet place where they can meet, read or study if they wish, hear good music and see good pictures; in other words, where they can find an uplift from the sordid cares of every day."

"As it is now—where can refined and cultured business girls—and there are many such—find entertainment suited to their needs? If they attend the theater, they hear principally questionable songs, or see acts filled with inuendo. They are too fatigued, after the day in business, to dress and go out socially, or to entertain at home. As a result, their minds fall into a narrow rut and they are apt to become sullen and rather out of key with life."

Then we discussed the possibilities of a great business girls' club, in the downtown center. Of course, it will come some time—but it can scarcely be started by busy business girls, however, glad they would be to support it, when once it was brought into being.

Let us hope that, when days of leisure come, some great-hearted woman who has sympathy and time, will begin this good work.

So Beautiful.

An expansive glass case, beside the door of one of the fine art stores on Broadway, contains some beautiful specimens of new leather work. There are pocketbooks and handbags; and what attracted attention most, table pads of soft morocco and suede in subdued shades, with leather over-sets upon rich embroidered satins, and in some instances over real peacock's feathers, sewed beneath the openwork designs, the soft iridescent tresses peeping out beyond, in a most original way. When you see another of these odd artistic pads, you rub your eyes—for you begin to think that millinery is surely "breaking in" to everything this year. It has the corners of leather openwork, set over coarse gold bullion mesh.

That Superb Adam Bedroom Suite.

Although I'm under ban to say more about the F—s—n S—ow; I hope you did not fail to see that superb bedroom suite in the Adam period, in a Broadway furniture house. In tones so soft and mellow, both the woodwork and cane—and with such exquisite coloring in the painted panels, it is a true work of art.

Hints on Home Nursing.

While studying the comfort of the family, why not include a few emergency remedies for use in case of sudden illness? There are always some warm days in Indian summer, days which tell on the health of delicate old people, those suffering from extreme fatigue, from physical or mental exertion, invalids and sufferers with chronic ailments. The continued heat of summer leaves them weakened, with vitality at low ebb, so that they are unable to fight a winning battle against the returned hot days.

Sudden hot spells following cool days cause many heat strokes. Perspiration is absolutely necessary at the first symptoms of being overcome, for it is the medium through which the temperature of the body is reduced. Once it ceases, the victim is in a dangerous condition.

The moment the slightest faintness is felt, cease all exertion and relax. Place a cool compress of cold water on the head and lie down. Among the surest symptoms of seizure are headache, dizziness, pain in the back, legs and stomach, and a tingling sensation, in the hands and feet. The victim falls, his face becomes flushed or very pale, head and neck are hot to the touch and often there is a twitching of the body.

Raise the head and shoulders, dash cold water in the face and pack the head in ice. Use aromatic spirits of ammonia for a stimulant, and allow the patient sips of iced water.

Paleness demands another treatment. In such cases the temperature is below normal, requiring hot baths and blankets. When a high temperature is accompanied by convulsions, a cold bath followed by vigorous friction is effective. Keep ice to the head. If ice is unavailable, pour cold water from a considerable height onto the face to get the stimulus of impact. Keep up the treatment until the pinched blue look yields to a rosy hue.

Inexpensive Bridal Outfits.

With the recent exhibition of beautiful bridal array, and with a love of pretty things for this occasion, the great one of her life, beating strong in the heart of every girl, a timely article in a current magazine is one telling how it is possible to buy a pretty wedding trousseau, or at least the greater part of it, with $100.

Of course, as in many of the "inexpensive" lists, many of the articles are constructed from "left overs," but still there are some excellent suggestions in the article.

A Fall Party.

A "Topsy Turvy Party" is something new in entertainments for children. The invitations read: "To a Topsy Turvey Party you are not desired to come. But wear your hat upon your feet and your shoes upon your thumb. At 3 p. m. on Friday. P. S. Please don't come."

When the little ones arrive they are discovered to be clad in all manner of outlandish attire. One has her dress on buttoned in the front, instead of the back and another has her hair braided down over her nose. One has a white shoe and stocking on the left foot and a black one on the other. They have no end of fun over the comical costumes. "Alice in Wonderland," or parts of it, are read aloud and a game of "animal consequences" is played, where each draws the head of an animal, then folds the paper and passes it on to the next, who draws the body, and to another, who draws the feet. After the party is over the girls all ask to see the boys to their homes.

That Well Behaved Fountain Pen.

For years I said, and believed it, that there could be no good fountain pen; there could be only bad and worse. But I know better now. I have used mine for nearly a year; and it behaves just as well now as it ever did and that is saying that it behaves perfectly. It writes just as plain as I can; and it is most convenient to carry in a hand bag, as it never spills ink. When I want to write a check, for instance—well, if my bank account would only act as easily as does that fountain pen, I would buy all the Broadway glories of the F——Sh!

Dolls Have Fashion Show.

There! I have said it again! But—have you seen the Doll's Show at that "Just Dolls" place, down on Broadway? They are all dressed in their very best, and are as gay as the larger "wax ladies" in other windows. I hope every little girl has had a peep at them—or will have.

A Stir in Wax Society.

If I had anything to do with writing Society, I would say, in Sunday's Times, something like this: "A stir has been created in wax society by the arrival of a group of belles, who reached here from the east, to attend the United Fashion Show. They are extremely beautiful, and it is said that their talents are amazing, in their wax lady-like way. They are a distinct addition to Los Angeles wax society."

They held their first formal reception at the corner of Third and Broadway on Wednesday night.

LETTERS TO "THE TIMES."

The Recall of Judges.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The high character, learning and ability of Senator Works entitle his utterances to respectful and earnest consideration.

He says he remains opposed to the recall of judges, but will vote in favor thereof, because he wishes to secure the recall of other officials and there can be no separation on the ballot.

Had he changed his opinion as to the judiciary recall, the logic of his position would be apparent; his vote would not be subject to criticism as inconsistent. Instances are many where thoughtful, sincere, upright men have altered their opinions on great questions. Two of our intellectual giants "swapped" positions on the tariff. Webster, at first, was a free-trader, while Calhoun was a protectionist. Then Webster became a protectionist and Calhoun a free-trader. So, England's "Grand Old Man" and profound scholar, Gladstone, turned several complete somersaults.

But Senator Works has not retracted an iota of his objections to the judiciary recall. His sagacious and unanswerable arguments still stand unshaken in his mind. Does he believe that the advantages he thinks will be obtained by recall of the other officials outweigh objections to recall of judges?

Will the recall of other officials obviate the dangers which will ensue should the recall be applicable to judges also? He has stated the evils which will result; these and additional arguments have been forcibly set forth in The Times with quotations from the political philosophers of the past; they need not be reiterated here.

History abounds with warnings. Thucidides says he wrote "the truth of both what has happened and will hereafter happen again, according to human nature." Dyonysius says: "History is the pursuit of wisdom to be gotten from examples." Bolingbroke, referring to this, and Macaulay quoting him, say: "History is philosophy teaching by examples." It teaches that mankind is emotional and impulsive, apt to act without reason, under hysterical excitement. Both men and women are liable to be swayed by passion and prejudice, and go to extremes which afterwards they themselves regret, as appears by the records of the remotest "syllable of recorded time."

Had the recall been in use, the statesmen who set our Constitution working would have been removed, even Washington. Hamilton, also, before, as Webster said (having Moses in mind,) "he smote the rock of the national resources and abundant streams of revenue gushed forth." Likewise, Chief Justice Marshall, who, as Lodge said: "Took the dry clauses of the Constitution and breathed into them the breath of life." Had the doctrines of his numerous opponents prevailed, especially those set forth in the United States Senate by Calhoun, and by Jefferson in his Kentucky resolutions, the Union would have been as weak as the old Confederacy; it would have split into jealous and opposing leagues on the questions of finance and the tariff long before 1860.

Without our national Union and the credit it inspired, the railways to the Pacific would most probably not have been constructed. The Pacific Slope would be a fragment, and now, likely, under the dominion of Japan.

It is possible to get signers to petitions for the removal of every official in this country, did the Constitution permit. Many men, business men, intelligent men, can be induced to sign contradictory petitions for and against any proposition. Such has been done; it can be done again.

Why not, to retain an independent judiciary, defeat the recall amendment? Then as to the other officers the Governor might call an extra, if unwilling to wait for the regular session, of the Legislature. What is the need of hurry? If adopted now, the evils the Senator foresees, will have full swing, and it may be difficult, if not impossible, to undo the act. Facilis descenus Averno, says Vergil, sed revocare gradum hoc opus, hic labor est; it is easy to go down to hell, but to get back "is all sorts of a job." Let us, for a while longer, "rather bear those ills we have than fly to others we know not of." But the Senator knows of them. Oought he not, therefore, recommend the defeat of the amendment as it stands?

Marshall said: "The very essence of civil liberty consists in the right of every individual to claim the protection of the laws. . . . The government of the United States has been emphatically termed a government of laws, and not of men. . . . A judicial question must be tried by the judicial authority." Under the recall the trial would be by an irresponsible mob. The judges are sworn to support the Constitution and the laws; the populace are not, yet by the recall they might virtually publish a judge for upholding his oath. Mob rule would prevail, winding up with "the man on horseback."

We should not be too sanguine when tinkering with the limitations the people have wisely put upon themselves.

"A germ of ruin exists in every State;
And e'en the mightiest have owned its sway,
For empires grown the grandest of the great
Have urged their progress, but to meet decay."

JOSEPH T. TATUM.

Constitutional Amendments.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 20.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The little historical reading which I have had the time to indulge in has firmly convinced me that the Constitution of the United States and of our several States was formed after mature discussion and based upon the great principles which had raised the English-speaking race to the forefront as an independent and free people.

Every endeavor was made to exclude from the Constitution all laws which concerned temporary matter and detail which would have to be changed by growth of population, etc., etc., leaving in the Constitution the groundwork on which and to which all future laws enacted by the Legislature would be the finishing touches required by the intricate relations of growing communities.

As viewed by conservative people, no change should be made to our Constitution, except when the need was very great and the full text submitted to the people for free and full discussion. Occasion might be imagined where two amendments might be submitted at the same time. This seemed to be the idea for many, many years, until the spirit of agitation, fed by series upon series of muck-raking articles in magazines, gradually brought the voters of our country to such a state of uneasiness that, like the night-blooming cereus, there arose in a night a multitude of reformers who promised to correct all these real and fancied wrongs, if only they could have their way; and to get their way we must change our Constitution, which they strongly assure us is "clearly out of date."

The pressure was so great that at our last general election the voters had presented to them about thirteen amendments, and, with the official programme, only the affirmative arguments were given the people, the negative (accidentally) being left off. How many voters understood all those amendments? How many even read all of them? Yet the spirit of agitation and unrest was so general that they all carried—good, bad and indifferent. Would you not suppose that we were then entitled to a rest? But, no; it seemed so easy to get through an amendment to the Constitution that every agitator and reformer merely pressed the harder and harder, with the result that our reform Governor, with his reform Legislature, now throw at us the unheard-of sum of twenty-two amendments; and here it is less than twenty-two days before the election, and those twenty-two amendments are not even yet in the hands of the voters.

What are you going to do about it, Mr. Voter? Will you vote "Yes" for them all, with the belief that you have given every crank his fill? Not on your life! The effect of passing favorably on this batch will, in all probability, bring you forty-four amendments the next time the Legislature meets.

Is it not time that this nonsense stopped? You can do it, and the rebuke is merited and needed now—not later. Vote "No" to every one of the amendments, and, with such a rebuke, the members of the Legislature will see that you are not to be trifled with; and, if there be any amendment among the motly horde which is worthy of your attention, let the next Legislature present that, and perhaps one other, to your earnest consideration, and in a way that it may have the serious attention which an amendment to the fundamental law of our State should have; and, if it meets with your approval then, vote "Yes."

Do not suppose for a minute that your country is going to the "demnition bow-wows" during the interim. You will find your State moving serenly on, and you will be surprised to see how little occasion there was for presenting twenty-two amendments to the Constitution at one time.

HENRY P. LINCOLN.

The "Western" Wins Again.

At the recent State Fair, at Sacramento, the Western Gas Engine Company of this city was awarded four gold medals and two silver medals on its exhibit, being awarded a medal on each engine and pump which it exhibited. This was a signal triumph, as there were fourteen other makes of engines on exhibition, many of them of eastern manufacture, and they were given the most exacting tests that the examining engineers could devise.

This result should effectually disprove the statement, so often made by representatives of eastern-built machinery, that as good a piece of machinery cannot be made in the West as in the East. The WESTERN engine has been awarded the Gold Medal at the State Fair for six successive years, and the examining engineers have always pronounced it the best-built engine exhibited.

THE BOOSTER ARMY.

"The gratifying feature of a sane and safe policy of the exploitation of land on the part of colonization departments of the railroads," said an investor yesterday, "is the army of boosters developed in the advance guard that come to find homes. After all, it is the best test when those who come first write 'back home' to urge neighbors, friends and relatives to join them. And this is one of the material factors in the remarkable development of Southern California, a policy that is adding thousands to the population of the State annually.

"Land that but a year or two ago was raw and unproductive is now taken up with prosperous and comfortable ranch homes. This, of course, has caused the growth of towns and the extension of facilities always demanded by a growing population. And the settlers are coming in large numbers each year. The land adjacent to the foothills and in the valleys and to the sea is being converted to groves of citrus fruit trees, the plain, highland and lowland are finding their ultimate destiny, that of producing profitable crops to feed the world. Many new homes will be added to Southern California when the last analysis of the colonist movement this year is made."

LOOKS FOR CONFUSION.

City Superintendent, Who Believes In Suffrage, Thinks Women Have Lot to Learn About Voting.

"I believe in woman suffrage because I do not believe in the double standard, either socially, economically or politically," said Superintendent of Schools Francis in an address before the members of the California Political Equality League in Choral Hall, yesterday afternoon.

"I do not think," continued the speaker, "that woman suffrage will bring a great millennium. In fact, I look for more or less confusion when women obtain the ballot. It would be strange indeed if women should step in and handle the ballot as well as the men who have had centuries of experience in voting. But I believe that the cure for bad democracy is more democracy, and that woman suffrage, while in itself only a step in the evolution of society, will assist in ushering in the better times for which all men are ever hoping.

"I believe that the minority of women should be allowed to vote if they wish to do so, whether the majority desire the ballot or not. However, I believe most women do want to vote. They are beginning to realize the social, political and economical importance of their work to society, and they no longer wish to be merely women, wives and mothers, but to be considered human souls."

Other speakers were Mrs. O. P. Clark and Mrs. Seward Simons, president of the League. Mrs. Clara H. Bussing entertained the audience with vocal selections.

Mrs. Simons announced that no meeting will be held in Choral Hall next Saturday, on account of the mass meeting scheduled in the Auditorium Saturday night. More than forty other suffrage meetings were announced to be held at various places during the week.

HIS LIFE IN DOUBT.

Construction Foreman Struck by Falling Boulder on Mount Lowe Still Unconscious in Hospital.

Warren A. Tracey of Buena Park, a Pacific Electric bridge foreman, engaged in construction work on Mt. Lowe, appears to be rallying slowly in the Crocker-street hospital from the effects of being struck by a boulder on Friday.

Tracy was in a gulch when a boulder became dislodged on the ledge above him and fell, stricking him on the head with great force.

Crushed and bleeding, he was placed on a car and a record run was made to the city. The motorman of the car which brought him disregarded curves and grades in the rush to get in.

Surgeons at the hospital refused to venture a forecast as to the ultimate outcome of Tracy's injuries. He had not recovered consciousness last night, though he was growing a little stronger. It is feared he has a basal fracture of the skull.

Trusses Like These Are a Cr

Get Rid of Elastic Bands, Springs and Leg Straps. Such Harness Has Forced Thousands to Undergo Dangerous Operations.

Trusses like those shown above—the belt and leg-strap, elastic and spring contraptions sold by drug stores, surgical instrument houses and many self-styled "Hernia Specialists"—make life miserable for everybody who wears them.

And—even when drawn so tight you can scarcely stand to keep them on—they do no good whatever.

Instead, they often do immense harm—they squeeze the rupture, often causing strangulation—dig into the pelvic bone in front—press against the sensitive spinal column at the back.

The Plain Truth Is This:

Rupture—as explained in our free book—can't be relieved or cured—can't even be kept from growing worse—unless constantly held in place. Just as a broken bone can't "knit" unless the parts are held securely together.

And—just as a bandage or splint is the only way a broken bone can be held—the right kind of truss is the only thing in the world that can keep a rupture from coming out.

What a difference it will make when you get that kind of truss.

And you can get exactly that kind of truss—without risking a cent of your money.

It's the famous Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic Massager.

Far more than a truss—far more than merely a device for holding the rupture in place.

So different from everything else for rupture that it has received 18 separate patents.

Thousands say it is as comfortable as their clothing.

No belt, elastic belt or springs around your waist, and no leg-straps—nothing to pinch, chafe, squeeze or bind. Self-regulating, self-adjusting. It is held in position by suction—can't shift or slip—the only truss in existence that is honestly guaranteed never to let the rupture come out.

Try It Without Risking a Penny.

We have so much faith in the Cluthe Truss—we have seen it work wonders for so many others—that we want to make one especially for your case and let you wear it at our risk.

We'll give you plenty of time to [illegible] if it doesn't keep your rupture from [illegible] out, when you are working and at [illegible] times—if it doesn't put an end to the [illegible] you've heretofore had with your ru[illegible] you don't get better right away—[illegible] truss won't cost you a cent.

How It Strengthens and [illegible]

In addition to holding the rup[illegible] Cluthe Truss or Cluthe Automatic [illegible] is constantly giving a soothing, str[illegible]ing massage to the weak ruptured [illegible]

All automatically—the massage [illegible] all day long, all without any attentio[illegible] ever from you.

This massage—which strengthens [illegible] exercise strengthens a weak arm—[illegible] markably beneficial—so remarkably [illegible]—that in 199 cases out of every 200 [illegible] begins to get better from the day [illegible] Truss is put on.

The World's Greatest Book on Ru[illegible]

Don't go on letting your ruptu[illegible] worse—don't spend a cent on acc[illegible] your rupture until you get our book[illegible] vice—which two cents for a stamp[illegible] penny for a postal—will bring you.

This remarkable book—cloth-bou[illegible] pages, 21 separate articles, and 19 [illegible] graphic pictures—took us over 40 y[illegible] write—took us that long to find out [illegible] facts we've put in it.

It explains the dangers of operatio[illegible] why they don't always cure to stay [illegible] Tells why—for the protection of the p[illegible] drug stores should not be allowed [illegible] trusses.

Explains why belt, spring and [illegible] trusses can do no good. Exposes th[illegible] bug "methods," "appliances," "plaster[illegible]

And tells—absolutely without misre[illegible]tation—all about the Cluthe Truss—[illegible] it holds—how it gives the curing ma[illegible] how it is waterproof—how it ends [illegible]pense—how you can get it on tria[illegible] gives names and addresses of over [illegible] people who have tried it and want [illegible] know about it.

CURED IN FIVE DAY[illegible]

Hernia, Piles, Fistula and Varicose Ve[illegible]

H. J. TILLOTSON, M. D.
[Established 31 Years. Copyrighted.]

I publish my true photograph, correct name and personally conduct my office. I am the longest established, most successful and reliable, as medical credentials and press records prove. Imitation of my copyrighted announcement is an evidence that I am a bona fide Specialist. I make this statement that you will know you consult a Specialist who sees and treats patients personally. I possess skill and experience acquired in such a way that no other can share. Experience is the safe standard by which judgment may be valued and results obtained.

A thorough investigation should be made by every ailing person as to the specialist he consults. Duty and destiny to self and those who depend upon you demand the best medical attention. I have the ability and can give you this service. I have always charged a very reasonable fee, so that my services may be obtained by any man who sincerely desires to be cured. I make no misleading statements or unbusinesslike propositions; neither do I desire to be particularly independent, and I would like to have you for a patient, if you will come to me on a strictly professional basis, and the inducements that I offer, which are my ability and thirty-one years' successful experience. Time-saving treatment and guarantee of cure of certain diseases.

NO MONEY REQUIRED TO COMMENCE TREATMENT. Many patients have no confidence in their doctor, because he demands pay before a cure has been effected, and there are many who have been misinformed about their condition, or through unsuccessful treatment have become skeptical and think there is no cure for them. I want an opportunity to treat such cases. It makes no difference about the financial part, as I accept pay for my services as benefits are derived, when I am satisfied the patient is reliable. Health is capital at interest. I will prove my ability to cure you before asking pay for my services.

WRITTEN GUARANTEE.

Dr. Tillotson's written guarantee means a cure or no pay for services. I guarantee to cure certain diseases or refund every dollar you have paid me for my services. My services cost you nothing unless I cure your Varicose Veins, Hernia, Piles, Fissures, Fistula or any disease I guarantee to cure. My terms are reasonable and no more than you are willing and able to pay.

READ MY BOOK—It contains information every young man, husband and father should have regarding himself. Book Sent Free to those who, in my opinion, will be benefited by it. Call or write before treating for disease or disorders.

Many Cases Cured Permanent[illegible] FIVE DAYS. Most Time-Sa[illegible] Most Natural, Most Safe. No [illegible]tention from Occupation, Fami[illegible] Home. A Radical and Permanent [illegible] I Will Give $500 to Any Charity [illegible] Guarantee That Every Stateme[illegible] This Announcement is True.

I cure rapidly, painlessly and at [illegible] expense. Cured patients are my [illegible]monials; however, I do not make [illegible]tients' names merchandise by publ[illegible] them. I will give conclusive eviden[illegible] my merit, which is obtained and [illegible]tained by ability. I invite you to [illegible] to my office; I will explain my trea[illegible] for Hernia, Piles, Fistula, Varicose [illegible] Pelvic, Nervous, Blood, Kidney, B[illegible] and Rectal Diseases. I will give you [illegible] a physical examination; if necess[illegible] microscopical and chemical analys[illegible] secretions to determine existing p[illegible]logical and bacteriological condi[illegible] Every person should take advanta[illegible] this opportunity to learn their tru[illegible]dition. Certainty of cure is what [illegible] want.

VARICOSE VEINS.

In the cure of Varicose Veins, Ru[illegible] and Associate Diseases of the Pelvic [illegible]gion, I am successful in bringing to [illegible] the curative power of Nature's forc[illegible] such a manner as to supplant the [illegible] time, wide-open surgical operations. [illegible] it required several weeks to cure [illegible] conditions and the method which [illegible] still use is such as to endanger [illegible] of the patient and require a long p[illegible] of convalescence. Now an absolute [illegible] can be accomplished in a few days [illegible] with perfect safety.

TRUSSES SELDOM CURE RUPTU[illegible]

Disregard for existing Hernias has [illegible] many lives. The smallest hernias are [illegible] most dangerous to life, because of [illegible] increased liability to strangulation. [illegible] aware that a great deal of fraud [illegible] been practiced on the public in con[illegible]tion with the alleged cure of Rup[illegible] and when I say positively that I [illegible] Rupture, to stay cured, I do not ex[illegible] any one to accept my statement wit[illegible] investigation of my professional w[illegible] My claim to your confidence is based [illegible] absolute facts, accomplished results, [illegible] personal consultation. I will mak[illegible] free examination and can explain ev[illegible] detail of your Hernia and demonst[illegible] to you the curative value of the met[illegible] I have discovered. I invite the car[illegible] investigation of any person who sincer[illegible] desires to be cured. I cure Rupture, [illegible] selected cases, with perfect safety, [illegible] entail no suffering, and do not det[illegible] you from occupation under Written Gu[illegible]antee. Many cases cured to stay cu[illegible] by several treatments.

PILES, FISTULA, RECTAL DISEAS[illegible]

These diseases are very common; m[illegible] frequently found in persons of middle [illegible] advanced age; are exceedingly annoyi[illegible] often very painful, and sometimes v[illegible] dangerous, and frequently unfit one [illegible] pleasure or occupation. My treatme[illegible] and successes are the result of years [illegible] experience; my treatment is kindly a[illegible]plied. I cure Piles without cutting. Mo[illegible] cases are cured by one or more trea[illegible]ments. If I do not cure your Piles, F[illegible]tula and other Rectal Diseases, my trea[illegible]ment does not cost you anything. Ge[illegible]tleness in treatment comes from treati[illegible] many cases, so I guarantee a cure [illegible] Piles, Fistula, Fissures, Ulcers and [illegible] curable Rectal Diseases.

KIDNEY AND BLADDER DISEASES

With these diseases you may hav[illegible] more complications than are presented [illegible] any other diseased organs. By my search[illegible]ing illumination of the bladder I dete[illegible]mine accurately the diseases and by m[illegible] microscopical examination and urinaly[illegible]sis, make sure of the condition of th[illegible] kidneys, thus laying foundations fo[illegible] scientific treatment.

POLITICAL TIPS.

resident Taft is as certain of remination as he can be certain of ything in the changes and chances this moral life, says the World's rk. It is quite idle to assert, as e Democrats are pauntily asserting, at any Democratic nominee can det him. The fact is, only a Demot who commands the confidence the country in an unusual degree hope to do it.

"President Taft is stronger in his n State today than he has been ce he was nominated and elected," lared J. D. Brown, a prominent ker of Athens, Ohio. "If Gov. Harn is nominated by the Democrats President, Taft will beat him by or more in Ohio. Even the earnest supporters of Gov. Har—and I mean, of course, the men his own party—have had enough of . The last session of the Ohio gislature killed Gov. Harmon, and ile there is little doubt that the io delegation will give the Governor vote in the national convention, re are few of his closest friends e expect him to get the nomination.

"I believe the Republicans will reim the Eleventh Ohio district in ngress, along with others that went mocratic last year," continued Mr. rown. "The defeat of Albert Dougs, who represented the district in e last Congress was a big surprise. is believed generally that Mr. Dougs will run again, and there is little bt that he will receive the Repubn nomination. Gov. Grosvenor, who presented the Eleventh District in the House for many years, may conclude to enter the race, but it is more likely that he will bea candidate for representative at large."

The extra session of Congress has worked largely to the benefit of the President. The people of his home State have come to learn, by reason of his determined stand for reciprocity, that there is firmness behind his famous smile, and if an election were held tomorrow, I believe Mr. Taft would carry the State of Ohio by a larger majority than he received in 1908.

W. I. Nolan, chairman of the Executive Committee of the Minnesota Progressive Republican League, has branded as untrue the statement that the progressives would throw their support from La Follette to Charles Evans Hughes. "The announcement of the candidacy of Hughes is an effort of the regulars to confuse the progressives and swing votes to Taft," said Mr. Nolan.

Senator Cummins, in indorsing the candidacy of La Follette and criticising President Taft, spoke for himself alone, Mr. Roberts says, the people of Iowa not having given his interview a second thought. Indeed, they do not take Senator Cummins seriously. They are for Taft first, last and all the time. The Senator's own friends criticise Mr. Cummins for his action, and declare that his opposition to the President will bring about his defeat two years hence.

That a split delegation from Iowa to the next Republican National Convention spells defeat for Senator Cummins is the view expressed by George E. Roberts, Director of the Mint, who has just returned to Washington from a trip in the West extending to the Pacific Coast and including a visit to his home in Iowa. Mr. Roberts also says that if the Republican party in Iowa should split into two factions, with the insurgents on one side and the regular Republicans on the other, Senator Kenyon, who has openly declared in favor of the renomination of President Taft, would be in a most embarrassing position, as he is an insurgent and follows the dictates of Senator Cummins, but in view of his declaration would have to bolt his faction and side with the regular Republicans.

Representative McKinley of Illinois, chairman of the Republican Congressional committee, before sailing for Rome as a delegate to the International Parliamentary Union, made it clear in conferences with its committee associates that an active campaign is to be waged in an effort to recapture the House next fall, says the Washington correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald. The campaign managers are hopeful that, following the lead of the President, the party may present sufficient solidity to enable the campaign to be drawn on close party lines of Republican protection against Democratic tariff for revenue only issues. It is their purpose to flood the country with literature, and to place upon the stump a large force of speakers.

"No man would run away from the Presidency of the United States," said Governor Harmon of Ohio while at the Governors' conference, when asked if he were a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

When asked for a more definite announcement, Governor Harmon replied that he did not consider it in keeping with the proprieties of the governors' conference to drag in personal political affairs. He had not attended the conference, he said, as a candidate for any office.

J. B. Billard of Topeka, Kan., is evidently not much of a candidate for Governor of his State, particularly at Kansas City. The Northwest Miller says: "J. B. Billard of Topeka, who is running for the Democratic nomination for Governor on a resubmission platform, has lived at the Kansas capital since 1853 and during that time, except for one day when he came here to testify in a board of trade case, he never has been in Kansas City. So that is what's the matter with Mr. Billard."

It costs $15 to hit a State Senator on the nose in Independence, Kan. This price was officially established when J. H. Brewster, an officer of the company constructing the Porter road southeast from Caney, and an old resident of the county, was fined the sum for striking State Senator John Overfield. The two men got into a disagreement over oil wells east of the town.

Senator George H. Hodges of Olathe, Kan., is the man to whom the progressive wing of the Democratic party are looking to win back some of the lost Democratic honors in Kansas. He is however rather non-committal about the matter himself, and after telling an interviewer that he did not know whether he would run, he refused to say another word about anything that smacked about politics.

That there is no conceivable doubt that President Taft will be renominated and re-elected, that Ohio certainly will go Republican in the next State election, and that Wade Ellis will not manage the next campaign, and that Gov. Wilson of New Jersey would be the hardest Democratic nominee for Mr. Taft to beat, are the opinions of Wade H. Ellis, former Attorney-General of Ohio, and formerly Assistant Attorney-General of the United States.

Ellis recently returned from a visit to President Taft at Beverly, and is optimistic over Republican success in the national election, because the strength of the President is gradually gaining by upholding Dr. Wiley, by urging reciprocity and peace with foreign nations, and by the courage he displayed in vetoing the tariff bills, relying upon the common-sense of the American people to understand his reasons.

"As no insurgent," said Mr. Ellis, "has said he would not support the president if he were renominated, I feel Taft can't lose. I think that as the convention gradually approaches, the opposition, if any, will amount to nothing, and that no other name will be seriously considered at the convention."

Daniel W. Lawler, former Mayor of St. Paul, has filed his affidavit with the Secretary of the State as a candidate for United States Senator to succeed Senator Knute Nelson.

Lawler filed for the Democratic nomination and is the first person to file under the Keefe law applying the Oregon plan for popular choice of United States Senator. Mr. Lawler says he is a "progressive Democrat." He has announced his candidacy in good time, as the primaries will not be held till September 15, 1912.

"I have been a Democrat all my life, and yet my opinion is that it would be better for the welfare of the country to re-elect President Taft than to take some man from the other party whose radical views with regard to the tariff, for example, might do great harm to the business of the country," was the statement of one of the foremost business men of the South, J. W. Cannon, the noted manufacturer, of Oxford, N. C., to a representative of the Baltimore American.

The opinion of Mr. Cannon on any subject is important because of the great study he has given to practical questions. He is the chief owner of thirteen cotton mills, which owe their existence to his tireless industry and remarkable ability as an organizer, and one of these factories is unique in its daily production of 12,000 dozens of towels a day—a towel output that is not equaled by any plant in the world.

"I thing that great credit belongs to Taft," continued Mr. Cannon, "because of his wise administration and his freedom from extreme views. In the tariff argument between the House and the President there can be no doubt as to where the advantage rests, and when the country takes time to think the matter out carefully its verdict will be in favor of the President.

"I would myself cheerfully vote for Taft in preference to any avowed tariff smasher," continuer Mr. Cannon.

Senator Bailey of Texas, is said to be piqued at the rise of John Sharp Williams in the Senate, and this was an influential reason for his announcement that he would retire to private life. Moreover he is out of harmony with a majority of his Democratic colleagues on many leading issues.

GENERAL JUMBLE OF NEW STAGE PRODUCTIONS.

Managers Producing Everything, in the Hope That Success Will Come of Something—Imitation the Greatest Temptation of the Modern Theater.

BY JULIAN JOHNSON.

Last Sunday The Times dramatic columns gave the names of scores of impending metropolitan productions.

Did you ever see such an unclassifiable conglomeration?

The metropolitan manager this season is up against the blank white wall of bewilderment. He doesn't know what is going to be popular from one day to the next, and, as a result, the great producers this year are simply spattering and scattering; they are trying everything in the hope that something will "land."

Thus, the Shuberts are feeling the pulse of popular favor on everything from a Scotch play, called "Bunty Pulls the Strings," with the original canny kilted players, to a sparkling, but evanescent, handful of American musical comedies, none of which, perhaps, is worth the trouble and expense of a try-out production.

Managers who have specialized on solemn, serious dramas are this year jumping into a maze of musical farces written in imitation of George Cohan.

Producers who have always pinned their faith to something which came through the customhouse are scouring Indianny and Missoury for "talent."

Rough-neck melodrama mounters are doing fairy plays and new theater stuff.

Women want to play men's parts.

One of the hits of the year is a man, Julian Eltinge, in a woman's part—the "Fascinating Widow."

The New Theater in New York is inglorious history, and now Chicago is going to try a New Theater.

Needless to say, everything which was successful last year will be flagrantly and unsuccessfully imitated. Imitation is the greatest of all theatrical temptations, and no stage person is exempt from it, from the poor little chorus girl, who imitates the gowns and the manners of the star, to the biggest manager on Broadway, who imitates something that "went" in Paris, or that was a hit with a rival manager last year.

The habit of trying new plays outside of New York is growing more and more in fashion. Los Angeles has had its fill of new plays, probably more, on the whole, than any city in the Union, and Los Angeles has done mighty well by the managers, too. They owe us a debt—the debt isn't owed by us. Who wouldn't come to Los Angeles to have a play produced by a competent company, thus saving the worry and expense of a New York presentation, the loss of from ten to twenty-five thousand dollars if the piece doesn't "go," and the inestimable loss of prestige by having seen certain good plays that have been produced at the Burbank and Belasco theaters, but more fortunate are the managers who thus beheld their property in the true stagelight and were able to remedy defects of construction in time.

"SPRING MAID'S" COMPOSER.

Heinrich Reinhardt, Whose Life Has Been as Romantic as His Musical Productions.

Heinrich Reinhardt, composer of "The Spring Maid," new Viennese operetta to be heard in this city at the Mason, was born in 1865. He is one of teh extremely limited number of composers whose family wealth made it unnecessary for him to do anything, but his music love at the age of sixteen made him run away from fancied restrictions at home and obtain work as a violinist at the Stuttgart Grand Operahouse.

Even then he was composing fragments of quaint effectiveness—in fact, Herr Reinhardt is today better known through Europe for the large number of short musical sketches he has put forth than in any other way. It is likely that more than half of the many musical one-act playlets that are so generally played over continental Europe are his work. He was recognized as a composer of much musihumor, written in a strictly technical manner, and his two grand operas, which were sung at the Berlin Grand Operahouse under the control of the Kaiser, were not great successes, but in his first opera comique, "Das Susse Madel," he came to his own and his later works were eagerly awaited.

This opera was sung under its German title at the German Theater in New York, and as "The Sweet Girl," will be one of the later productions by the firm of Werba and Luescher who are now presenting "The Spring Maid."

The failure of his first grand opera brought him the sympathy of a lady much elder than himself, who was closely connected with the nobility, but her feeling for the composer never grew warmer than one of sympathy, although many of his musical numbers were dedicated to her and his devotion was apparent, and with the production of "The Spring Maid" in Berlin, he married the daughter of the Lady of Sympathy and was soon afterwards reconciled to his own family.

Herr Reinhardt has been, for a number of years, the director of the Vienna Grand Operahouse. There, he had heard Fraulein Mizzi Hajos and she was chosen to create the saucy psuedo spring maid in the forthcoming opera. It was sung two years in Berlin, a year in Vienna and is today being sung in a lithe leading European cities.

DILL'S RETURN IN STAR PLAY.

"RICH MR. HOGGENHEIMER," AT HAMBURGER MAJESTIC.

Continuances at the Burbank and Belasco Theaters — Pictures Still on at the Grand—New Lyceum Show—Programmes at Other Playhouses.

German comedian Max Dill (formerly of Kolb and Dill) will come to the Majestic Theater tonight for an engagement of one week, presenting Sam Bernard's "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer."

No comedian in the West today has a greater following than Max Dill, who by a majority of the critics has been acclaimed a great portrayer of German musical comedy roles. His style is absolutely distinctive. He does not strain to score his laughs. On the contrary, he is hilariously funny through the use of quiet, reposeful choppy gestures never fail to score a laugh by their admirably simulated awkwardness, while his famous goo-goo eyes are wonderfully full of humorous expression.

"Piggy" Hoggenheimer, as he is affectionately called by his friends, is quite generally regarded as one of the funniest of stage creations. The character first figured in "The Girl from Kays," when he figured as the wife-hunter. In "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer" Piggy is no longer the ardent, rich lover, but the anxious father who is determined to break off the love affair between his son Guy and Amy Leigh, a poor young American shop-girl. Piggy, unwilling to worry his wife, resorts to a ruse for leaving London for New York. His wife, learning that Flora Fair, a flirtatious young actress, is going to sail on the same steamer, also takes passage on the boat. The voyage is considerably enlivened by Piggy's attempted flirtation with Flora Fair and from the minute he arrives at the dock in Hoboken, where he is introduced to the wonderful workings of the customs officials, Piggy is constantly in hot, affording fun of a fast and most laughable sort.

There is much delightful music in "The Rich Mr. Hoggenheimer" and an abundance of exceptionally clever and whistleable song numbers in Mr. Dill's chorus of thirty figure very prominently. Dill's opening, "I'm Daffy Dill," and one of the hits of the piece, was written especially for him by Jack Raynes, who will be found directing the orchestra.

Mr. Dill has excellent support in his fun-making by popular Marta Golden, who will be seen as Mrs. Hoggenheimer; Alf Goulding, Jack Pollard, Lucille Parker, Denton Vane and Lillian Coleman, a new and promising young prima donna.

Belasco.

So successful has been the second week of Richard Walton Tully's new Hawaiian drama "The Bird of Paradise" at the Belasco Theater, that the management have found it necessary to continue the run of this royal play for a third week.

The success of "The Bird" is not only due to the fact that Tully has given theater-goers a play quite out of the ordinary, both in plot and dramatic interest, but to the fact that he has given it so much real atmosphere. The last act particularly, showing the great lake-like crater of Kilaeua, is a wonderful bit of stagecraft.

The fine work of Bessie Barriscale as Luana, the little Hawaiian princess, Lewis S. Stone as the American, Paul Wilson; David Landau, Richard Vivian, Helene Sullivan, and in fact every member of the cast down to the Hawaiian instrumentalists, adds much to the effect of the play.

Following the third week of "The Bird of Paradise," the Belasco company will offer Martha Morton's "A Bachelor's Romance" in which James Neill will have an opportunity to renew a former success in the role of David Holmes.

Burbank.

So successful has been the production of "Romeo and Juliet," by the Burbank company, that the management has decided to continue this offering for a second week, commencing with the matinee today.

For Shakespeare to have a run in stock augurs a portentious revival of classic interest, or else an extraordinarily successful cast and production. Though there is considerable latent Shakespeariana in Los Angeles, probably the latter reason may be held especially accountable for the continuance of "Romeo and Juliet."

Miss Illington as Juliet asumes the first "girl" role in which local audiences have ever seen her, and she is highly successful. In fact, it is Miss Illington's first performance on any stage of Juliet, although at various times in her stage career, and with remarkable success, she has given a number of scenes from the play. Her present performance only adds another role to her long list of personal triumphs.

The suave, beautifully rounded, praise and favor manifested from the front in the way of curtain calls.

The whole cast, as a matter of fact, is what has made this Shakespearean revival so strikingly successful. Mr. Beasley's "Mercutio" is a masterpiece of force and brilliance. Paris, by Mr. Stanley, is an adroit and virile bit, made large by a splendid actor. Miss Lewis's experience and distinction are in bold relief in the role of the nurse, and a great bit of unctious low comedy is Peter, as played by James Corrigan. H. S. Duffield's Friar Laurence is an exquisitely delicate portrait of a gentle, humane wholly lovable old man.

Grand.

The third week of the Kinemacolor films of the coronation will begin at the Grand today. This marks the longest run of a film in this city, and the only cases outside of New York and Chicago, where the first showing of the same films was naturally made, and where they are still running.

The films will be here only a short while more, as San Francisco, the next place to get them, is clamoring for a sight of them.

Lyceum.

Beginning with the Sunday matinee, the Armstrong Musical Comedy Company will enter its thirteenth week at the Lyceum. But far from feeling it a hoodoo, Ed Armstrong intends to put on for the first time anywhere his latest composition, known as "Hoola-Hoola." This is a musical comedy of oriental locale, with the mysticism of the Orient in makeup, costumery and scenery.

The action of the little skit is laid in the Isle of Nowhere, one of those mysterious realms where one may imagine anything occuring, since nothing ever did happen there. This isle has a peculiar law—that when one is divorced, one must wed a Hoola-Hoola before one may rewed one's choice. At the time of the curtain, the Hoola-Hoola is dead, and Ethel Davis, as Rajah, having divorced her husband, cannot wed the prince of her choice as there can be no pre-wedding. It is decreed that the first arrival shall be the Hoola-Hoola, and Will Armstrong, as a shipwrecked sailor, is thrust into the office when swept ashore. The Kadi—Gus Leonard—makes trouble at once, and so do the Baby Dolls, who are the inherited harem thrust upon the sailor with the other honors. Ed Mitchell plays the divorced husband, and Walter Spencer, who makes his Armstrong debut Sunday, is the prince whom Ethel Davis seeks to wed—a part in which his excellent singing voice will be heard to great advantage. Dorothy Dale is the queen and Frances White is the page, in both which roles they fit admirably. Among the song numbers will be the Hoola-Hoola love song, written by Mr. Armstrong. Doris Piper does the Hoola dance; Walter Spencer sings "Tropicle Isle," Frances White sings "Honey Man," and Will Armstrong warbles "Casey." There is a lot of oriental music, the latest product of Mr. Armstrong, in which the dolls will figure prominently.

Orpheum.

Beginning Monday matinee, the Orpheum will offer as its headline attraction Mme. Besson, Anglo-Parisian actress and her company, in "The Woman Who Knew," by the late Victor Smalley. Mme. Besson, who is better known abroad than she is here, had the distinction of creating the role of Zaza in the original play of that name, and was also seen to great advantage in the part of "Camille," in fact, was the youngest woman ever to attempt the former role. In this sketch, the last that Mr. Smalley did, she has a part that just suits her; that of a woman who is battling with a shrewd lawyer for the one she loves, though she has Music.

THOMAS DRILL, FROM CHICAGO.

INTERESTING ADDITION TO LOCAL MUSIC COLONY.

The Imminence of John Philip Sousa and His World-Famous Band—Musical News of the City. Doings at the Studios—Contemplated Concert Activities.

BY JULIAN JOHNSON.

One of the most interesting additions to the Los Angeles music colony this year is Thomas Taylor Drill, the Chicago teacher and choral director.

Mr. Drill has given up most congenial surroundings and a long-established circle of friends in Chicago, and has come to make his home in this city.

Mr. Drill came out at the solicitation of Frank Egan, who has engaged him to head the musical department of the Egan school.

Drill has filled a very prominent place in Chicago's musical life for the Musurgia and Irish choral societies he has done excellent and epoch-making work—if we may believe the critics of the Chicago papers, who have found his baton both exact and inspired on frequent occasions.

Mr. Drill is also the possessor of a beautiful baritone voice, of rich quality and excellent use, and has done about as much singing as directing during the past half-dozen years.

He is a great believer in the future of American music, not only as far as the composer is concerned, but in reference to the interpreter as well.

"The old tradition that the American voice was unfitted, by climatic surroundings, language, birth and what-not foolishness, for the highest sort of vocal endeavor, has been utterly exploded. The American voice is as good as any in the world, provided it has the right sort of training.

"The fact that our women conquered at home and abroad was accepted as a matter of course, but the skeptics always asked, 'Where are your men singers?' Well—as a rule, they were hard to find, but that was because of apathy and disinterestedness in the long, hard processes of singing perfection—not because of any inherent disabilities of the throat. I am proud to say that several of my men pupils have achieved international distinction as singers, and I feel—perhaps a little parentally—that they are singing just as well as any fellows on earth.

"Right method and hard work will lead the American baritone, tenor or things no Italian or Frenchman ever landed, nor ever will."

Mr. Drill expects to be joined by his family in a short time.

His studio in the Majestic building he found ready for him, and he expresses himself as delighted with the musical atmosphere of Los Angeles.

Drill was wavering between New York and Los Angeles as a field for future activity, when Egan painted the Southwest metropolis in such glowing colors that the eastern big town faded.

His departure from Chicago was signalized by a huge testimonial concert of his combined societies.

Jean Trusiewicz of the Majestic building, a connoisseur of old violins, will leave for New York, September 25. He will visit friends, and incidentally search for more Strads and Amatis, and when he returns he will probably be accompanied by a Polish violinist of considerable note, one J. Niedjielski, former professor at the Warsaw conservatory.

Prof. Niedjielski intends to make his home in Los Angeles.

Sousa and his band arrived in Vancouver from New Zealand, September 17, and began the last lap of their tour around the world. This tour, which is unique in the annals of military bands, began in New York last November and included various parts of America and Canada. On the day before Christmas the band sailed for England and played their first engagement in London, January 2. Sousa and his men after giving fifty concerts there, they proceeded to Australia and New Zealand. Before returning to New York, where they are due at the end of the year, Sousa's band will fill a number of engagements on the Pacific Coast and in the South and Southwest. Sousa has composed a new march, which will be included in the new programme he has prepared for his return to America. Arrangements have been made for his appearance here on October 16, at the Auditorium.

If that foremost baritone, Pasquale Amato, sings half as well in Los Angeles when he makes his bow to the music patrons of the community as he is now singing in Europe his conquest should be one worth going miles to see. The Metropolitan Operahouse star, who has just left his triumphs in Berlin to renew them at Rome, will sing at the Auditorium for the first time in his career on October 24. The concert organization, of which he is the leading member, will be heard at the Auditorium.

Amato, whose sensational receptions in America have taken place principally at the Metropolitan in New York, is reported to have given critical Berlin opera-goers the finest singing and dramatic interpretations of Baron Scarpia in "Tosca" ever heard in that city of culture. In other characters he appeared to win equally well and press accounts state that no other Italian ever roused Germans to such a pitch of enthusiasm.

At the Exposition in Rome, where Amato has appeared on three occasions with greater success than any other singer of the day, it is reported that the crowds desiring to hear the performances in which he sings cannot be accommodated.

Joseph Dupuy, tenor, assisted by Will Garroway, pianist, will sing before the Manual Arts High School, September 28, giving an "All Nations" programme. Hebrew, Arabian, Latin, German, Italian, French, Irish, Scotch, English and American songs will be in his list of numbers.

The new Columbia Musical College, Mabelle Lewis Case, director, has engaged Christine Battelle, pianist, for its piano department.

The Columbia faculty now includes Anthony Carlson, basso; Ralph Wylie, violinist, and Mabelle Lewis Case, Julia Marie Rebell, Christine Battelle, Henry W. Wheeler and Virginia Swearingen.

A most interesting and unusual concert was that of Mrs. Estelle Heartt-Dreyfus, given at Eureka, Thursday evening, September 14. Mrs. Dreyfus took as her subject "Songs of the Byways and the Gypsies," and in the rendition of her quaint programme she was assisted by Miss Hazel Ricks, violinist, and Mrs. William Otto, pianist.

The De Chauvenet Conservatory of Music will give a faculty concert next Saturday afternoon, September 30, at 845 South Figueroa street, at 2:30 p.m. Mons. Mauler-Hiennecey of Paris will give a fifteen-minute talk on "Chaminade," in French and English. After which will follow numbers in violin, piano, voice, harp and other stringed instruments. The programme promises to be one of interest throughout.

ACADEMY RECITAL SUCCESS.

Triumph for Von Stein Folks in Largely Attended Recital at the Gamut Auditorium.

The Von Stein Academy at Gamut Auditorium gave an extraordinarily successful recital last Tuesday night. About 1000 people were present and many more were turned away from the doors.

Of the programme the most noteworthy numbers were the Mendelssohn trio, played by Mr. Von Stein, at the piano; Mr. Kopta, violin, and Mr. Bright, 'cello, in a masterful way, and the songs by Mme. Adelina Tromben-Lebegott. Mme. Lebegott, who was accompanied by her husband, Maestro Eduardo Lebegott, sang very artistically, and was almost smothered in flowers.

The complete programme follows: Trio for Viola, clarinet, piano, E flat major (W. A. Mozart.) Karl Becker, S. R. Parmegiani, Miss Clara Russakov. Polonaise, E minor (McDowell,) Oscar Rasbach. Notturno, arranged for violoncello (Chopin,) Scherzo (von Goens,) Earl Bright. Trio for piano, violin and violoncello in C minor, op. 66 (Mendelssohn,) Heinrich von Stein, Wenzel Kopta, Earl Bright. Canzonetta (Godard,) Polonaise de concert (Laub,) Wenzel Kopta, violin, Oscar Rasbach at the piano. Amore medioevale, Romanza (E. Lebegott,) Se tu sapessi, melodia (E. Lebegott,) Mme. Adelina Tromben-Lebegott, soprano, Maestro Edoardo Lebegott at the piano. Minuetto, B minor (Schubert,) Rhapsodie No. 2 (Liszt,) William Taylor Spangler, pianist.

A Mighty Good Example.

[Columbus Journal:] A merchant in an eastern city flourished in his business and made a snug fortune out of it. He died six or seven years ago, leaving a will by which he gave to his clerks his entire business, share and share alike. He had converted it into a stock concern and willed each clerk his share of the stock. The firm name included his own, and the condition of the will was that the clerks should continue the business as he had carried it on. They did, and flourished, and today it is a prosperous enterprise.

But this matter of disposing of his business was as noble as it was novel. These faithful employees had helped him to do a profitable business and make money, and it was quite natural, as it was just, to recognize that fact in his will many of our hostesses come out strongly as art, a fact which to the hearts of our distinguished art colony. has a house full interesting pictures, and among Pasadena women it has become a matter of social necessity to visit the various art exhibitions here.

Mrs. F. Ogilvy Wood, with her piquant and motley household of dogs, cats and birds of various breeds, is apt to collide with some fixed principles in her universal love of the animal kingdom. She has eighteen valuable dogs, for the most part Blenheim spaniels from the Duke of Marlborough's kennels, and about a dozen Persian and Angora cats. That is all right, but she also houses a few hundred rare birds, and the chicken yard boasts every known uncommon breed of fowl and pigeon. And she is—or is it was?—an earnest member of the Ornithological Society.

Now, pussy cats and dicky birds never did enjoy that "sympatique" association that the idealists might have expected of them—and some one who loves birds but despises cats has been asking pertinent questions at the society' meetings, as to how Mrs. Wood reconciles her affection for pussy with her boasted love of birds. At the end of one of those heated pauses that lend such interest to these meetings, Mrs. Wood was compelled to confess that notwithstanding the lofty lineage of her pussies, they had also been known to capture and devour not one, but many, of her feathered pets. None but a member of an ornithological society can realize the gasp of horror that flooded the assembly at that dread confession.

Mrs. Wood was called upon vehemently immediately to destroy the vicious quadrupeds, and of course she couldn't do that, because she loved them so! So the last heard of the painful episode was that Mrs. Wood's membership of the praiseworthy society was quivering in the balance. Which is dreadful, because, you see, Mrs. Wood does so love birds!

Another society woman who adores birds and dogs, but bars the cats, is Mrs. Heap of Pasadena, widow of the late Gen. Heap. She has a wonderful open-air aviary which includes many rare and valuable birds. Life is made one long round of pure joy for them—and for all who live within range of their sweet song.

Langdon Coburn and his mother have just returned to town after a sojourn at the Grand Canyon. Mr. Coburn is one of those fortunate men who always get themselves described as "interesting" in feminine circles. He is English—these Englishmen certainly know how to appeal to the fair sex.

At an afternoon party recently the subject turned upon interesting men and several women declared they did not know a single specimen of this rare commodity! And they were not all suffragettes, either. But there were others who were able to compile quite a sizable list—and altogether it was one of the most interesting discussions! Wouldn't you like to know who was included in that list?

Society Interested.

Society this season will interest itself in sports and the month of October promises much fun.

At present members of the fashionable world are planning auto costumes to be worn at the Santa Monica road race, which will take place October 14. The dust at this event will require the wearing of outing suits, and hats that fit snugly to the head. Little silk caps with an edge of lace in the same shade will be smart and a heavy auto coat is the proper caper.

October 21 is the date chosen for the Stanford-U.S.C. football game. This will be played on Bovard field in the presence of an expected enthusiastic group of young people.

Tan-To is to claim attention on the afternoon of Saturday, October 28. Ascot Park will be the scene of this interesting game, which is played by six players in automobiles. This should prove to be the most exciting of the amateur sports and will be played by a team from the Los Angeles Athletic Club and one from the University of Southern California.

"Baby" Caley will be one of the attractions on the former team, while handsome Warren Bovard will be the idol of the U.S.C. boosters. Caley several years ago starred on the 'varsity football team and his name spells success for any new sport. "Les" Henry is another member of the athletic club who will add his skill to the new game, which promises to be the winter fun for society.

This sport is planned to take the place of the Horse Show and the park will be cleaned and the grand stand arranged for the daintiest of gowns, thus giving the maids and matrons a chance to wear some of the dresses purchased during fashion week. Tea will be served by society maids in a nook arranged with ferns, flowers and oriental rugs. An informal reception will be held in this same cosy corner before the game, where pleasant bits of gossip may be exchanged.

At Lakeside Inn.

Louis Schwaebe and Bernal Dyas have been registered at Lakeside Inn during the past week. They passed the time in shooting doves.

Large Reception.

President and Mrs. George Finlay Bovard of the University of Southern California were at home Friday evening to members of the faculty. They were assisted in entertaining by their daughter, Miss Edna Bovard, Miss Alice Hogan, Miss Evelyn Bayman and Miss Nina Chadwick. Miss Gladys Bovard and Miss Elsie Thorne presided at the punch bowl. The home was beautiful with white flowers and potted ferns.

Entre Nous Party.

Members of the Entre Nous Sorority presided Tuesday afternoon at an informal tea party at the home of Mrs. George Finlay Bovard. The afternoon was planned in compliment to a number of the freshmen girls. Friday afternoon they entertained with a similar affair at the home of Miss Pauline Lund, No. 427 Maryland street.

In Scotland.

Mr. and Mrs. John W. Kemp and son, who are engaged in an extended tour, passed the month of August in Scotland.

In England.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert H. Busch of Portland street, who are enjoying a tour of the world, enjoyed the beauties of London last month. Their daughter, Miss Amy, will remain in Washington this winter. She will enter one of the fashionable girls' schools.

Have Returned.

Mr. and Mrs. George Lafayette Crenshaw of No. 1419 Wilton place, have returned from their journey through England, Germany Switzerland, Holland and Belgium. Mrs. Crenshaw will receive the first and third Wednesdays.

Smart Affair.

Invitations have been issued by Mrs. D. Gaynor Peck of No. 1601 Orange street, for a smart afternoon function to be given Tuesday next in compliment to her niece, Miss Hazel Allen, who will pass the winter in Los Angeles, and also for Miss Kathleen Lockhart, who, in company with her mother, returned recently from Paris, where she has been studying music for the past three years.

A Physician's Report on Tuberculosis Medicine

"Have used Eckman's Alterative in several cases of tubercular glands of the neck, with excellent results every time. In one case it cost me $50, for the girl was put on it only until she could arrange to be operated, and in a short time an operation was not needed. I suppose your records are just as fine as of old. You know my faith in it."

"The Water of Eternal Youth"

(From Home Queen)

The beauties of the Austrian court used a lotion which was so effectual in keeping the face smooth and free from wrinkles, even in the aged, that they named it the "water of eternal youth."

Some one has recently divulged the secret of this wonderful, though exceedingly simple, wrinkle lotion, which in her gratitude she has similarly dubbed as a preserver of youth: One ounce pure saxolite (powdered), dissolved in a half pint of witch hazel—that's all there is to it. Any woman can get these ingredients at her drugstore, put them together, and use the soluion with entire safety. To bathe the face in the same brings immediate results, even in case of the deeper wrinkles and furrows. This is also effective for hanging cheeks and double chin.

Soldiers' Home.

THE MOST notable event of it's kind that has ever taken place at the Soldiers' Home, was the wedding, on Wednesday evening, of Miss Elsie Jean Moore, daughter of Major and Mrs. E. W. Moore of this place, to First Lieut. William T. Cade, Jr., M. C. United States Army, now stationed in the Presidio at San Francisco.

The marriage ceremony, Rev. A. J. Evans, rector of the Hollywood Episcopal Church officiating, was, in addition to three hundred invited guests, witnessed by a large number of veterans of the Home, to whom, from early childhood, the charming bride had in many ways, endeared herself.

The immediate scene of the ceremony was the post-room stage of Markham Hall; which, under the direction of Miss Franc Cochrane, was converted into a veritable bower. Banked against the front of the stage and other possible places, were rock ferns amidst which were hundreds of white dahlias, the same scheme prevailing in a great rear wall of trailing smilax, which also extended to and enclosed the wings. Pendant above the spot occupied by the couple during the ceremony, were two great baskets, overflowing with the prevailing color scheme.

The Home's band contributed to the occasion; playing Lohengren's wedding march as the party marched up the aisle, and at the conclusion of the ceremony, rendered the march by Mendelssohn.

An informal reception in the great reception room east of the library followed, after which the wedding party adjourned to the home of the bride's parents, where more than seventy specially invited guests, consisting of relatives, Home officers' families, and intimate friends of the bride and groom, after partaking of refreshments, sped the happy couple on their way to Los Angeles. Remaining at the Alexandria Hotel, over night, Dr. and Mrs. W. T. Cade, Jr., left on the morning train for San Francisco.

Col. C. W. Wadsworth, assistant inspector-general of the National Home for D. V.S., has been the guest of Col. T. J. Cochrane and daughter, Miss Franc Cochrane, during his official visit to this place.

Miss Franc Cochrane, daughter of Gov. Cochrane, left today for a three months' trip East. Stopping first at Leavenworth, she will visit several other cities, ultimately visiting with friends in New York.

More Silk Stockings Worn.

[Haberdasher:] The increase in the use of silk hosiery has been very remarkable. During the past ten years the number of pounds of silk and spun silk yarn used in manufacturing increased from 266,000 to 980,000, a gain of 268 per cent. The value of this material increased from $947,000 to $3,597,000, an advance of 280 per cent. Practically all the increase has occurred since 1904. As a result of this the quantity of raw wool used for hosiery decreased 61 per cent. and the value of it fell 44 per cent.

Ambitions That Produce Nothing.

[New York Mail:] An instance of the curious ambitions that some persons develop appears in the case of the man who locked himself in a barrel and passed over Niagara Falls in safety. Another example is presented by the man who is pushing a wheelbarrow from Atlanta to New York. Both of these men are bound to acquire a certain degree of notoriety, of course, but how their achievements are to add to the common good is beyond comprehension. A man courageous enough to float over Niagara Falls might be useful to humanity in the life-saving service or in breaking horses to harness, while the energy expended in pushing a wheelbarrow from the capital of Georgia to the American metropolis, if properly applied, would have been sufficient to cultivate several acres of corn or potatoes, thus adding measurably to the country's food supply. If it be true that conscience makes cowards of us all, it seems to be equally true that freak ambition makes fools of many.

Lost His Friend, the Judge.

[Detroit Free Press:] "Absent-mindedness is a dreadful drawback to success," said Mayor Whitlock at a banquet in Toledo.

"I knew a very absent-minded lawyer. The other day it was raining and blowing and he engaged a taxicab. On the way to court he overtook the judge, plodding along on foot through rain and wind and mud, and he halted the taxicab and invited his honor to ride with him.

"The judge accepted this invitation, the taxicab duly halted at the courthouse and the absent-minded lawyer hopped out and ran upstairs to get ready the papers for a petition he was to present.

"But the court opened and the petition was presented to the judge, who had been so courteous in the cab a few minutes before, now repulsed the lawyer coldly and contemptuously.

"As the poor fellow stood stupefied a crier whispered to him:

" 'Do you know what you did? You ran in and left his honor to pay for the taxi-cab.' "

FACE TO FACE WITH THE FACTS

Any system of personal cleanliness is incomplete that does not include a sanitary hair dressing

Don't neglect the hair. Its proper care is far from being the least important part of the toilet. There is no portion of the person more liable to accumulation of germs and dirt, yet the hair is most frequently neglected.

People consider themselves models of bodily neatness when they bathe regularly, clean their teeth diligently, devote hours to manicuring and industriously conserving their complexions while they seldom or never pay any attention to the condition of the hair and scalp. Besides being open to the charge of uncleanliness, these people are still more unfortunate because by their carelessness they are really aiding time in the destruction of their beauty and youthful appearance.

Newbro's Herpicide

Adds a sense of refreshing cleanliness that is extremely comforting.

The consciousness of having the hair and scalp sweet and clean brings a feeling of pleasing self-assurance. HERPICIDE is a real scalp prophylactic and its use produces one of the most apparent evidences of personal cleanliness.

Besides keeping the hair and scalp in an absolutely clean and highly sanitary condition all the time, NEWBRO'S HERPICIDE eradicates the dandruff and prevents its accumulation by destroying the germ that causes it. It is also an effectual check to falling hair.

The delightful and exquisite odor of HERPICIDE, without regard for its sanitary and hair-saving qualities, appeals to all persons of refinement and taste.

Try a Sample Bottle and Read the Booklet

If not already acquainted with the delights of using this most popular of all hair-dressings, send 10 cents in postage or silver (to pay postage and packing) for a trial size bottle and booklet on the care of the hair.

"That is a question, however, for r mother to decide," said the Am- sador. "In Mexico we do not fol- w the same custom. When a young rl is of sufficient age to participate social affairs, she goes around th her mother when she calls and r card is left at the friends of the mily. Then she is invited to the alls which are so much more num- ous in Latin countries than in here and that is all there is to her rmal entrance into society. My ghter speaks English perfectly she also speaks German, French Italian. She is passionately fond of music and she is now about to take up a course of voice culture. As a preparation she studied all the tongues in which the best song music is written. I have great hopes of her voice and trust that she will cultivate it to the fullest extent possible, even if that would mean a longer sojourn in Europe."

Senora Crespo de la Serna.

The second daughter of the Ambassador is a lovely young girl of fifteen who has been in a convent school, first in Vienna and then in Paris. She will probably be placed at the Visitation convent in Georgetown to complete her education. The little ones are 13, 10, and seven years old and will remain, until they have mastered English, in the hands of their governesses.

Senora Crespo is a native of Vera Cruz and lived there except for brief absences when her husband was on some foreign mission, until his appointment in Mexico City to a position which would correspond to the assistant Secretary of the Interior Department. He gave special attention to the mining industry, and to the department of animal chemistry and to the educational problem. The Ambassador is one of the best equipped men in his country to handle such problems. He studied in the principal seats of learning in Germany, France and Austria. He took economics almost as soon as that branch became part of the curriculum of the University of Berlin and he pursued the entire technical course in the University of Vienna and at Frieburg. Senora Crespo was educated after the Latin idea of governesses and masters at home. She also went abroad with her parents and sisters and spent several years in Paris and Dresden, studying music and the languages. The Crespos have a handsome private fortune and will be generous hosts. They are strict Roman Catholics and will become members of the diplomatic church for those who follow this faith, namely, St. Matthew's in Rhode Island avenue. There are already four Ambassadors and about fifteen ministers and lessers diplomats who maintain pews in St. Matthew's.

IN THE LIMELIGHT.

Gov. Dix of New York has declared himself favorable to boxing exhibitions. "The people want them," he says. "There has been such a growing demand for it that the State was forced to recognize it and make laws regulating the sport." That was the intent of the Frawley law, he said, and if the law did not accomplish that it would have to be remedied.

Gov. Stubbs of Missouri recently visited Kansas City to deliver an address at a fair in that city. His train arrived in advance of the hour expected. The parade of fifty automobiles and the band reached the station in what was believed to be ample time. The band struck up a rousing tune to usher in the train. No train.

"Train in?" somebody finally asked.

"Sure," said the station agent. "Fifteen minutes ago."

Away went the parade and the band. A man with red hair was seen sitting on a bridge rail, his feet on his suit case, a straw in his mouth.

"Hey, there!" the man shouted.

The automobiles pulled up. It was the Governor of Kansas, who, finding no Reception Committee to greet him, had started to walk unescorted for the city.

Mayor George Parsons of Cairo, Ill., who has declined the honor of having a street here named in his honor, has been Mayor of that city four consecutive terms. He said he felt sufficiently honored in being permitted to help improve Cairo.

After thirty-three years in the service of various musical organizations of the government, Samuel Johnson, first drummer of the Marine Band, "The President's Own," is to retire from active service. He has served more than twenty years with the Marine Band and has seen the organization grow from forty pieces to seventy-odd.

There have been trust Senators, tribunes of the people like Senator Jeff Davis of Arkansas, Senators with hobbies and without, and now there is a newspaper reading Senator. He is Senator Carroll S. Page of Vermont, and he does his newspaper reading with system and success.

Capt. William H. Van Schaick, the veteran navigator who served part of a ten-year sentence in Sing Sing (N. Y.) prison for his responsibility for the burning of the excursion boat General Slocum, in 1904, has more friends than he knew. The captain was paroled recently and he has already received several offers of employment. One of them offers the superintendency of a tug-building concern. He will accept as soon as he feels physically fit.

After serving the State of Connecticut for forty years as supervisor of hangings, Warden George Raisden of the State prison will retire November 1 on a pension. Since 1894 it has been Raisden's duty to place the rope around the neck of the condemned and adjust the black cap.

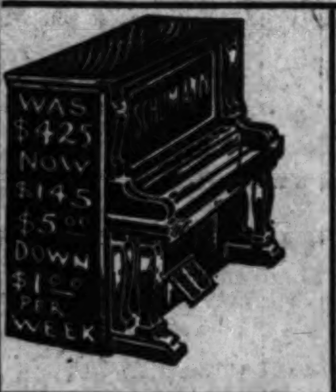
EILERS' MUSIC HOUSE entire stock of over four hundred pianos, player pianos, music rolls, cabinets, furniture, fixtures, safes, typew carpets, etc., etc., to be closed out at once. No combination of circumstances has ever brought piano prices so low as appear on our price tag

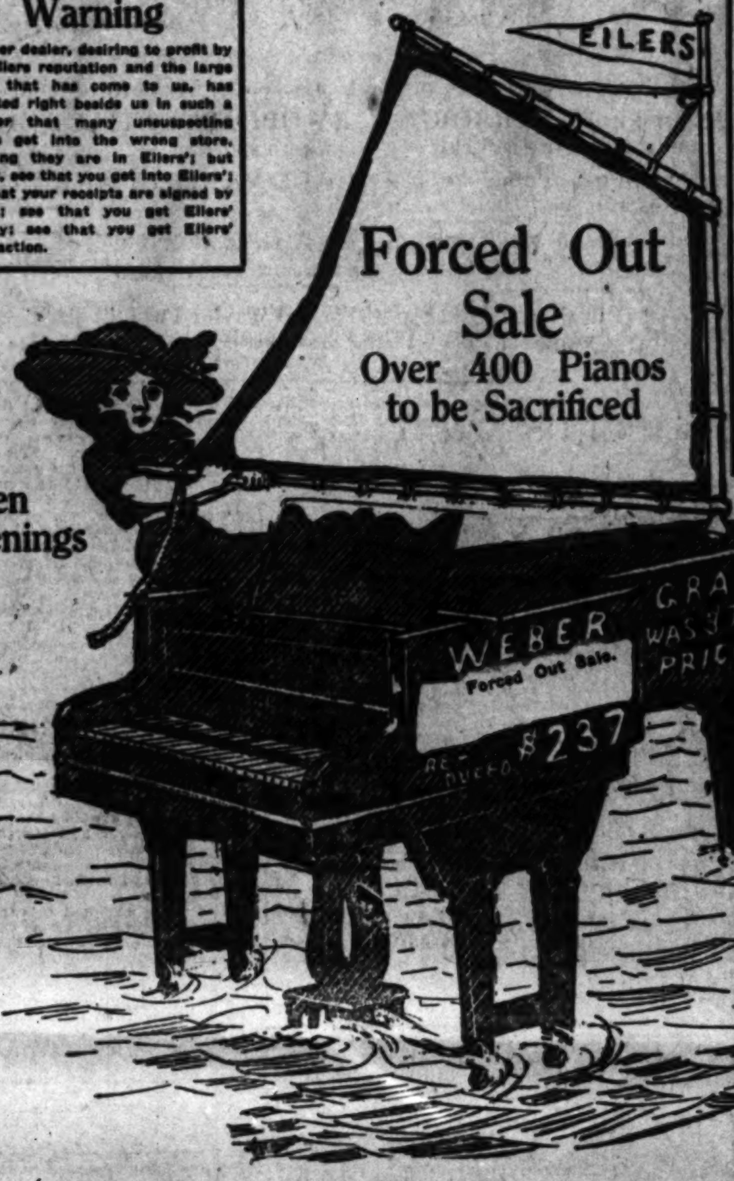
Everybody is surprised—yes, astonished that EILERS' MUSIC HOUSE is to discontinue its retail store in Los Angeles. A statement of oily promises on the part of the landlord of fair and proper treatment is not essential. Suffice it to say that matters have culminated in our ing formal notice that we will remove and vacate the said premises.

We have got to sell these pianos, player pianos, at once, even if we have to sell new pianos for $50.00 apiece on terms of $1.00 a week. If you ever expect a piano, come and see us as soon as you can. We will let you make your own price and terms, BUT YOU MUST ACT QUICKLY. We are going to close out piano, player piano, grand piano in stock, and to accomplish this we will let you name your own price and terms. Never before since the inception of the piano ness in Los Angeles has the purchasing public been offered such truly wonderful standard make pianos as will be included in this great FORCED OUT SALE



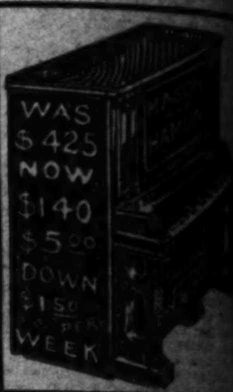
Warning

Another dealer, desiring to profit by the Eilers reputation and the large trade that has come to us, has squatted right beside us in such a manner that many unsuspecting people get into the wrong store, thinking they are in Eilers'; but watch, see that you get into Eilers'; see that your receipts are signed by Eilers; see that you get Eilers' quality; see that you get Eilers' satisfaction.

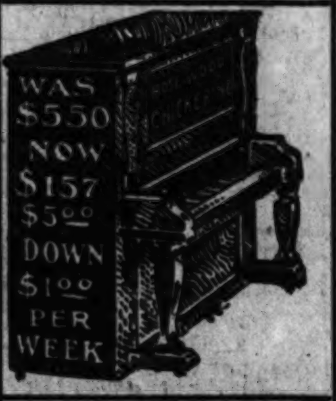


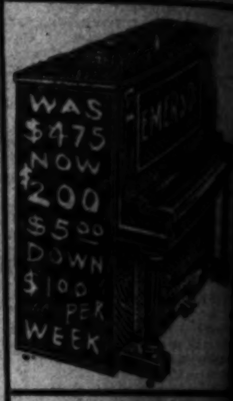
Caution

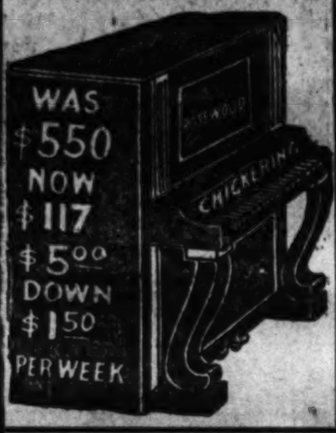
Look over the door for the name EILERS, otherwise you may be decoyed into the wrong store. At present we are unable to secure satisfactory location, but until we do we shall confine our efforts to our wholesale business, supplying retail stores in Southern California from our Los Angeles wholesale warehouse. We are going to close our Los Angeles retail store, located at 244 South Broadway, closing it up absolutely until such time as we can get a suitable building and location. Almost any amount, no matter how small, will buy a splendid piano.

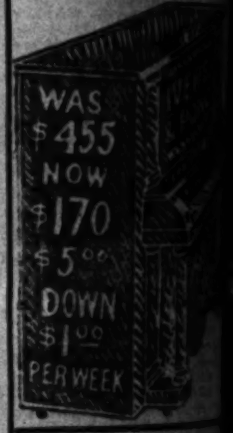


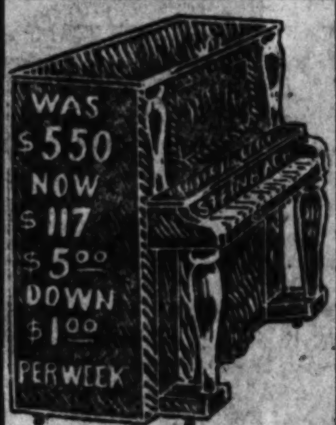
Open Evenings











All Southern California Is Piano Mad

Every piano and player piano must go at once regardless of loss. Think of seeing such celebrated makes as Decker, Weber, Kimball, Knabe, Marshall & Wendell, Steinway, Schubert and most all the aristocratic pianos of the world all on one floor, and all offered at prices that make it now an easy matter for you to own whichever instrument most appeals to you. There are dozens of famous make pianos that ordinarily sell from $500.00 to $600.00, now offered at $112, $126, $139 and $167. All of the best player pianos and piano players are included in this sale. Is it any wonder that buyers for Southern California music dealers are crowding the store and snapping up these wonderful bargains? Name your own terms, buy your piano for your own price, BUT ACT QUICKLY. Pianos must be sold if we have to sell them at $50.00 apiece.

back to our lodgings, and doffed his wet suit there. He was in a dry rig-out and a terrible temper when I got back.

"Look here, William," I said at last, "you said yourself that 'accidents will happen.' Your not saving me was an accident. I don't see that you've any cause at all to blame me."

"You've ruined my life," said William bitterly. "You've made me look ridiculous before Phyllis. You've made it ten times more difficult for me to win her now. But win her I will!"

We sat down to dinner. Five minutes later the perturbed landlady told me that somebody desired to speak to me in the passage.

I went ou tpflotdna 7S90$......

I went out to find a policeman there.

"About this morning's business, sir," he said. "I got your address from the bathing-shed attendant. The chief constable would like to see you, if you'll step down to the station at once—with me," he added significantly.

William and I, considerably puzzled, accompanied him to the station. We pressed him with queries, but he would only tell us that we should learn all we needed to know from the chief constable.

"Looks as if we're in for some trouble for not bathing in regulitaion costumes," said William, his face as long as a fiddle.

We were ushered into the chief constable's office. The policeman, pointing to me, bent down and said something.

"Ah, yes," said the chief constable, looking up. "So this is the man who is suspected of attempted suicide."

I laughed loudly at the absurd error.

"Come, it's no laughing matter," said the chief constable sternly. "We have evidence from an eyewitness that you deliberately threw yourself into the water."

I stopped laughing, and glanced uneasily at William.

"It was a sheer accident," said William. "I can personally vouch for that."

"What do you know about it?" demanded the chief constable. "Did you see it happen? Were you present?"

"No," confessed William.

"Very good; you know nothing about it. Besides, our evidence is to the effecet that this gentleman, after standing a long while looking gloomily at the water, very carefully placed his foot under a coil of rope, took two steps forward, and fell headlong. He did not even cry out."

There was a long silence.

"As a matter of fact," I said incoherently, "I—I felt very hot, and I—I thought I'd like a bath, and—"

"Then why didn't you go to the bathing-shed, hire a costume, and proceed in the usual way?"

Again there was a dreadful pause.

"The real truth of the matter is," I said desperately, "it was a—a sort of joke, you know. I did it for—for a bet."

"Yes; a bet with me," agreed William eagerly. "We can give you full details."

"I shall have to consult the Mayor about this," said the chief constable. "He may think it better to prosecute you, or he may not."

We were allowed to depart from the police station. Outside the policeman who had accompanied us thither came to us mysteriously.

"I think I can tell you gents the best way out of any further fuss," he said; and his palm became noticeably prominent. "Thank you, sir! Well, now, if I was you, I'd get Mr. Wilkington, the solicitor, to look after the job for you. He's got a lot of influence with the Mayor, and, besides, it's his wife who's the principal witness against you. See? At a word from him, like as not she'd forget what she really saw."

It was excellent advice, and we went at once to Mr. Wilkington. We explained our predicament to him, and he guaranteed to make it clear to those in authority that my fall in the sea was a complete and most indubitable accident.

He must have acted energetically, for within a couple of hours our policeman came to our lodgings again.

"The chief constable sends his compliments," he said, "and it's quite understood that this morning's business was an accident. However, the chief constable says he heard you say something about a bet, so he's sent up a list of subscribers to our poor-box in case you might care to have a look at it and feel like putting down the amount of the bet. I don't mind telling you that there would have been a charge of some sort against you, only the chief witness says she's forgot exactly what did happen."

He winked genially, and took his departure, plus certain coins of the realm.

We stayed indoors all the rest of that day, but next morning William felt hardier.

"I simply must go and get another glimpse of 'Phyllis,'" said William. "Let's go on the pier. I can't live without seeing her."

The pier was rather crowded, and it took some time to reach the pierhead.

"Hallo!" said a voice. "All's well that ends well—eh?"

It was our friend, Mr. Wilkington.

For a time he chatted to us, teasing us about the episode and its consequences.

"Come along, I must introduce you to my wife," he said presently. He led us up and introduced us to—"Phyllis."

"Oh, well," said William, quite lightheartedly, when we had left them, "it's no good talking like that! 'Accidents will happen.' Let's go back along the pier this side. As we walked up here I noticed a ripping girl, a beautiful, dark maiden in a pink dress.

ACTIVE WOMEN.

Mrs. E. W. Bender of Atlanta, Ga., is said to be the youngest grandmother in the world. She is 31 years old, and at the age of 29 she was a grandmother of two children, and a year later this number was increased to three. In 1892 she was only 13 years and three months old when her first child was born. This child, a daughter, was married in 1909 to Edward Sinclair, and in January, 1910, gave birth to twins, the mother being barely 16 and the grandmother not yet 30. In January of this year Mrs. Bender's daughter gave birth to another child.

Mrs. Grace Plumb, who is the only woman food inspector in the United States, has a way of putting her mark on goods that are not up to the standard. If she finds a can that looks as though it had been "plugged" she examines it and satisfies herself that such is the case, and then she injects into it a powerful blue coloring compound that shows all through the can.

Mlle. Lucienne Heuvelmans, the first woman in the history of the Academy of the Beaux Arts, Paris, to win the Grand Prix de Rome for sculpture, was born in Paris on Christmas Day, 1880. Her sculpture is "Electra Guarding the Sleeping Orestes." Two years ago she won the second grand prix. Her father is engaged in artistic cabinet work. She took up sculpture seriously when she was 18. For some years she has been teaching drawing and modeling at the communal schools. By reason of her award she will be the first woman at the Villa Medicis since the French school in Rome was established, over 300 years ago.

Because his wife was a suffragette and was active in politics in Denver, Thomas P. Zimmerman has obtained a divorce from her. He charged that Mrs. Zimmerman neglected her home and spent in politics the money he earned as a stone cutter.

Mrs. Andrew Brandenburger, 60 years old, of No. 4062 Botanical avenue, St. Louis, wife of a notary public, swam two and one-half miles in the Mississippi River in one hour. Mrs. Brandenburger is said to be recognized as the oldest long-distance woman swimmer in St. Louis. She was assisted from the water by her son, Dr. Louis A. Brandenburger of No. 3614 Cleveland avenue, who six years ago suggested to his mother that she learn to swim to benefit her health.

intendent Gibson of Hawaii Visits Public Schools.

H. Gibson, Inspector of Schools he Hawaiian Islands, has been the schools of this city dur- the past week, with a view to mining into the manual work of high and trade schools. Mr. Gib- says that the native Hawaiians, form about 40 per cent. of the 00 school children of the islands, most naturally to manual work, ing and gardening, and are most ly taught English through their rest in these studies. He stated even in the uttermost parts of islands, the grass huts have dis- eared, but the people still live very mitively and simply, eating poi fish, and wearing as few clothes the government will permit. On Island of Maui is the government ool Lahainaluna, established in 0. This is one of the most ad- nced of the schools, owning sev- l acres of ground, and giving a endid course in agriculture and op work, the agricultural course ng applied to the raising of sugar- ne, pineapples, etc., and the shop- rk to the building of implements eded on the farm, even to the king of cars for the transportation products from one portion of the m to the other.

Mr. Gibson expressed himself as lighted with the work of our hools, whose fame, he says, has ached the uttermost parts of his cational domain. It is the special an of the Hawaiian school depart- nt to establish practical manual ucational and agricultural schools connection with the leading indus- s of the country, and to pay the pils a little for their work. In rtherance of this object, the com- sory education limit has been sed from 16 to 17 years.

Los Angeles High School.

At Los Angeles High School, the ss in journalism, under George B. lver, is doing enthusiastic work year. Only those who wish take up the work seriously are ad- itted. Last week, the Sunday Times gazine printed an automobile story George Fennimore, a member of is class, and the latter part of last ar a clever girl landed a story in the Black Cat."

"I teach them to write straight, ar English," said Mr. Culver, "first all eradicating from their minds e inborn idea which most young ople have that they can write edi- rials and sermons while you wait. e read and criticize the pupils' ef- rts in class, and quite informally. have some good talent in my class."

At a meeting of the student body, held Thursday afternoon, the following officers were elected: President, Frank Boschke; Ruth Dressler, vice-president; Ethlyn Lillie, secretary; Homer Martin, treasurer.

Polytechnic High School.

At Polytechnic High School, the fine and applied arts department is preparing to set up its looms, and will begin the work of weaving in various textiles.

The Parent-Teacher Association held a meeting on Friday evening.

Hollywood High School.

Hollywood High School held its election of class presidents Wednesday afternoon. They are: Senior class, Henry Enders; junior class, Harvey Goodwin, sophomore class, Darrell Richardson. The Board of Control held its first meeting Thursday morning, John Hoch, president.

Manual Arts High School.

At Manual Arts High School, the lawn has been put in first-class condition, and the green grass and bright red geraniums make a beautiful setting for the handsome buildings.

On Monday, Mexico's national holiday was celebrated at assembly, with music and a brief review of Mexico's long struggle for a truly representative government. On Friday, Mrs. Brainbridge, a qualified expert, addressed the girls on "Scientific Temperance."

On Saturday, the athletic squad were guests at dinner of the Y.M.C.A. Following the dinner a rally was held. The Manual Arts boys are out every night at practice, trying to make various teams, under the training of Coach Murray. Many times the number of students who could be provided for have asked to be entered in Mr. Bailey's boxing class.

The girls are perfecting their various teams in volley ball, basket-ball and baseball, and a fencing class is being organized among upper-class girls.

Gardena Agricultural High.

The plan inaugurated at Gardena High School, last year, of using student labor for improvements, is being carried forward this year. The farm carpentry class, of about twenty boys, is building a shed for the storage of a machine. This class will be at work on a farm barn for the next couple of months. The increased attendance has required more cases for lunches, more hat rails, more tables, and the boys in cabinet making are at this

The work of getting ready for the gardens is under way. The boys are harvesting seeds under the direction of S. B. Hall, a new teacher from Oregon Agricultural College.

Evening High School.

Many teachers are enrolling in evening High School classes for applied art work, especially for metal, leather and pottery work, as the course of study is developing along this line.

The enrollment has increased well beyond the 700 mark during the past week. The courses in modern languages, commercial work, woodwork and domestic science are of especially practical value. The principal and faculty report improvement in the class of pupils attending that school. Said one of the teachers of the commercial departments, "Only the earnest men and women, with an object in life, have remained in the evening High School. All others have been weeded out. It is a pleasure to teach these."

Do you know you can't qualify for the fashion show unless you have a bonnet, made with your own fair hands, out at evening High School. This millinery work has been highly specialized, and ladies are coming from many parts of the town just to learn how to trim their own hats, in order to save hubby $15 on a foolish bit of lace and velvet.

Lectures.

Dr. Edgar L. Hewett, director of School of American Archeology, has consented to deliver three lectures to High School pupils, as follows: At Polytechnic High, on Tuesday, October 3, "Explorations in the Cliff Dwellers' Country," at Los Angeles High on Wednesday, October 4, "Guatemala and its Prehistoric People," and on Thursday, October 5, at Manual Arts, subject to be selected later.

Manual Training Department.

Any primary teacher with a hankering to hark back to the days of mud pies and doll rags, may do so, providing she will make her mud pies scientifically, and her doll rags according to official authorization. Up at Olive-street school, the primary manual training office is fitted up with shelves and drawers in which repose divers delectable materials which the teachers may use to practice on in preparing to teach the smaller children the rafia, clay-modeling and other work introduced in primary grades this year.

Some voluntary continuation work is being done by sloyd teachers. At Fifty-fourth avenue the sloyd teacher will direct some after-school work in erecting a primitive kiln, in which to fire pottery work done by the children. The boys eagerly clamor for this afternoon work, and have to be put out of the shops sometimes at 5 o'clock, so intent are they on their models of everything from picture frames to airships.

Truancy Department.

The compulsory education department reports a strong tendency among the thrifty Russians to compel their children to work, and to prevent their going to school, unless it be night school. Jesse Andrews of the truancy department reports that he found a small Russian girl of thirteen years, locked in a dark room in the squalid Russian quarter, with four smaller children, for whom she had been left to care. The parents arriving, Mr. Andrews took the mother over the Utah-street school, showed her the sunny day nursery, with its hammock and play devices, and finally persuaded her that the nursery could take better care of her children than the poor frightened little girl locked in a dark room with them

New Playground Opened.

At Normandie-avenue school, a new playground has been installed, with Miss Lela Glasscock as director. This playground is open from 8 to 9 and 2 to 5, and from 2 to 5 on Saturdays. The Parent-Teachers Association is preparing to expend $50 in its equipment. Miss Glasscock, having taken the special course in playground work at the State University, is an expert in this work.

A Composition.

An infant suffragette at Casco-street school delivered herself of the following "composition," the other day:

"Men are what women marry. They drink and smoke and swear, but don't go to church. Perhaps if they wore hats they would. They are more logical than women and also more zoological. Both men and women sprung from monkeys, but the women sprung further than the men."

Dr. Karl Escherich, a professor in the Royal Academy of Forestry at Tharandt, Saxony, has arrived in the United States for the purpose of studying the practical side of forest conservation. He says Germany is ahead of America in its theories, but this country is in advance of Germany in its practical forestry.

THE HELPING HAND.

> "How far that little candle throws his beams!
> So shines a good deed in a naughty world."

There is more than one way to lend a helping hand to a fellow-being, as the following story will show:

William Fengelman, proprietor of a local tailor shop, recently employed a man, with whom he was on friendly terms, to do some work for him. After the work was finished, Engelman met the workman and asked him the cost of the work. The man instantly named his price.

"Yes, that is right," said his employer; "only you cheated yourself out of a dollar. Instead of five dollars I owe you six, but I do not intend to pay the extra dollar for several reasons. In the first place, you are a very incompetent business man and you need the lecture I am giving you more than you need the dollar. Your labor has earned the dollar which I shall not pay you, but you do not deserve it, because you neglected to rightly calculate the worth of the work you did for me. You are a good workman, but you are thoughtless, and it is merely an accident that you undercharged instead of overcharged me. It makes no difference if you are worth a million dollars, you never will be truly independent until you learn to apply sound business principles to your habits of life. You are not responsible, and even though you should suddenly become rich, this would not relieve you of the embarrassment that always attends irresponsibility. After this I hope you will devote your full attention to the business in which you find yourself engaged. This blind news dealer shall profit by your last mistake," and the speaker took a paper from the blind man on the corner and dropped a dollar into his hand.

Policeman Peter McClellan of New York imperiled his own life in order to save Ida Levy, 6 years old, from being crushed by an electric car. The child ran in front of the car at Broadway and Decatur streets, and would have been run down but for McClellan. The policeman swung himself to the fender and seized the child before the car could strike her.

Mr. Wolf was taking his little daughter to school when she caught sight of her mother on the opposite side of the street. Drawing her hand from her father's grasp, she started across the street. She was between the car rails when she saw the approaching car. Paralyzed with fear, the little girl was unable to move, and would have been crushed beneath the car but for McClellan, who was standing on the front platform.

The late Rev. Michael Casey of the Wichita diocese left the bulk of his estate to charity. Several Catholic institutions received amounts ranging from $100 to $1000, and to the Little Sisters of the Poor was given all of the estate after the bequests had been paid.

Comte Isaac de Camondo of Paris, who died recently, divided his estate of about 4,000,000 francs among his artist friends, several operatic stars being given annuities as well as large cash gifts.

Miss Ethel Carley of Brooklyn, N. Y., recently rescued William Schmidt from drowning in the harbor at Centerfort, L. I. Miss Carley and Schmidt were members of a party of bathers, and swam to a sand bar more than half a mile from the shore. After a short rest they started on the return trip, when Schmidt was seized with cramps and was sinking when Miss Carley went to his aid. He was unconscious when they reached the shore, but soon recovered.

Single-handed and armed only with a broken limb, Mrs. Golen Lambert of West New Vineyard, Me., put a black bear to rout, and saved the life of one of her children. Accompanied by her three children, the eldest only 7 years old, Mrs. Lambert was picking raspberries. Her pails were nearly full when she was startled to see a bear rear himself upon his haunches near one of the children, who was intent upon picking and unaware of the animal's presence. Snatching a broken limb from the ground, Mrs. Lambert advanced toward the bear, waving her cudgel and making a threatening demonstration. The bear dropped to all fours and slowly backed away from the determined woman. Seizing the child, Mrs. Lambert retreated to the other little ones, and all made a hasty departure toward home, which they reached in safety. Armed men later went to the berry patch to get a shot at the bear, but could not find him.

The Pottsville (Pa.) Mission was bequeathed $6000 by Miss Anna Matilda Bright, and the Pottsville Public Library all of the books of her extensive library. Miss Bright died while on her way home from England, where she had gone for the benefit of her health. She was a member of one of Pottsville's wealthiest families.

EDUCATORS.

Dr. Elmer Ellsworth Brown, after serving under Presidents Roosevelt and Taft as United States Commissioner of Education, goes to New York this fall as chancellor of New York University. By placing him on a salary of $10,000 a year the New York University council puts the institution on a par with Columbia, Princeton and other large universities.

The late Dr. Thomas Dwight of Harvard University was an expert on the disease which caused his death—cancer. He was accustomed to lecture to his classes, using his own case as an illustration in the most matter-of-fact way. In handling the skeletons in the anatomical department, he made mention once of the fact that the bones of his grandfather were among them. "Indeed," he added, "many Harvard professors of the past have bequeathed their skeletons to this institution. I expect some day that my skeleton will appear in one of these cases. I have so willed it."

Professor Richard T. Ely, who has been appointed by President Taft to represent the United States at the International Institute of Statistics, in The Hague, this month, is head of the department of economics at the University of Wisconsin. He is a native of New York, author of many books on economics, and, although recognized as the leading American economist, he did not gain his present position without a hard struggle in his younger days. While at Columbus University he helped pay his expenses by tutoring, and winning the fellowship of letters over a class of fifty was awarded four years' study in Germany under the best instructors. He is at present in Munich, studying conditions.

John Erskine, associate professor of English at the Columbia University, and Helen Erskine have collaborated in "Written English," a handy, helpful little book, intended both for the student of English composition and for the average busy writer.

Two centuries later these far-reaching plans were carried out.

About this time he was prevailed upon to paint the portrait of a beautiful and charming woman, Mona Lisa del Giocondo, the wife of a Florentine official. It was a characteristic of Leonardo that he began many undertakings and finished few. Some of his most exquisite works were set aside by him as unfinished. Thus he was engaged at intervals on the portrait of Mona Lisa for four years, and yet he never regarded it as finished. Says a recent critic, "Leonardo wrung from art the secret of psychological expression and placed his few painfully wrought pictures at the summit of the world's achievement in this kind."

In his Treatise on Painting, Leonardo speaks of the beauty of faces to be got in letting "the soft light glide upon them, and terminate imperceptibly in delightful shadows."

In the Royal Library at Windsor there are three volumes of Leonardo MSS. and drawings, containing a vast variety of subjects—portraits, heads, groups and single figures, also drawings on optics, hydraulics, perspective, plants and rocks, and even musical airs of his own composition. There are also several odd volumes of his MSS. in other libraries. They are somewhat difficult to read as he had a peculiar habit of writing from right to left, and in a rather crabbed hand at that.

This is necessarily a very imperfect sketch of one of the world's great masters, in describing whom ordinary superlatives are inadequate, who has been said to present, in his own person, a resume of all the characteristics of his age, who "was the miracle of that age of miracles."

Morelli, a distinguished Italian author, speaks of him as "perhaps, the most richly gifted by nature among all the sons of men."

At the age of 62 Leonardo was invited to Rome by Pope Leo X, who wished to consult him in the character of philospher and physicist, rather than that of painter.

From Rome Leonardo went to Pavia, where learning, philosophy and the arts flourished, and where Francis I of France held court. The young monarch received him with every mark of respect, loaded him with favors, and settled a pension upon him for life. In the following year he accompanied the King to France and became installed as court painter. But his health rapidly declined and in a few months he expired in this foreign city.

The MS. notes, sketches and designs which Leonardo left behind give us some idea of his indefatigable industry and the almost incredible extent of the acquirements of this myriad-minded man. In the Ambrosian Library at Milan there are twelve huge volumes of his works relating to the arts, chemistry, mathematics, etc. One of them contains a collection of anatomical drawings which the eminent Dr. Hunter described as the most wonderful sketches of the kind, for accuracy and beauty, that he had ever seen.

Gave Away Land by Inches.

[Kansas City Star:] George H. Hunter of Wellington, Kan., deeded three-fifths of an inch of ground to each of ten persons. The deed came to light when George Bradley, a Wellington real estate agent, filed a protest with the State auditor to prevent the issuance of $25,000 in bonds to pay for some paving. Hunter wanted the pavement, while many others did not. In order to get enough signatures of property owners to get the pavement it is asserted that Hunter deeded one-half foot of ground he owns to ten people. Each person got one-tenth of six inches of the ground. He also deeded two feet off another lot to four persons, each person getting six inches.

Accuracy of the Telegraph.

[Washington Star:] William Loeb, Jr., at a dinner in New York, said of certain customs dodgers: "They do very incriminating things, then they claim that these things are mistakes. Granting them to be mistakes, they are suspicious—as suspicious as the business man's wife. The wife of a young business man got a wire from her husband the other evening that said: 'Shall dine with Milly Brown, an old gal of mine. Will be late. Don't wail for me.' When the business man reached home at midnight his wife met him in the hall. 'Don't wail for you!' she sneered. 'Why, I wouldn't wail for the best man that ever lived. Let alone you!' 'Why, my dear,' he stammered. Then, bursting into tears, she handed him the telegram, and in a jiffy he explained that what he had really wired was: 'Shall dine with Billy Brown, an old pal of mine. Will be late. Don't wait for me.'"

Cemetery Cure for Drunkards.

[New York Mail:] They have devised a system of treatment for inebriety in the town of New Douglas, Madison county, Ill., which possesses the merit of novelty, if nothing else. Its curative effects remain to be proved.

The new system is called the "cemetery cure." It is applied once a week by assembling all the habitual drunkards of the place and marching them off to the town graveyard, where they are left to spend a night securely tied to tombstones or in old graves which have sunk below the level of the sod.

The cure has been in use for a few weeks only, but its advocates are confident of its success. They declare that several persons, formerly regarded as hopeless inebriates, are so impressed with a single application of the treatment that they cross to the opposite side of the street when they have to pass a saloon.

Bone In His Heart.

An autopsy of one Blade, a saloon porter of Indianapolis, disclosed he was the victim of a rare affliction in that a bone had formed over the top of his heart, says the Indianapolis News.

The formation started between two tissues in which the heart was incased and grew downward from the large arteries.

His heart will be preserved for examination by medical societies. The case is one of the rarest ever called to the attention of the medical profession.

SAN FRANCISCO.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 22.—Mayor cCarthy insists that he should be elected because a Chicago newspar printed an advertisement telling the exposition to be built here and vertising workmen to come here. e Mayor states that it was inspired the Citizens' Alliance, to aid Rolph. also resents the statement of the olph people that the election of their an means employment for the unployed. There are plenty of men o need work in this city and they ow that the only way to get it is vote for Rolph.

It is interesting to note that the cord registration of 102,000 will be duced by fully 18,000. About that umber of letters sent out by the regrar have been returned by the mail rriers on account of not being able find the alleged voters. This means at there will be a big challenge list d a stuffer attempting to vote is ely to go to jail.

In a few days the primaries will over and there is no doubt in the ind of any sensible man that James olph will be chosen Mayor by a bstantial majority. McCarthy has en losing ground steadily and beuse of it is getting more violently usive as the end of the campaign proaches. One by one his henchen are deserting him and the few ithful ones left are doing their best encourage the unappreciated champion of the plain people.

The local railroad men are greatly terested in the news from Chicago at Vice-President John C. Stubbs ill retire from the Harriman lines anuary 1, 1912. His position as diector of traffic is a desirable one nd there are several men here who ink the lightning may strike them.

Alleging that he called her a "Barary Coaster," Mrs. Pearl Gilman lisky wishes a divorce from her usband, Charles W. Alisky. She is e sister of Mrs. Mabelle Gilman orey, wife of the former president the United States steel corporaon, and he is the local manager of e Pantages theatrical syndicate. Inidentally she accuses her husband of ersistent cruelty and infidelity. To trengthen her demand for $250 a onth alimony, she has tied up his ank account with an injunction, so e is not feeling any too amiable ese crisp September days.

Lee Wells Smith denies that his ife Rose, is entitled to a divorce, nd asserts that she has been a eight on him instead of a helpmate. e alleges that she spent all her time eading the daily newspapers instead f molding lead weights in his hardare store. He thought this was an asy task for her, but she disagreed with him and sued for a divorce. It ooks as though they had reached the arting of the ways and a permaent separation seems inevitable.

If social functions help any, Bernard N. Baker, who left the other night for Los Angeles, ought to make a success of his venture. He is the organizer and director of the $15,-000,000 Atlantic and Pacific Transport Company. Gavin McNab, gave him a luncheon, and asked some of the most prominent men of the city to meet him and W. R. Wheeler did likewise. Mr. Baker hopes to get the government mail contracts to be awarded in November for transit between East and West, via the Panama Canal. He left the impression here that he was a vigorous forceful man, able to get what he went after.

PLUTO.

RAILWAY WORLD.

The Grand Trunk is the latest big railroad system to substitute telephones for the old Morse system for train despatching. Railroad men declare the telephone method of giving train orders is far superior to the dot and dash system, as it saves time, gives the dispatcher the use of both hands, and permits his calling any station on the line by means of his "selector" apparatus without disturbing any other station. The Grand Trunk has had two telephone circuits in use for eighteen months.

Telephone experts of the various railroads throughout the country are much interested in the service which the Frisco has developed. The company now has in use for the operation of trains and the conduct of business more than 3000 miles of wire. A feature of the Frisco's telephone service is what is termed a "phantom circuit," by which three conversations can be carried on over two circuits. Telephone experts, while recognizing the existence of such a circuit, do not attempt to explain it. As a rule the service over such a circuit always has been found reliable. It has been found that the Frisco's service over the phantom circuit is fully up to that over the wire. The Frisco also is contemplating the equipment of certain trains with a telephone circuit by which immediate connection can be obtained with offices for instruction. This is to be used largely in cases of emergency.

A report made public at Washington shows that steam and electric roads throughout the country purchased during 1910 148,231,000 ties, paying $75,889,000 therefor. This was an increase of 20 per cent. over the record established in 1909, but less than the total for 1907. Ninety-four per cent. of the ties were for steam roads.

What probably will stand for some time as a record for tractive power of locomotives was made on the Santa Fe between Emporia and Kansas City Thursday. One of the company's big new Mallet engines, No. 3009, left Emporia Thursday morning at 10:05 with 100 loaded cars. The train reached Argentine at 5:45 p.m., averaging 14½ miles an hour for the entire trip of 109 miles. Fast freights on the Santa Fe maintain a schedule of seven hours and thirty minutes for this trip, which is but ten minutes faster than the time made by the Mallet engine train.

In point of weight and length the train's record probably never has been equalled. The entire weight of the train was 4280 tons, or 8,550,000 pounds, and its length 4200 feet. The engine alone is 125 feet long, and the caboose forty feet. Taking the weight of the average man as 160 pounds, the train could have carried 53,500 people.

Advocates of government ownership and operation of the American railways, telegraph and telephone lines should study carefully a review of government ownership of the telegraph in Great Britain, as recently published in the London Spectator, says the Railway Record. The investigation of the English newspaper shows that public ownership of the telegraph lines has been a costly financial failure.

"Forty-five years ago, in 1866," says the Spectator, "the proposal for the purchase by the government of the British telegraph lines was first advanced, and an allegedly conservative estimate set the cost at £2,300,-000. It took nearly three years to complete the negotiations, and in 1869 Parliament appropriated £7,000,000 for making the purchase—nearly three times the original estimate; but in addition to that the government was called upon to pay the railroad companies for their freehold interest in their lines, the right of way having been only leased by the telegraph companies; that meant another £4,000,000—so the acquisition of the business stood the British government £11,000,000, or approximately $55,-000,000. It was still predicted that within twenty years the net revenues would materially reduce the tax rates on the properties of the people. The disillusionment came quickly.

For the first two years of government operation there was a small net revenue, but after that the returns could not be made to meet the interest on the capital investment, and for thirty-nine years this enormous interest has been paid out of the exchequer—the pockets of the people.

"Then telegraph rates were reduced under the popular cry that reduced rates would produce profits—but just the reverse was the result. The cost of maintenance and operation increased enormously under government ownership; and the revenues falling far below this and the upkeep and necessary improvements constantly calling for more money, the drain on the exchequer became increasingly heavy."

"Commercial Honesty" is much like "German silver" the one is neither German nor silver—the other neither commercial nor honest.

Integrity is too sure of itself to hem and haw and fiddle for a euphemism. When virtue starts to draw fine points, it loses its point.

Phrases can't alter phases. Sophistries many temporarily obscure, but they can't upset the truth.

Trade is not a privileged profession. Buyers and sellers are entitled to no more moral latitude than any other classification of society.

The earth over, a contract is a contract, a pledged word is a pledged word, and an agreement is an agreement, twenty-four hours of a day and three hundred and sixty-five days in the year.

There is no such thing as approximate reliability—a man either delivers according to specifications or falls short.

No argument in support of double dealing will hold water. Dishonesty under any circumstances is culpable.

No business can be upright while it leans to doubtful methods.

No concern is in a sound state so long as its system is diseased with unhealthy practices.

Elephantiasis is a malady common alike to commerce and humans—an abnormal enlargement which produces giants at the expense of their vitality and sanity. Growth from wrong causes is dangerous.

Tricksters can't survive. Cunning is a counterfeit form of ability.

It's no more an indication of astuteness to take an undue profit from a confiding purchaser than it's a sign of financial genius to give a blind man short change.

The world's business must mainly be conducted on faith. Almost every transaction in every market proceeds on the belief of the buyer in the character of the seller.

"Commercial honesty" is a play upon words—a lie. They who uphold it can't hold out against the competition of decency.

Wherever a great institution has endured for any length of time the highest principles have characterized its creation.

A sneakthief never grew to be a captain of success—the course of crookedness is measured.

Permanency must rest upon stanch foundations—you can't build high or heavily upon a rotten beginning.

Here and there a few men of remarkable attainments have dragged themselves toward the top despite the handicap of instability, but without the hindrance of their record, in every instance they could and would have fared farther and fairer.

Where one shyster has succeeded a hundred have broken their foolish necks trying to make haste by slippery ways.

Every game has its rules. The cheat defeats himself, not his opponent.

Fouls, renigs, and misplays must at some stage come to light. The count is inevitable and with it the accounting.

Destiny and Justice, the Eternal Umpires, are always on the job.

One On the Minister.

[Lippincott's:] The new minister was noted as an indefatigable talker, and when Mrs. Schuyler, who was very busy, saw him coming she decided not to receive him. She instructed her daughter, aged 4, accordingly.

"Mamma says she's not in," said the little one when she opened the door in response to a ring.

"You go and tell your mamma," said the minister impressively, "that I'd like to know what she'll do if St. Peter sends her that kind of a message when she knocks at the gate of heaven."

"She says," said the child when she returned, "that she'll do what you'll do, only she won't make so much fuss."

Bad Memory for Dates.

[Washington Post:] Representative Thomas L. Rubey of Missouri went into the House cloakroom recently. As soon as Tom, the negro attendant, saw him a perplexed expression covered his black features. Mr. Rubey inquired as to the trouble.

"I certainly is a forgetful man," replied Tom. "A person called you on the telephone."

"Well, who was it?" asked the member of the House.

"He done tell me, but I disrecollect," said Tom.

"When did you get the call?" asked Mr. Rubey.

"It was either today or yesterday," he replied. "I never was no hand to remember dates."

What Ails You?

Do you feel weak, tired, despondent, have frequent headaches, coated tongue, bitter or bad taste in morning, "heart-burn," belching of gas, acid risings in throat after eating, stomach gnaw or burn, foul breath, dizzy spells, poor or variable appetite, nausea at times and kindred symptoms?

If you have any considerable number of the above symptoms you are suffering from biliousness, torpid liver with indigestion, or dyspepsia. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery is made up of the most valuable medicinal principles known to medical science for the permanent cure of such abnormal conditions. It is a most efficient liver invigorator, stomach tonic, bowel regulator and nerve strengthener.

The "Golden Medical Discovery" is not a patent medicine or secret nostrum, a full list of its ingredients being printed on its bottle-wrapper and attested under oath. A glance at these will show that it contains no alcohol, or harmful habit-forming drugs. It is a fluid extract made with pure, triple-refined glycerine, of proper strength, from the roots of native American medical, forest plants. The Central Church, Chicago.

Mr. Thomas Taylor Drill was precentor of Central Church. He has a rich baritone voice of fine quality, and great power of feeling. I know him to be a teacher also of unusual merit and success, and take great pleasure in commending him to all who are interested in his high art. Sincerely, NEWELL DWIGHT HILLIS.

New York, Aug. 22, 1911.

My Dear Friend: There is nothing that I can possibly say that would add to your greatness as a teacher of the voice or of singing, and no matter in which branch of it you choose to operate, whether it be voice placing, technique, style or anything else, I am satisfied to say that in this country at least you have few equals, certainly no superior.

I wish you all the success your new venture should bring, but I feel a loss now which cannot be supplied by anyone else, for I had fondly hoped that you were coming to New York where I could keep on studying with you.

Good luck. Your pupil and friend,

VAN RENSSLAER WHEELER.

(Most distinguished American Baritone.)

New York, Sept. 4, 1911.

Mr. Thomas Taylor Drill,

915 Kimball Hall, Chicago.

Dear Mr. Drill: I have sent a number of the well-known members of my various theatrical companies to you for voice-placing and voice development and style, and always with splendid results.

I consider you one of the best equipped men in this country or in Europe in the teaching of "The Art of Singing."

Yours sincerely,

GEORGE W. LEDERER.

should not miss seeing the works by him now in Los Angeles.

Thirty oil landscapes and marines by Carl Jonnevold, a San Francisco painter of Norwegian birth, are being shown in the Kanst gallery, Spring street, near Seventh.

The catalogue says that Jonnevold "is frequently called a second Keith." This may be true enough, but I must confess that he doesn't in the least remind me of Keith, except in the matter of composition. Jonnevold's color, while pleasing and harmonious, has none of that play of broken tints which characterizes the work of the modern painters who "go in" for color. It inclines strongly toward monotony.

Yet, though one picture may seem to have considerable sameness of hue, there is great variety in the canvases considered en masse, for almost no two have the same color scheme. "Spring is like an old Dutch master in the blackish greens of its foreground and the conventional blue-greens of its distant hills, its group of flat, yellowish clouds. "The Passing Storm" has nice, cool tones of gray and green. "Late Afternoon" is painted in ruddy tones, with a foreground pool like a Keith. "Sunset" is still ruddier in color. There are greenish tones in "Eucalyptus Trees."

Jonnevold is a capable painter. He is good in composition, clever in his manipulation of paint, but, it seems to me, he paints without conviction till he comes to marines, three small ones being shown in the present exhibition. These, though unpretentious in size, pleased me much more than his big landscapes. "Marine Moonlight," with its waves breaking over foreground crags, is cold and crisp in atmosphere. "Moonlight, Norway," a scene among the fjords, though a small canvas, is one of his best. "Early Moonrise" is a well painted shore marine, and shows a long strip of sandy beach, from which the waves are receding.

These pictures by Jonnevold will remain in the gallery till the thirtieth of this month. On October 2, an exhibition of twelve paintings by M. de Neale Morgan, four by Ferdinand Berkdorff, ten by A. Vachell—all Carmel artists—will open at Kanst's.

Impressions of Old Lyme.

Frederick Roland Miner, the young Los Angeles landscape painter, who has been visiting his brother in New London, Ct., for the past few months, recently took an automobile trip through Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire and Connecticut with a few friends. On his return he visited the exhibition held at Old Lyme, Ct., and writes me as follows concerning his impressions:

"I am inclosing a catalogue of the Old Lyme exhibit of paintings, and have marked the prices, as I thought you would be interested. I will send you a part of the New York Times, which gives some account of the show.

"There were many more sketches than pictures, and I found these as a whole much better. One by Cohen (a sketch) sold for $150, which is a good price for a sketch, I think. There was much fine work, and none you could call bad. These painters are somewhat scattered, as their work shows, for the pictures represent scenes from Maine to South Carolina.

"Old Lyme has been painted so much that many of the painters are seeking other fields. William S. Robinson, who was in Los Angeles last winter (and wants to return this winter,) told me that he was on a number of New York juries, and that when he saw pictures of the old bridge that crosses the Lieutenant River, which runs through Lyme, he knew at once that some amateur had sent it in, as the professionals had quit painting that subject long ago.

"I want to tell you of an old place in Old Lyme where I visited Robinson, at his invitation. I think it would interest you, as it would others in art.

"At the extreme northern end of Old Lyme street, a wide village street lined with old mansions and arched over far above by the branches of old elm trees, is the Griswold homestead, whose high-pillared colonial mansion lacks but seven years of being a century old, and whose fame has spread by the paintings of it, done by artists of note, one of which now hangs on the walls of the Corcoran Gallery at Washington. This place has been the habitation of many artists, as many as twenty-two being housed there at one time, among them being painters of note, such as Ranger, Hassam, Robinson, Wiggins and others.

"About the large grounds are scattered studios in picturesque spots beneath great trees and flowering shrubs. There are painters who have spent their entire time painting in this yard, the trees, the flowers and the mansion. The Lieutenant River, a narrow winding stream, flows along the back of the grounds, and is arched by a very paintable bridge that has not been neglected by the artists.

"A wide hall runs through the old house, and one can look through it from the front garden to the brick-paved verandas where are set long tables where the household dines and sups in pleasant weather.

"All the panels and other available places on the lower floor are covered with paintings by the artists who tarried in this interesting place for a time. Over the fireplace in the dining-room is a hunting scene painted by H. R. Poore, the horse and dog painter, representing a group of artists at work in the fields of Lyme, when a party riding to hounds go by, at which the artists drop their work and chase along after the dogs. This is well done, and very amusing. The artists represented (and they are said to be good likenesses) are Childe Hassam, who is dressed in the "altogether" from the waist up (he is said to have been found in the fields on a hot day painting in that costume;) Metcalf, Ranger, Robinson, who recently sold a picture to the Carnegie gallery, and who has served on juries for the National Academy of Design, in New York; Pennsylvania Academy of Fine Arts, American Water Color Society, etc.; Rook, Howe, Fote, Dresser, Du Mond, Talcott, Yates, Jongers Vorhees, Cohen, Wiggins, Hoffman, Griffin, Henning (a writer,) and Jules Turcas.

"A door in the front hall has a panel by Ranger of the Bow River by moonlight, and on the other panel of the same door is a painting by Poore, carrying out the same scene, in which a dog is barking at the moon of Ranger's panel. This is splendidly done, and must be vary valuable.

"In the sitting-room is a panel by William H. Howe of a bull lying down in an old stable. This is a splendid piece of work, and worthy of a place in any gallery.

"Some of the panels are very valuable, as proved by an offer of $1500 for the panel by Howe a year ago (which was refused, by the way.)

"In the hall are hung many good pictures, and a small exhibit is given here at the time of the larger one in the village, by the artists who happen to be there at the time.

"I expect to leave this hostelry (the Mohican Hotel, New London) tomorrow for the White Mountains of New Hampshire, where I have friends, and where I hope to get some of the brilliant autumn foliage. I hope to be in Los Angeles the last of October, and Robinson says the best of the foliage lasts from the 20th to the 30th of October, so I may miss the best of it, after all.

"I am anxious to see the new work of which you have written, especially Puthuff's. Was glad to see you speak of him so highly, as I think he stands among the best of American painters."

ART NOTES.

KAISER'S THREE GRANDSONS.

Latest Exclusive Photos Show Originality in Face and Dress. Heir to the Crown Prince the Soberest of the Three.

BERLIN, Sept. 10.—Ask the average German who is the most popular figure in all the Fatherland and he is almost sure to answer, "Our Crown Prince." Ask him who comes next and, as likely as not he will reply, "The Crown Princess and her children."

For the breeze of human nature and healthy ideas emanates from the household of the Kaiser's heir.

Heir to the German Crown Prince.

Prince Wilhelm of Prussia, sober-looking as befits his seniority in the family.

Though beaten in her attempt to keep Prussian martial training out of her nursery, the Crown Princess, who has imbibed ideas of simplicity, fresh air and the natural life abroad, has reduced it to a minimum.

Her children are drilled, as their father and granfather were, in strict military etiquette, and notions of royal dignity and divine right are instilled into them in a way she abhors. But when that is over she has the young princes out in the park playing as children should.

Originality is encouraged in them and any healthy tendency they may have is developed, instead of being repressed. So no home, great or small, in all Germany has a more merry trio in it.

When their father was a boy he often found himself in a scrape, and one day, after he and his five brothers had crushed the silk hats of six dignified callers, the Kaiser said in mingled anger and amusement that he had the "worst six boys in all Berlin." That a plentiful supply of mischief has descended to the youngest generation is evident from a glance at the portraits of these young princes. Perhaps that is why the Kaiser's chief delight is to play with his grandsons. It is a relaxation at once complete and delightful; and a sight for statesmen and warriors to see the great emperior being ordered about by his youngest playmate.

The royal family and the German public alike have been amused to see the various styles of hairdressing shown by the boys in their latest portraits. Little Prince Wilhelm, as befits the heir to so much dignity, is the most sober-looking of the three. Besides, he is the eldest, having been born just over five years ago.

Prince Louis Ferdinand, hardly a year younger, is the humorist of the family. His chief delight is in merry pranks and he personally tousled his hair into the fashion of a clown before posing for his photograph. Every German mother has fallen in love with him over that picture.

Prince Hubertus is only 2 years old, so he came to the camera fresh from the nurses' hands. But the twinkle in his eye and the smile on his face surely betoken the beginning of as merry a record as any of them.

BITS OF VERSE.

Expectation.

Fleet wheels had whirled for us, deep hedgerows threading.
Till where, down labyrinthine lanes enfolden,
The gray, green-mantled church stood, half withholden
From the passing eyes by elms full-fledged for shedding
Midsummer shade, noon-drunken, softly spreading
O'er swarded path a dappled pavement, golden
And beryl-flecked, to a door whose dusarch olden
Let glimpse in hesitant gleams, the sill's gloom dreading.
A knot of children, snowy-bibbed, blue-skirted,
Hung round the gate from devious ways diverted;
Shawled crone's slow halt and girl's light foot one goal
Had found thereby. Grand weather for whose wedding
Methought; and straight a daw from ivi'ed steading
Swoopen startled, as a bell began to toll.
—Jane Barlow in the Living Age.

Beside the Sea.

By the blue sea I sit and dream!
The noon is high, the wind's asleep,
A Sabbath calm broods o'er the deep;
White ships, like lilies, lie at rest
Upon the water's quiet breast,
And mild the heavens that bend above—
A canopy of tender love.
In reverence hushed all things doth seem,
So by the sea I sit and dream.
By the blue sea I rest content!
The yesterdays with longing fraught,
All sorrows that the years have brought,
I give them to the ebbing tide
To scatter, scatter far and wide;
E'en memories that sometimes bless
Of service sweet, or happiness
Found in dim woods, by lake or stream
Seem drifting from me as I dream.

By the blue sea I live anew!
Unto my soul a glad new morn
Is silently but surely born;
For peace and tardy hope have come
Within my heart to make their home;
The larger life, with portals wide,
Comes toward me on the flowing tide,
And entering it, at one I seem
With God, as by the sea I dream.
—[Lucia W. Eames in Boston Transcript.

By the Fire.

I heard an old man—
They were talking, two old friends of youth
Who met but seldom now,
By a quiet little fire at the close of day—
I heard an old man say,
As the clouds fell on his brow,
"Sure I dread to ask for the old friends,
For the word is always now—
'Dead, these three years dead, dead this many a day!'
All have gone to their ends,
All have passed away.
White thin hairs to each brow,
And a chair in the corner each day,
And time to remember and pray,
And one by one to our ends!
I heard an old man say,
"Don't speak of the old friends,
They have passed away
These long years since, this many a day;
We are left lonely now
By the fire, to remember and pray!"
—Shaemas O Sheel, in Harper's Weekly.

The Prisoner of God.

Once long and long ago I knew delight.
God gave my spirit wings and a glad voice.
I was a bird that sang at dawn and noon,
That sang at starry evening time and night;
Sang at the sun's great golden doors, and furled
Brave wings in the white gardens of the moon;
That sang and soared beyond the dusty world.
Once long and long ago I did rejoice,
But now I am a stone that falls and falls.
A prisoner, cursing the blank prison walls,
Helpless and dumb, with desperate eyes, that see
The terrible beauty of those simple things
My soul disdained when she was proud and free.
And I can only pray: God pity me,
God pity me and give me back my voice!
God pity me and give me back my wings!
—Olive Douglas in The Academy.

NEW FLOOR MATERIAL.

Magnesium Chloride Mixed With Sawdust and Pulverized Magnesia. Inexpensive and Nearly Fireproof.

The materials described in the report in Daily Consular and Trade Reports for March 15, 1911 (which dealt chiefly with the manufacture of sawdust briquets,) concerning which further information is now desired, is used very extensively in Germany for flooring purposes, and is becoming fairly well known in the United States. Considerable exportations of magnesium chloride have been made to various American purchasers, particularly in Los Angeles, Cal., all of which is understood to be taken up for the mixture thereof with sawdust for the production of a flooring that is both permanent and relatively inexpensive and to a considerable extent fireproof, writes oCnsul-General Skinner of Hamburg.

The flooring composition consists of solution of magnesium chloride to which pulverized magnesia is added, and which of itself forms a white, absolutely solid, artificial stone. If to this cement sawdust be added in considerable proportions, the combination, when it becomes hard, posses many of the qualities of both wood and stone. There are many manufacturers of these floorings in Germany, some of which are mixed on the spot and laid soft on the space to be covered, while others are molden into plates and delivered ready made. One Hamburg firm impregnates the wood meal with oil before mixing it with the magnesia paste and thereby renders it nonabsorbent.

In Germany flooring of this kind from 23 to 25 millimeters (0.905 to 0.984 inch thick costs 7.50 marks per square meter ($1.785 per 1.196 square yards) laid. As magnesium chloride is hygroscopic, these floors may become damp if the proportions of the composition are not carefully determined upon, and the salts thereby precipitated are injurious to wood and iron. Every manufacturer has his own recipe and undertakes, naturally, to overcome this quality of the principal raw material. The cheaper grades of flooring are colored to resemble linoleum or mosaic pavements, and, in many instances, have given entire satisfaction during a considerable term of years. The emigrant halls of the Hamburg-American line in Hamburg are paved almost entirely with this composition. Floors thus made are more elastic than cement floors, are much warmer, and preserve a smoother surface. Under the fire test this flooring chars, but does not burn, and is a poor conductor of heat.

Used for Many Purposes.

Manufacturers of the artificial wood plates use cork waste as well as sawdust, and produce an infinite variety of building materials, including floorings, wainscoting and roofing plates. One well-kown maker supplies a stair covering in one color at 3.50 marks per square meter (83.3 cents per 1.196 square yards) laid, or in several colors at from 5 to 7 marks per square meter ($1.19 to $1.666 per 1.196 square yards.) The same manufacturer lays a cheaper flooring intended to be covered afterward with linoleum or parquet flooring at 1.60 to 2.50 marks per square meter (38 to 83.3 cents per 1.196 square yards.)

Still another manufacturer supplies flooring meal to be used according to his formula at 7, 9 and 12 marks per 100 kilos ($1.666 to $2.142 and $2.856 per 220 pounds,) according to the quality and purpose for which it is intended.

An Infidel Missionary Perhaps.

[Chicago Tribune:] The man who was about to move out was showing the prospective tenant through the building.

"In this attic," he said, "you will find a lot of infidel books left here by somebody who occupied the house before I moved in. You can do what you please with them, of course."

"I see. How long have you lived here, Mr. Squallop?"

"Since 1897."

"Yes?" said the other, picking up one of the volumes and looking at the title page. "This book, I notice, was printed in 1904."

"Mr. Spurlong," said Mr. Squallop, after a painful pause, "I have decided to tell you the truth about these books. I bought them and put them up here myself."

WOMEN'S WORK, WOMEN'S CLUBS

BY SYDNEY FORD.

Miss Helyn Osborne Henry,

Who has circled the Pacific.

THE season of club openings is at hand and, beginning with next week, will be in full swing. The Ebell programme is the first of the October sessions. The first meeting will be on Monday, October 2, when the president, Mrs. E. C. Bellows, will give the annual address which will be followed by announcements for the season by the general curator, Mrs. William Read. A pleasing feature will be the group of French nursery rhymes sung in costume by Miss Ruth Hayward. This meeting is open to members only.

On Monday, October 9, Mr. and Mrs. Harry Clifford Lott will be heard in a Kipling programme, and the following week Mrs. George Goldsmith will present an appreciation of Walter Brown's "Every Woman,' a modern morality play.

Miss Helen McGregor Todd of Chicago will speak on "The Child and the Factory," Monday, October 23, and the last Monday in the month will be devoted to a charter day reception, to which each member will be privileged to bring one guest.

Some of the smaller clubs have already begun the year's work and others open this week. The Ibsen work begun last spring will be again carried on, the first meeting of the year occurring next Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 a No 1500 Figueroa street, when Mrs. Mila Tupper Maynard will address the club on "Ibsen's Early Life and Work.

It is the plan of the women in this class to study the modern drama thoroughly, and a knowledge of Ibsen is deemed the best foundation for such study. The lyrical dramas, "Brand," "Peer Gynt" and "Emperor and Galelean" will be the subjects studied during the fall series. This class is open to anyone interested.

The Shakespeare Club announces the opening of its nineteenth consecutive year's class for next Tuesday afternoon at Cumnock Hall. Membership is open to all and strangers in the city are particularly welcome. The first play to be considered will be "As You Like It," and Mrs. Mila Tupper Maynard, an accomplished Shakespearean student, is the instructor.

The Rosecrans Study Club will hold its first meeting of the year at Echo Park Clubhouse next Wednesday afternoon. The new officers and members of the board will welcome new members, as well as old, and visitors and strangers are also invited. After informal greetings, there will be music and an address by Mrs. Amelia M. Calkins on "The Fine Art of Speech." Wednesday, October 4 the club will begin the regular study work under the leadership of Mrs. Calkins, who will direct the literary and art section. The Jane Addams section will be in charge of Mrs. J. W. Morris and others. This section is now organizing a mother's club extension which will be an important feature of Rosecrans this year.

Seekers' Study Club.

The Seekers' Study Club will meet with the vice-president, Mrs. Flora Bradford, at No. 6112 Mesa avenue, next Tuesday afternoon. The health, physical culture and literature sections are popular and beneficial. A course in California law will be introduced at the next meeting. Miss Luella Wells of No. 5855 South Los Angeles street is the corresponding secretary of this club and Los Angeles women interested along the above lines are cordially invited to meet with the club.

Clever Artist Here.

Miss Hilda Hasse of New York is the guest of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. H. E. Hasse of Santa Monica. Miss Hasse, who formerly resided here and has many friends in this vicinity, has made a name for herself in the metropolis as a clever artist, having done a good deal of illustrative work not only in New York but in London, where she spent two years.

What Clubs Accomplish.

In looking over the club year books just issued it is interesting to note the general summing up of last year's accounts which indicate just what each particular club has accomplished. Some of the year books do not publish these interesting reports, but contain merely a list of the names of members, committees and the printed programmes rendered during the year at each session of the club.

The Ruskin Art Club year book is always hailed with eagerness by the members because it looks "forward and not back" and gives an outline of study for the coming year, together with the programmes from week to week.

The year book of the California Federation of Women's Clubs is full of valuable information. It tells what has been accomplished during the year in the way of philanthropic, social and educational work. Of this I had something to say last week.

Today let us look for a moment at what the Ebell Club accomplished last year as set forth in its year book. The annual report of the recording secretary shows that this great organization now numbers 1148 members—the largest woman's club in the entire State of California. The popularity of this club is indicated from the fact that 3600 guests were entertained at the Monday afternoon programmes last year. The admisson fees and dues of members amounted to over $12,000 and the dividends from the Ebell Building Association stock, of which the club owns 2875 shares, amounted to more than $1000.

In the way of gifts and philanthropies the Ebell Club spent $275 in furnishing the model cottage at the Utah school; gave $100 for the milk station at Bethlehem Institution; contributed $50 for the Times disaster sufferers' fund; $25 for the maternity cottage; $25 for the Boyle Heights day nursery; $35 for endowment fund at Occidental College; $37 for the Y. W.C.A., junior room. These are a few of the many gifts bestowed by the club.

These Will Travel.

The Ebell department of art and travel, which will meet the first and third Wednesdays of each month, beginning with October, will enjoy a tour of Spain this year, going by way of the Azores, Madeira and Gibraltar. Mrs. Edward Richard Potter is curator of this section; Miss Elizabeth Oliver, assistant; Miss Grace H. Evans, secretary, and Miss Anna Beckley, instructor.

Miss Beckley has charge of the reference department of the public library and has been connected with that institution since 1893. She has compiled a valuable list of 500 pictures of the representative works in architecture, sculpture and painting, which should be in every school library.

Miss Beckley has also, during the past three years, done considerable lecture work before clubs and schools, on art and history. She will give a series of fourteen talks on Spain before the Ebell art and travel section this year.

She Will Lecture.

Miss Helyn Osborne Henry, who returned not long since from an extended tour to New Zealand and Australia with her parents, Dr. and Mrs. J. Q. A. Henry, announces a series of twelve travel talks, "Circling the Pacific" to be given Monday mornings in a studio in the Blanchard building, beginning tomorrow.

Miss Henry has traveled widely in company with her father and has studied in England, Berlin and Lausanne, Switzerland. Her travel talks will include a discussion of the geography, history, government, religion, social conditions and customs of the countries she visited during her year's tour of the Pacific.

Mrs. Henry is now in San Francisco awaiting the arrival of Dr. Henry, who is returning from Australia.

Author of "My Soldier Lady" Here.

Among the clever women now visiting Los Angeles is Mrs. Ella Hamilton Durley of Iowa, who has filled a wide field in the intellectual life of the Middle West. A university graduate, she added a year's residence, study, and travel in Europe to her preparation for a life work that has been full of activity in many directions—as educator, writer and lecturer. She was at one time editor of the Northwestern Journal of Education, and a member of the Iowa State Board of Educational Examiners. After that she was editor of the Des Moines Daily News. Her latest achievement in a literary line is her book "My Soldier Lady," which is a series of letters written in reply to those of "The Lady of the Decoration," by a Kentuckian to her friend in Japan. The book ran through five editions and is so vivacious and entertaining that it holds one from the first to the last page.

Mrs. Durley has been spending the summer at Palms.

A Sex Insurrection.

Mrs. William Force Scott, the New York leader of the antis, says that if the accusation that man is a "mere biological necessity," as asserted by a suffrage leader, is true, there is no cause for disturbance. A necessity is rooted in the eternal orders and it is therefore good to be a necessity; a political woman is not a necessity.

"It is the restless women of today who are crying for the ballot," she says, "and they are like children crying for the moon. They have little conception of what government really is—they do not seem to realize that it is not a free employment bureau, raising wages with the ballot. This political agitation among a very small minority of women is a part of a great sex insurrection which is sweeping over the world—as mad a turmoil as any religious crusade or dancing frenzy. If the voters will keep themselves steady for a short time, they will see it pass as the mists roll up from the lowlands when the sun rises. I would like to say to the men of California:

" 'We stand before you, free women. Do not bind us. You know the power of the political machine. Keep one free political agent in this whole land.' "

George Junior Republic.

A meeting in the interests of the Los Angeles auxiliary of the George Junior Republic was held last Tuesday at the residence of Mrs. H. P. Barton, No. 1012 Westlake avenue. Miss King, who has taught the boys of the republic for the past year, gave an interesting account of the progress of the work and the manner of training these future citizens of our country.

The women of the auxiliary have pledged themselves to provide at least one scholarship for next year and are also planning means to assist in raising funds for a Los Angeles cottage to be built there, as the majority of the boys are from our own city. The next meeting will be held at the home of Mrs. M. P. Waite, No. 2138 Hobart boulevard.

SHEEP FROM BOKHARA DESERT.

Texas Rancher Has the Only Herd of Karakule Sheep in the United States.

[El Paso Herald:] Dr. C. C. Young of Goodnight, Tex., is in El Paso seeking to secure a ranch near Finley, Tex., seventy-one miles from El Paso on the Texas and Pacific Railroad, where he expects to secure fourteen sections of land for the purpose of raising Karakule sheep, he having arranged to bring a herd of fifty head from the Bokhara Desert, in Western Turkestan, Central Asia.

At present he has the only herd of this species of sheep in the United States, having raised fifty-six head of full-bloods from a herd of fifteen which he brought to this country two and one-half years ago.

An effort was made to have him exhibit his sheep at the El Paso fair in 1909, but he did not care to bring them here, as he feared they might be injured.

His purpose, he says, will be to cross the full-blooded Karakules with native yews and raise fine furs better than those we import from Asia each year and for which we pay $14,000,000 annually. Discussing the sheep, he said:

"In bringing the first sheep to this country we had sixty-eight camels and employed a bodyguard of fifty Cossacks, and were one year and one-half in transit, and were five months in the United States before we could bring them to Texas.

"The importation of the animals to the United States necessitated the aid of President Theodore Roosevelt, as the law does not permit the importation of any animals from Bokhara because of the surra, a parasite with which they are almost invariably infested and which finds its way into the blood, attacks the red cells, and produces toxaemia and results in death from exhaustion.

"In 1881 one-half a dozen half-breed Karakules were smuggled out of Bokhara, but for thirty years attempts had been made without success to smuggle out full-blood bucks. The authorities would not permit the thoroughbreds to be taken out of the country, but in a very few instances the Emperor of Russia has compelled them to allow a few small herds to be taken out.

"Through President Roosevelt, I secured a concession from the Emperor of Russia and took out the herd of fifteen which I brought to Texas.

"As much as $3000 can be secured for the skin of a full-blood Karakule, and these skins are used to ornament the walls of the palaces of the emperors of Turkestan and Bokhara."

Pill-Making Crabs.

[Harper's Weekly:] These tiny creatures, which are mostly about the size of a pea, are found in abundance on the shores of the Malay Peninsula. They are usually first perceived on the beaches, after the going down of the tide, when they give the beach the appearance of being covered with loose, powdery sand and holes of various sizes. Upon looking more closely, it is perceived that little radiating paths converge among the litter of sand to each hole, and that the sand itself is in minute balls.

At the approach of an observer there immediately becomes apparent a peculiar "twinkle," which is nothing else than the simultaneous and rapid retreat of a multitude of the tiny crabs into their holes.

Should one who is watching these curious little creatures take up his position by one of their holes and remain perfectly motionless, they will in time come out, when he will be enabled to see them at work.

Coming cautiously to the mouth of the hole, the crab will reconnoiter a bit, and, when satisfied that no enemy is near, it will venture about its own length from its lurking place. Then, rapidly taking up particles of sand in its claws, it will deposit them in a groove beneath the thorax.

Today's Waste Tomorrow's Hope.

[Chicago Journal:] According to government geologist authority, the "visible supply" of lignite in this country is about 740,000,000,000 tons and of "air-dry fuel," or ready-to-burn peat, about 12,000,000,000 tons. So far lignite and air-dry fuel have been to a large degree considered practically useless by-products of nature.

Careful experiments, however, show that they are much better than coal for use in connection with gas engines. Prof. Robert E. Fernald asserts that the gas engine, "the toy of today," will supersede the steam engine. Prof. Fernald is not a gas engine promoter. He is a scientist connected with the geological survey. He asserts further that the use of gas engines, with the cheaper lignite and dry fuel instead of coal, will mean a saving of $100,000,000 to $200,000,000 in the nation's fuel bill each year. So nature's by-products, the "waste" of today, may become the nation's fuel hope of tomorrow.

Unexpected Testimony.

[New York Mail:] Old Mr. and Mrs. Jones were giving their annual party and Mr. Jones was making his usual speech.

"For forty years have my good wife and I traveled hand in hand down life's thorny path," he said. "In all those years not one single harsh, hasty, unkind word passed our lips. Isn't that true, mother?"

"Mother" had quietly fallen asleep on the sofa, and as he laid his hand caressingly on her shoulder she snorted defiantly and said, sharply:

"Get up yourself and light the fire, Sam. I lit it last, and I'll see you far enough before I'll do it this morning, you —— Oh, oh, I—I—why, I must have dropped off to sleep."

"And I think you'd better have stayed asleep, Tilly," hissed Samuel into her ear.

Had Nothing On Him.

Rabbi Joseph Silverman, the noted pastor of New York, says The Cosmopolitan, tells an amusing anecdote of an Englishman and a Scotchman, who were bragging in loud tones.

"Me man," said the Britisher, "tain't hoften a person is tooken fer royalty, but I've been mistook for th' Prince of Wales in me younger doys."

"Hoot, man," answered the Scott, "I myself, have been called th' Duke of Argyll!"

The man selling collar buttons paused to listen. "Dat's nuttin'," said he with a deprecatory gesture, "I vas meetin' ah friend in Ravington strit, an' he shouted: 'Ah, Holy Moses! Is it you?' " is shy and retiring, in which case we can only recommend any aspirant to his hand going boldly in with a pretty and diffident suggestion. The only trouble is Mr. Browne is almost sure to offer to be a mother to her. He is not called "Madre" for nothing.

Three good-looking ones are Messrs. Harold Braly, William Bacon and Gerald Young. And two of those have arrived at the stage where one really does not know whether they are engaged or not. But any one of them would prove highly presentable, and no girl need be ashamed to own them. Those that like them dark and poetical should turn their attention to Mr. Gerald Young, while those who prefer a lighter shade, with merry blue eyes (the kind it is unsafe to trust,) and a non-committal attitude, will do well to regard Mr. William Bacon.

In Harold Braly the epicure in outline will doubtless find her choice. Outwardly he is a perfect man, and we can only offer up a prayer that the rest of him is "according."

Messrs. Winfred Mace and Ward Dawson are a shade too young for matrimony—but one simply has to catch 'em young to catch 'em at all. Both are thoroughly and emphatically eligible.

Then we have Charles Seyler. Ah, I see you all know him. Even men describe him as good looking, and he is all too well endowed with the wherewithal for maintaining households. Time and again one hears with a sigh what a very nice husband he would make.

Likewise Phil Stanton, the gay bachelor who owns most of Bay City. Eligibility is written all over him. And Mr. Lewis Schwaebe, the automobile prince. Most girls would be content to marry one automobile—fancy the wild luxury of marrying a few hundreds. Ah me, but which of all those girls who have sampled rides in those automobiles is "she?" At all events, it is not announced yet, so there is still a chance.

Warren Wood, the fascinating yachtsman, is eligible enough, but his is a hard case. You see, he always will conduct the preliminary attentions on a yacht—and of all the unromantic episodes an attack of mal de mer is about the worst. That is the crucial test. This seems an opportune place to give a reliable recipe for seasickness—there's nothing like a pickled walnut before embarking. Pickled walnuts are hard to carry in a reticule, but that is an obstacle most dauntless maidens would be prepared to overcome in such a splendid cause. The girl who can resist a desire to turn pale green and gaze earnestly into the ultramarine depths of the fathomless ocean, etc., will be the one to secure the eligible yachtsman.

George Kline is another eligible—he has been sur le tapis for some little time now, and appears to be uncommonly dexterous at elusiveness. But he is a good-looking bachelor of distinctly comfortable means, and this sort of dallying should not be allowed to go on.

Young Brace Carter of the San Gabriel Country Club will also soon be well within the arena. He, too, is heir to a fortune, and there is the loveliest automobile in the family. He is the hero of a hundred athletic trophies—and he is a coming golfer of credit and renown.

And, oh, dear, I nearly forgot Mr. H. M. H. Woodcock. And he is so good looking. He is perfectly irresistible in those lovely golf stockings. And he sings like an angel. That, in fact, is the difficulty in his case. He sings to all the girls instead of proposing to them. Several times he has been on the verge of capture, and he sang himself out of it.

alive after fifteen minutes, but died five minutes after that.

It took 100 per cent. carbolic acid more than one minute to kill a flea; of two fleas that were made to swim in a 1-1000 mercuric chloride solution, a powerful germicide, one was alive after ten hours, the other after eighteen hours; powdered sulphur was practically inert and useless for killing fleas. Hydrocyanic acid is among the most powerful poisons, yet five fleas exposed for forty-five minutes to hydrocyanic gas were alive at the end of the test.

PYTHON GULPS A PIG.

In Twenty-five Minutes It Got Outside a Forty-five Pound Young Porker.

[Philadelphia Ledger:] The ability of snakes to perform feats of swallowing their prey is astounding. Recently a small boa, scarcely four feet in length, with a head no larger than a man's thumb, in the Philadelphia zoo, swallowed a full-grown pigeon. The keepers put the pigeon in the cage at night, thinking that an Indian python seven or eight feet long would take it, but a great swelling in the body of the little boa showed what had become of the bird. As no snake chews or rends its prey, it passed his head and throat entire. The enlargement did not disappear for a week.

"Long Tom," a giant reticulated python, fed on a pig weighing forty-five pounds. Wanting to get some photographs of the monster reptile taking large prey, the pig was put in the den alive, but as his prey had been killed for him in captivity, the snake got frightened when the pig began to move about and squeal, and backed away. When the pig was killed, and the reptile smelled the blood, he took the animal at once, and in twenty-five minutes it had disappeared. The pig is, however, an easy object to swallow, compared with a dense pelage of fur or feathers.

For two or three days the stomach was enlarged to almost the size of a beer keg, but on the third day the swelling began to diminish, and by the end of the fifth day the body had returned to its normal diameter. Contrary to common belief, these big snakes will generally soon learn to take their prey after it has been killed. They are usually fed on chickens and rabbits, killed, but while still warm. They have, however, been fed with cold-storage rabbits that were killed in Australia. Miss Grace Clark, snake charmer, says that she once had a snake that would take a chicken after it was dressed and cut into pieces, receiving the pieces one at a time. A few months ago the writer wanted to feed a very large pigeon to a very small Indian python. In order to save himself the trouble of working over the shoulders, we cut off the wings. After gorging the birds, we offered him the wings, which he took and swallowed.

The python which swallowed the pig was received from Carl Hagenbeck, of Hamburg, Germany, in July, 1907. He has a photograph of it in the act of swallowing an Indian antelope weighing more than ninety pounds. He had another reticulated python, which swallowed a ninety-seven-pound ibex. A python in the Cincinnati zoological gardens swallowed a goat weighing forty-two pounds. All of the goat that passed intact were the horns, the hoofs and Recently a big reticulated python passed the hoofs of a pig. They were shown to Dr. W. T. Hornaday, the director of the New York zoological park, who identified them as the hoofs of the Bornean wild pig, of about forty pounds weight. A ship's captain, in bringing over a large reticulated python found in the excrement the quills of a Javan porcupine, lying in the same relative position they occupied on the animal's body. The reptile must have begun with the head, extending the coils backward over the body, and pressing the quills down horizontally in their natural state of rest. Evidently this is a species of prey a snake could not disgorge.

OVER THE SEA.

The first lady university professor in Germany has just been created in the person of Mlle. Gertrude Jeanne Wockler, D. Ph., of Berne University, who has been appointed assistant professor of physics at Leipsic University. It is true that a year ago Countess Von der Linden, privat docent at Bonn University, also received a title of professor, but the Prussian authorities opposed her nomination to the chair of assistant professor of zoology. Mlle. Wockler, who has been more successful, is a Swiss, 33 years of age, and will be the youngest professor in the only Saxon university. She has for several years taken a very active part in the feminine emancipation movement.

Maj. Leopold Matiegka, a retired officer of the Austrian army, is making his sixth trip around the world. On his return to Budapest, he says, he will rest a few weeks, and then start on his seventh tour.

Giving up his sword for the priest's cassock, Maj. P. H. du P. Casgrain of the Royal Engineers, who was for twenty-two years in the English army, is going to Edmonton, Alberta, to take charge of a parish composed of Russians, about seventy-five miles from that town. Maj. Casgrain, or Father Casgrain, as he is now, has been studying theology for some time, and was recently ordained to the priesthood in London by Archbishop Bourne of Westminster.

The oldest woman Alpinist in Switzerland, still on the active list, is Mme. Louise Favre, a widow, aged 81, who lives in a hamlet near Bex, Canton of Valais. The other day she climbed up the Chamossaire, a mountain 6940 feet high, with one of her grandsons, in order to light a bonfire on the summit in honor of a local festival, which was attended by a number of Alpinists, who cheered the veteran climber. Mme. Favre has a large farm, supervises three workmen and milks her cows herself.

ARMY AND NAVY MEN.

Col. Lansing H. Beach, United States Engineer Corps, has been on special detail in Europe observing the care of streams. When he returns he will resume charge of the department of inland waterways and will relieve Maj. Burgess, of the Mississippi River department, who has been acting in his place. Col. Beach has been absent about six months.

Maj. Percy M. Ashburn, Medical Corps, is relieved from duty at the general hospital, the Presidio of San Francisco, and will proceed to Manila, Philippine Islands, for duty as a member of the board of medical officers appointed for the purpose of studying tropical diseases as they exist in the Philippine Islands.

Rear-Admiral Uriah R. Harris, governor of the Naval Home, Philadelphia, has been placed on the retired list of the navy on account of age. He is a native of Indiana and a graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1869. He has served in all parts of the world and has had nearly twenty-two years' service at sea. The vacancy in the list of rear-admirals caused by his retirement will be filled by the promotion of Capt. John M. Bowyer, formerly superintendent of the Naval Academy and now on special duty at the Navy Department.

Lieut. S. P. Budd, U. S. M. C., is in charge of the only ice-making plant in North China. It is located in the grounds of the American legation guard at Peking. This plant produces ice for the use of the legation and of the members of the guard. There are no breweries in that consular district, no cold storage warehouses and no meat packing-houses using refrigerators.

CHURCHMEN.

Rev. A. Gordon Bakewell, during his twenty-seven years as rector of Trinity Episcopal Church of New Orleans, has received $50,000 in wedding fees alone. Rev. Mr. Bakewell's statistics show that during his pastorate there he has performed 10,036 wedding ceremonies, for which he received an average fee of $5. He has baptized 1099 babies and has officiated at 2001 funerals.

Rev. E. T. Greenleaf recently resigned the pastorate of the Lebanon, Ind., circuit of three rural Methodist Protestant churches because the salary was insufficient for his family. Because of the publication of his reasons he was left without an appointment for the year. "The manner in which pastors in rural communities have to eke out miserable existence on their pitiable salaries is a disgrace to Christianity, a reproach to American civilization and a reflection upon present day church government," he says. "The Methodist Protestant Conference of Indiana paid to pastors $23,133 in salaries, an average of $215. The highest salary in the conference was $750. These figures tell an eloquent story."

It is so seldom that a minister quits because of too much salary that the members of the First Presbyterian Church at Cape Girardeau, Nev., were surprised when their pastor, the Rev. Eugene F. Abbott, gave that as one of his reasons for resigning the pastorate. He received $2000 a year there. The Rev. Mr. Abbott says a church should not pay its pastor a large salary unless it can also expend proportionate amounts in charities and in church upbuilding. He has accepted a call to Fulton at $1800 a year.

Just Getting There.

'Tis said we go the pace that kills, increasing more and more;
We're going faster now than ever mortals went before,
But one who clearly sees his way 'tis said is very rare;
We don't know where we're going, but we know we're getting there.

We know that we are moving, we're going every one;
We've done a few things now, and there are many to be done;
We're going faster on the earth, in water or in air;
We mayn't know where we're going, but we know we're getting there.

To be going, going, going, is the way that seems the best;
A man who never goes at all can ne'er enjoy a rest;
And so we keep a-goin, and if we don't know where,
'Tis a little consolation, just to know we're getting there.

...END OF WONDERFUL NEWSPAPER CAREER.

C. Arthur Pearson, Who Owned a Dozen English Newspapers and Scores of Weeklies and Magazines, Now Offering the Last of Them for Sale.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

LONDON, Sept. 6.—Perhaps newspaper finance doesn't come strictly into my department of literary gossip, but, anyhow, I can supply a bit of information in this line that will be news to Fleet street. I saw this week a letter to a British millionaire offering to sell him the Express, the half-penny paper started by C. Arthur Pearson to rival Lord Northcliffe's Daily Mail. Pearson said he had heard that the millionaire wanted to buy a paper, and would like to know what terms he would offer for the Express. As a matter of fact, this was the first that the millionaire in question had heard of wanting to buy a newspaper, and so he paid no attention to the offer.

This piece of news is the rather pathetic sequel to a career of almost unexampled success. For the last two or three years, Pearson has been closing out his business interests gradually, and it is no secret in Fleet street that he is a broken man, as far as health is concerned. A couple of years ago he broke down under the strain of doing half a dozen men's work, and his doctors compelled him to drop all business and take a year's holiday. He spent it walking and mountain climbing on the continent, and then he came home and began to work as hard as ever again. A few months of it brought a return of the old trouble, and the doctors stepped in again and ordered him off to lead the simple life once more. All this summer he has been leading it in a caravan in the New Forest with his family, eight servants and half a dozen tents.

Most people know something of Pearson's wonderful career. He is only 44 years old now, and he got his start at 18 by winning a competition for a prize offered by Tit Bits, a weekly publication owned by the late Sir George Newnes. The winner of the competition was to be the person who answered correctly the greatest number of a set of weekly questions. To find the answers, Pearson cycled sixty miles two or three times a week to consult a library. The prize that he won was a clerkship at a salary of $500 a year.

About a year later the managership of Tit Bits fell vacant, and Pearson applied for the job. Newnes was astonished—to put it mildly—at the cheek of his 19-year-old clerk, but he gave Pearson a six months' trial, and Pearson made good and got the job. In 1889, he was sent on business to the United States, and he saw how young men were running things there. When he came home he told Newnes that the $1750 a year he was getting then wasn't enough. He wanted $5000 a year and a share in the business. Newnes couldn't see it, and Pearson quit on the spot, borrowed $12,500 capital and started Pearson's Weekly. In a few years the income of this paper was $150,000 a year.

Lord Northcliffe, then plain Alfred Harmsworth, had started Answers a little while before this, and, whether it was imitation or coincidence, it is a fact that Pearson followed Harmsworth closely in all that he did. When Harmsworth started the Mail, Pearson followed with the Express, and today the Express is second only to the Mail in circulation and profits. Harmsworth started an immense magazine and weekly publishing business. So did Pearson. Harmsworth bought or started a string of provincial dailies affiliated with the Mail. Pearson acquired as big a string and affiliated them with the Express. About the only big thing that Pearson did that wasn't anticipated by Harmsworth was his purchase of the Standard, one of the oldest and stodgiest London papers, in 1904.

Then came the great fight over the control of the London Times, which really marked the zenith of Pearson's career. Pearson learned first that it was in the market and secured an option on it. The antediluvian shareholders raised such a row over the "half-penny journalist" breaking into the sacred precincts of Printing House square that Pearson withdrew in disgust, leaving the field clear for his rival, Lord Northcliffe, who secured control of the Thunderer.

Perhaps, this disappointment had its effect on Pearson's health, for until then he had stood the effect of hard work from early morning to early the next morning every day uncommonly well. At any rate he found he couldn't look after all his enterprises, and he sold the Standard and Evening Standard, and disposed of most of his provincial dailies. He had previously got rid of most of his interest in the weeklies and magazines to Peter Keary, who had been his partner from the first in that branch of the business. This left him practically with only the Express, which he is trying now to dispose of, but there is no fear that he will let it go at a bargain price, for it is an uncommonly prosperous property and is well managed by Pearson's subordinates.

Pearson's success doubtless is due largely to the way he organized his time. He always rose at half past six and read all the papers before breakfast. By 10 o'clock he was at the office of the Express or the Standard or whichever of his enterprises he was spending most time on at the moment. He never saw anyone except by appointment, and he set a time limit on every interview. I have seen him dictating an editorial to a stenographer in the intervals of receiving callers and discussing big business deals. This illustrated one of his most striking qualities, the capacity for switching his mind suddenly from one subject to another and for becoming absorbed in the thing he was doing at the moment. He never signed his name in full. That he declared was waste of time, and all his letters were simply initialed "C. A. P." Few of his employees ever speak of him otherwise than as "C. A. P.," and the fashion has spread through his newspaper offices, where all his editors are known to the staff by their initials.

The protective tariff movement in England owes more to Pearson than to anyone else, if Joseph Chamberlain be excepted. He was one of Chamberlain's first converts, and he not only threw the weight of all his newspapers into the new movement, but he organized the Tariff Reform League and became its chairman. Chamberlain in a public speech described Pearson as "my chief hustler."

Whether Pearson retires now or not, he is a rich man. With the exception of the Standard, every one of his enterprises has been a money maker, and, I am told, he sold the Standard for more than he paid for it.

FRESH LITERATURE—BOOK REVIEWS.

By Willard Huntington Wright.

AMERICAN FICTIONEERING.

NE'ER-DO-WELL. By Rex Beach. arper & Bros., New York. (Price $1.25.)

PON "The Ne'er-do-Well," by Rex Beach, I am unable to heap any praise. In his Alaskan ies, Beach has written of that thern country in much the same ner that J. Fennimore Cooper te of Otsego county, New York, n his style of writing, his conction of plot, was patterned after author of "The Last of the icans." As in Cooper, also, it the plot in Beach's stories, which of initial interest.

each is pre-eminently a shorty writer. He gets a fresh, buoyant ng to his yarns. He writes with careless ease which all newsr men, who work under pres, acquire in time. In his short ies it is not difficult to imagine some peevish editor stood over as he thumped his typewriter, nting to the clock, and snatching pages out of the machine as fast they were typed.

e have in this country a large ool of these journalese fictioneers. act, the majority of our magazines merely bound newspapers. The blishers cater not to the thinking blic, but to the bored public. They nt first of all a story—what they a "straightaway" story—a story which philosophy and psychology not enter, a story which the most terate enterpreneur may enjoy on way to and from his red-plush niture.

he matinee girl with the nude ckings, also, must be able to devour relish the publishers' output. In literature we cater to the wearers celluloid collars; to those who eat ubarb pie and drink buttermilk; to torcyclists and actors. The result that when, occasionally, there ings up in our ranks a writer of dible stories—an analyst who has thinking brain and can create aracters who have three, and somees four, dimensions—he has to go road for appreciation; or, if he atpts to publish at home, the extent his success is in having a few tics praise his work; in seing his ok listed in the catalogue of some blishing house; and in receiving a nthly statement from his firm that yet they are unable to pay him his per cent. royalty.

have mentioned "predestined" to great many people of culture and ellect, but they look at me blankly. ister Carrie" is another book of ich few people know. And yet se two novels are among the eatest ever written in America.

But mention any book by Mr. ambers (with the exception of 'A ng in Yellow"—by far his best, and refore the least known,) or Mctcheon, or David Graham Phillips, Harold MacGrath, and you will be onished to find how broad and ofound is the American intelligence such subjects.

There is always the complaint, of urse, that we are not turning out ch good fiction. Granted. But it comparatively simple matter to port good fiction. This, of course, been tried by many publishing uses, but without any great degree success. Publishers have not und it a good investment to put eir money in meritorious contital literature. The American pubwants, first of all, diversion. t is why George Cohan plays to cked houses and Nazimova goes ping with Schnitzler's "The Fairy ale"—one of the greatest dramatic portations of recent years.

When B. W. Heubsch brought out udermann's "The Song of Songs" e threw up our hands in righteous rror and turned to Mrs. Wharton. "The Dangerous Age" has just en imported by John Lane. It is ithout a question of a doubt the est important publication of fiction hich America has witnessed this ar. The lady reviewers of the litary monthlies, and some club wom, will probably read it, condemn it, nd recommend F. Hopkinson Smith s an antidote.

Who has read "Elisabeth Koett," Bartsch? Not even the reviewers, 'll warrant. Yet here is a profound nd discerning study in that most ranescent of all psychological phases —the artistic temperament.

Tolstoi's "Anna Karonina" has recently been issued in this country in one volume; but as yet it has not been tabulated among the six best sellers. I understand there have been eight copies of it sold in Los Angeles. Julian Johnson bought one and I bought another; the purchasers of the remaining six copies are unknown to the jury. Yet here is the greatest novel written by the greatest of all Russian writers.

Let me give credit where credit is due, however; a great many people have read "Marie Claire." But clever press-agent work, and not altogether a desire for literature, caused much of this unusual activity.

When Andreiyev's "The Seven That Were Hanged" was brought out by Ogilvie some time ago, the people who read it were mostly the followers of Emma Goldman.

The appearance some months ago of Henry Bordeaux's "The Parting of the Ways," may best be described as what obstetricians call a still birth.

E. P. Dutton gave us "On the Branch," by Pierre de Coulevain. This year, however, I notice that "The Unknown Isle," by the same author, has the imprint of Cassell.

Scribner's are struggling valiantly along with a translation of Rene Bazin. Five volumes have appeared. Will they complete the series? I doubt it.

Then there is "Jean-Christophe," M. Rolland's great work on the life of a musician. How many Americans can put their right hands on their hearts and say, "I have read it?"

The importations which I have mentioned are all serious works, but as yet we seem to have no taste for serious fiction. Let me quote a few significant figures which are, in themselves, an interesting criticism of American literary taste.

In England, in 1898, there were 1758 books of fiction and juveniles published; last year there were 1806. In other words, there was an increase of just forty-eight books. In 1898, in the United States, there were 1050 fiction and juvenile books published; last year there were 2238. There were [illegible] books of adult fiction published in the United States last year—an average of nearly four a day. The increase of book publication in England for the last twenty years is less than 50 per cent.; in America, it exceeds 170 per cent.

The most popular books in America for the year 1910 constitute another criticism of the American reading public's taste. At the head of the list is "The Rosary," a silly and exaggerated sentimental yarn, totally devoid of a single quality which in an intellectual community could pass for literary merit.

Second on the list was Churchill's "A Modern Chronicle," a book which never once probed beneath the most superficial manifestations of human nature.

The third on the list was Basil King's "The Wild Olive," an incredible and inexpensive melodrama.

The fourth, "When a Man Marries," was a simple farce—the result of an elongated short story. George Barr McCutcheon was the author of one of 1910's most widely read books, and Robert Hichens's pharmacological yarn, "Bella Donna," was another.

Harold Bell Wright's "The Calling of Dan Mathews" was still another. This last book was a fictionized platitude, by a writer who lacks both style and the power of observation. We have not as yet produced a more platitudinous author than Wright, nor a more trite book than "The Calling of Dan Mathews." Yet both the author and the publisher have become rich by trucking such stuff to the American public.

Another of the most popular fictions of 1910 was "The Silver Horde," by Rex Beach.

And now we have come back to where we started.

"The Silver Horde," as well as "The Spoilers," was a straightaway story, compactly joined, devoid of superfluous details, and with a certain air of plausibility. These merits, however, are not to be found in "The Ne'er-Do-Well." The story is not closely welded; it is melodramatic, and at times farcical and therefore incredible; the story is continually being sidetracked for the sake of exposing the present administration in its attitude toward the Panama Canal, and to describe engineering details in this great work—details which are probably interesting to the surveyor and builder, but are absolutely without a thrill to the reader of fiction.

Can it be that Beach has joined the muck-rakers? It is difficult to tell. I am a little inclined toward that belief, however, inasmuch as a considerable part of the exposition of governmental corruption is here unnecessary to the advancement of the story.

The plot itself shows a woeful falling off in imagination from what we have learned to expect of Beach. Even the novelty of its locale cannot disguise its essential triteness. Divested of its descriptions, its new names, and its exotic atmosphere, the naked structure reveals nothing more than the ancient, time-worn, moss-covered, familiar story of the prodigal son who has a misunderstanding with his opulent father, leaves home, gets a job, works like the devil, makes good, gets married, and then patches things up with father.

Perhaps some credit is due to Beach for making certain portions of this story as interesting as they are, in view of so time-honored a foundation. But, nevertheless, the tainted blood which fills the veins of this story cannot be eradicated by any of Rex Beach's iron and arsenic.

HISTORICAL.

DIONIS OF THE WHITE VEIL. By Caroline Brown. L. C. Page & Co., Boston. (Price $1.50.)

LET us move a little further north, to New Orleans, and make the acquaintance of Dionis de Montfort, one of those young and beautiful ladies who, if we are to take fiction as our guide, exclusively populated the South during the early part of the eighteenth century.

This book, called "Dionis of the White Veil," is another survival of the old-fashioned historical novel, and were it not written in such atrocious English, it would be a welcome bit of fiction. The modern Adonis, with his flannel suits and his straw hat, and the twentieth century American virgin with her slang and her tailor-made gowns, are beginning to pall. If we must have "popular" novels, let us go back to the early picturesque days of this country.

This is what Caroline Brown has done in her story, and, despite her unfortunate diction, let it be stated in her favor that she gets a certain amount of atmosphere into her lines. In a story of this kind, it makes very little difference how incredible everything may be. For one always makes allowances when one gets into romantic mood.

The present story is quite incredible enough for the most credulous. But there is an undeniable charm in the love of this young girl for Etienne Fauchet—whose name alone has something of a romantic air about it.

THE "THREE" AGAIN.

THE HOUSE OF SILENCE. By E. Everett Greene. Dana Estes Company, Boston. (Price $1.25.)

LET us next tackle a problem novel. Most problem novels of this day deal with the eternal triangle, and "The House of Silence" is no exception.

E. Everett Greene has done his work conscientiously; but his theme is a difficult one, inasmuch as the man in the case is a genius. It is always dangerous to inject the artistic temperament into the pages of a problem novel, for, if the actions of one's hero or heroine with this baffling state of mind cannot be accounted for on the grounds of neurasthenia, it is always possible to find an explanation in psychiatry or other forms of alienation. In short, it is difficult to make a person bearing the artistic temperament human, for the simple reason that all of the commonplace folk who eat three meals a day wear conventional clothing, and whose time is given up to darning socks, reading popular novels and trucking with hucksters, have little sympathy with these overwrought exotics who spread their time sonneteering, smearing canvases and figuring out the contrapuntals in the opening of Strauss's "Electra."

For this very reason, "The House of Silence" fails. Its hero is a genius—a writer of novels—and his problems are largely those of the artistic temperament. And because this figure is not made wholly plausible, much of the value of the book is lost.

The problem confronting this young novelist is in the form of two women—one, a sympathetic, almost superhumanly intelligent, amanuensis; and the other a fascinating American siren with a masculine mind and a large bank account. The amanuensis, with whom the novelist is already in love, almost at once finds herself occupying a secondary place when the dashing American puts in an appearance. The author marries the American, and the secretary goes into retreat.

The story is somewhat lugubrious, and the machinery creaks in many places. It is lacking in design, coherence and clarity. And it is as unmistakably English as is a game of cricket.

THE "WEST."

A TEXAS RANGER. By William McLeod Raine. G. W. Dillingham, New York. (Price $1.50.)

WE WILL now return to America—not the real America, but that imaginative, hair-pant America which was supposed to have existed in Arizona day before yesterday. If one doesn't care for verity, and thinks only of excitement, "A Texas Ranger" will probably answer all purposes.

William McLeod Raine has probably hit the high-water mark of the incredible Wild West story. No other author painting the frenzied frontier days has dared go quite so far as Raine. He always has a few more hold-ups, one or two more lynching parties than his confreres; his desperadoes are always a little more desperate. Even the hair on his cowboys' pants is longer than that of his fellow-fictioneers. His crack shots can always go the previous expert gun man of fiction one better. And his heroines are a trifle more dashing than their rivals in other books.

"A Texas Ranger" is no exception. Everything that is supposed to be western is here raised to the nth power—there is nothing omitted. Shots, blood, thunder, police, escaping convicts, hold-ups, lynchings, and love—all are mingled in an exciting and preposterous melodramatic melange.

ASCENDANT TURKEY.

REGILDING THE CRESCENT. By F. G. Aflalo. J. B. Lippincott, Philadelphia. (Price $3.)

"REGILDING THE CRESCENT," an imported book concerning Turkey, by F. G. Aflalo, gives a most interesting account of that turbulent empire. Aflalo writes in an easy conversational manner, and talks about conditions very much as he might gossip about his neighbor's love-affairs. It is, however, this very quality that gives the book its interest, despite its brevity. We are given an account of young Turkey's rise. And the revolution of 1908 is related with especial reference to enabling one to look into the future of Turkey. Aflalo likewise relates of the adoption of a constitutional government, and discusses the empire's future problems. The author's information and observations have all the earmarks of first-hand knowledge.

LITERARY GOSSIP.

Mark Twain is the latest author whose birthplace has been preserved for the interest of his future readers. The simple frame house built by his father at Hannibal, Mo., in 1839, has now been presented to the author's native town. Its walls and surroundings are reminiscent not only of the youthful Sam Clemens, but of the scarcely less vital boyish personalities of Tom Sawyer and Huck Finn. The scene of their pranks and adventures has much value to the future historian of American life. It forms the background of Tom and Huck, typical products of social conditions, which will never occur again—the free, democratic, lazy life of the Mississippi Valley before the Civil War.

Friends of Zane Grey, author of "The Heritage of the Desert," have only just learned of a tragic event in which he figured a month ago—which his neighbors at Lackawaxen, Pa., say might have been much worse, but for his heroic efforts. The Delaware has a swift and treacherous current as it sweeps past his home, and one afternoon two inexperienced canoeists were capsized. Grey and his younger brother went to the rescue and succeeded in saving one of them. The other was carried out of reach and perished.

While the primary purpose of "Early English Poems," selected and edited by Henry S. Pancoast and John Duncan Spaeth (which Henry Holt & Company published last week,) is text-book use, it is a volume that should have a much wider appeal, since it makes familiar, in every attractive verse (where necessary in the earliest poems, translated into the English of our own day,) some of the most famous of the early poetry of our race, and enables the man in the street to get an excellent idea of such masterpieces as Beowulf, the poems of Cynewulf, some of the great old battle poems from the Anglo-Saxon chronicles, and the best of the poetry of Chaucer, Sir Thomas Wyatt, the Earl of Surrey, and Sir Philip Sidney—besides a large number of famous old English songs, such as "The Nut Brown Maid," "Leave Me Not," "The Two Corbies," "The Greenwood," "Thomas the Rhymer," "What Cheer, Good Cheer," etc.

Although in London they say, "You know, everybody has left town, and London is no more than an empty shadow of itself at this time," Mrs. Corra Harris and her daughter, Mrs. Harry Leech, write that the British metropolis has been a kind hostess and that they have been able to see a great deal of English life. While Mrs. Harris remains in London, Mrs. Leech is making a tour through Scotland and Ireland.

Grace MacGowan Cooke, author of "The Power and the Glory," having written the first part of her new book at Carmel, Cal., where she owns one of the show places of the town, has gone with her sister and two daughters on a camping trip in the California mountains. Mrs. Cooke's little daughters took prominent parts in a recent festival at the Carmel colony, the elder having taken part in an amateur performance of "Twelfth Night" and the younger, in a historical pageant.

Before she sailed for England, where she will make her permanent home, Anne Warner was told by her publishers that her autumn romance, "When Woman Proposes," has already been sent to press a second time owing to heavy advance orders.

Nathaniel C. Fowler, Jr., whose new book, "Practical Salesmanship," has just gone into a second printing, has been spending the summer in Tamworth, N. H. Mr. Fowler's publishers have just received an order for 250 copies of "Practical Salesmanship" from Australia.

Is not the appearance in many English and some American newspapers of articles beginning in the manner of the following quotation a tribute to John Galsworthy's realistic skill?

"London, May 23.—Officialdom has been doing much speculating as to the method by which John Galsworthy, author of 'Justice' and other works, managed to learn so much of English prison life. British officialdom prefers that such information should be kept secret, and does not encourage outside investigators."

This paragraph, taken from a fairly prominent American newspaper, story that John Galsworthy got himself sentenced to a short term in the penitentiary by dressing in old clothes and heaving a cobblestone through a plate-glass window. It was inspired by those poignant prison scenes in "Justice," the play that did actually change the English prison system through the force of its representations. Naturally, people wondered how Mr. Galsworthy knew so profoundly the lives and feelings of criminals. Naturally, such explanations as this began to circulate. In point of fact, Mr. Galsworthy learned all he knows of the English prison and the English prisoner by inspection of the former and authorized conversation with the latter—by that and the sympathetic power of his imagination.

Gilbert Watson's "Toddie" will be published this week by the Century Company. The scenes are laid at St. Andrews, Scotland, which is near the home of the author, and the story is characterized by those who have read it as "the love-story of a woman-hater."

The Century Company announces the issuance this week of the new book by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott, author of "Molly-Make-Believe." This will be just a year to a day since the publication of "Molly," which has averaged a large edition a month all through the year. "The Sick-a-Bed Lady" is having a large advance sale.

BOOK NEWS.

This month the Centenary Edition of the work of Charles Dickens becomes complete with the publication of the four final volumes of the thirty-six: Christmas Stories, in two volumes, and Miscellaneous Papers from the Examiner, Daily News, Household Words, and All Year Round, in two volumes. The Miscellaneous Papers include plays and poems, nineteen illustrations by Phiz, Leech, Cruikshank, E. M. Ward, and others, and an introduction by D. W. Matz. The two volumes of Christmas Stories contain "The Lazy Tour of Two Idle Apprentices," "No Thoroughfare," "The Perils of Certain English Prisoners," "The Holly Tree," "The Seven Poor Travellers," "Dr. Marigold," "Mugby Junction," etc. As almost everyone now knows, this edition of Dickens is published in conjunction with Messrs. Chapman and Hall of London, the original publishers of Dickens's works, to commemorate the centenary of his birth. It comprises his entire writings, to a large part of which Messrs. Chapman and Hall hold the copyright. To the admirer and lover of Dickens, the fact that all the famous illustrations associated with his works, and all the prefaces, dedications and notices which appeared in various editions during the author's lifetime are included, this Centenary Edition is almost invaluable.

Montrose J. Moses, the New York dramatic critic and litterateur, has for many years been engaged in collecting material regarding American dramatists and their work. He has now prepared for autumn publication a book entitled "The American Dramatist," in which he discusses his subject broadly, claiming that the American drama now has a body. He takes up its localisms, its type characteristics, its technical values, its mannerisms, and those influences affecting it. He describes its evolution from certain social factors, and its development to its present activity. He emphasizes the individual contributors to the American drama and their striking qualities. "The American Dramatist" will be published by Little, Brown & Co., Boston.

Two volumes of verse widely different in character were published on the 13th. One of them is a selection of poems from Chaucer, edited with an introduction and notes by Oliver Farrar Emerson, professor of English in Western Reserve University; the other is "Poems" by Madison Cawein, with an introduction by William Dean Howells. Prof. Emerson's book is intended for those who have read the writings of Chaucer but little, and to this end gives selections from both his earlier and later writings, showing by chronological arrangement the development of the poet's genius.

For the past two weeks Henry Holt & Company have found the demand for Bergson's "Creative Evolution" so great that they have been unable to keep it in stock for three consecutive days. They had scarcely put a third edition in the press when they had to follow it with a fourth.

Robert Hichens's new long novel, "The Fruitful Vine," which will be published this month by Stokes, is distinguished first by its setting in Modern Rome, the city of history and of present day brilliance, and by its theme—the unsatisfied longing for children on the part of a mutually devoted couple.

Ralph D. Paine is everywhere recognized as the foremost writer of boy stories of sport and of the sea. He began with "College Years." "The Head Coach," "The Fugitive Freshman," and "A Cadet of the Black Star Line" followed. This month sees three more of his books come from the Scribner press—"The Stroke Oar," "Sandy Sawyer, Sophomore," and "The Wrecking Master."

John A. Mitchell, the author of "Amos Judd" and "Pines of Lory," who happens also to be widely known to the public as the editor of "Life," has written "Pandora's Box," published by Frederick A. Stokes Company this month. The new novel is a romance of an American architect and the daughter of a line of earls stretching back to the Conqueror.

Prof. Rodolfo Lanciani, the author of "Wanderings in the Roman Campagna," and other popular books on Roman history and archaeology, has been raised to the Senatorship of Italy in recognition of his services in the field of archaeological investigations. King Humbert personally notified Prof. Lanciani of this new honor and offered his congratulations.

Mrs. Sarah McL. Greene, who wrote "Cape Cod Folks," has completed her new story, "The Long Green Road," which the Baker & Taylor Co. will shortly publish.

"John Carter," the prison poet, whose book, "Hard Labor, and Other Poems," the Baker & Taylor Co. are publishing, is now in England, and will return to this country in the late fall to accept a position as prison inspector.

A Suspicious Granger.

[Lippincott's:] The following is told at the expense of a New York literary man, into whose family a fifth child came last summer: The family were at their country house in the north of the State, and for a time much of the care of the other four children devolved upon the father, who entertains some Spartan notions touching the rearing of his sons.

One morning he carried his 3-year-old to the creek near his home, to give him a cold plunge. The lad objected vigorously to this proceedings, but his protests. Just as the father was "sending in" the youngster for the second time, a powerful hand stayed him, and he found himself in the grasp of a big farmer, a neighbor of his, who began to roar at him in this wise:

"None o' that! None o' that, or I'll hand you over to the law!"

It consumed the better part of half an hour to convince the farmer that no attempt was being made to drown the child. Even at the end, the brawny tiller of the soil was not entirely convinced, for he kept shaking his hand doubtfully and murmuring:

"I dunno about that, I dunno. You got four besides this."

More Palatable.

[Washington Star:] Thomas W. Lawson at a dinner in Boston said of a far-famed financier:

"He is all right at heart, but his outside is prickly, and you must handle him with great caution, as they handled the Tin Can gambler.

"A gambler of Tin Can borrowed a sum from a money lender and when the note fell due he said he could not settle.

"'You must settle!' shouted the money lender. 'If you don't settle I'll—'

"But the gambler, taking a revolver from his boot, pointed it at the money lender and said:

"'Eat that note or I'll let daylight through you!'

"And the money lender, after a moment's silent thought, crumpled the note into a ball, put it in his mouth, chewed vigorously and then, with a gulp, swallowed the pulpy morsel.

"'That dose saved your life,' said the gambler, in a mollified tone, and the next day he had a streak of luck and paid the money lender in full.

"The money lender was much pleased with his honesty, and when the gambler a few weeks later called and asked for a new loan he was readily accommodated.

"The gambler, having pocketed the new loan sat down, dipped a pen in the ink and selected a sheet of paper, whereon to write the usual acknowledgement. But the money lender hastily interposed.

"'Hold on, my friend,' he said, and he ran to a cupboard.

"'Wait a minute, my friend. Would you mind writing it on this soda cracker?'"

A Successful Test.

[Omaha Bee:] Lincoln Beachey, after his flight over Niagara Falls in a biplane, was congratulated on his daring by a reporter.

"But I wasn't daring," the aviator said. "I put my machine only to such ordeals as I knew it could withstand. In flying, as in love, we must run no risks."

He laughed softly.

"I know," he said, "a young woman about to wed who decided, at the last moment, to test her sweetheart. So, selecting the prettiest girl she knew, she said to her, though she knew it was a great risk:

"'I'll arrange for Jack to take you out tonight—a walk on the beach in the moonlight, a lobster supper and all that sort of thing—and I want you, in order to put his fidelity to the proof—to ask him for a kiss.'

"The other girl laughed, blushed and assented. The dangerous plot was carried out. Then, the next day, the girl in love visited the pretty one and said anxiously:

"'Well, did you ask him?'

"'No, dear.'

"'No? Why not?'

"'I didn't get a chance. He asked me first.'"

Eating Potatoes.

[Chicago News:] Charlotte Bronte once said, "Pleace don't!" to Tackeray as he helped himself to more potatoes. Charlotte had been cured of a love for potatoes, as the girls in confectioners' shops are cured of a love of sweets—by surfeit. A servant of the Brontes told Mrs. Gaskell that the father, who had grown to splendid bulk on potatoes, "thought the children should be brought up simply and hardily. So they had nothing but potatoes for dinner!"

Here is a sentence written by Lord Chesterfield to his son in 1748: "One part of your supper (the potatoes) is the constant diet of my old friends and countrymen, the Irish, who are the healthiest and strongest men I know in Europe."

Peru is the natural home of the potato, which grows in many varieties. Of these the most famous is the Peruvian yellow potato. It is of exquisite taste, highly nutritious, with a golden color and a thin skin.

Donkey as a Physician.

[New York Tribune:] Superstition took a mother and three children to the Central Park Zoo yesterday. Two of the youngsters had whooping cough, and the mother told "Bill" Snyder, the head keeper, that she had always believed in the old custom of passing over and under a donkey three times a child with whooping cough. A white Chinese donkey in the Zoo, the woman said, was the only one she could think of.

Snyder, with the assistance of another keeper, did as the woman requested, while onlookers were puzzled at the unusual performance. One youngster had a fit of coughing after the exertion.

"It is a work of rare power. Not for many a long day have I read a story which recalls as this does the somber tragedy of 'The Scarlet Letter' and the moving pity of 'Adam Bede.' I cannot remember a novel of our day in which the capacity of a cruel religion to produce in one household a saint, a rebel, and an inquisitor, is explored with such relentless fidelity to the facts of human experience."

"I accept Your Excellency's commission," I said, formally.

He glanced at me as though relieved, and even a little surprised, by my unconditional acceptance. The manner in which I was to join the imperial yacht was explained to me; and a few hours later found me on board taking my first lessons in the duties of a steward.

I was not on deck when Nicholas II came on board, which he did at night in the closest secrecy. But I had several opportunities of watching him at close quarters during the voyage to Bjoerke, and I was painfully struck by the air of profound depression and anxiety to which he gave way when his attendants were not near.

I was not able to accompany the Czar on his formal visit to the German Emperor's yacht. But as Pobiedonestzeff had foretold—as he probably had taken care to arrange beforehand—the important conference took place on board the Polar Star, after the brother monarchs had dined in company.

I waited till all my fellow-stewards were busy serving the repast, and then slipped through the sliding panel in the pantry.

I had been there for half an hour when the sound of a door opening, followed by the firm tread of the Kaiser, told me that the imperial friends were entering the smoking-room.

Wilhelm II was the first to speak.

"Well, so we are here at last. I am sorry I could not ask you to bring one of your ministers, but you understand I am going to discuss only your personal interests. When it is a case of revolution we monarchs ought to stand by one another. Of course, what is said here goes no further? The fact is, I don't trust the men you have around you. That fellow Witte is a demagogue, in my opinion. He is playing up for the part of president of the Russian Republic."

"I am obliged to use the best men I can find," was the answer, given in rather melancholy tones. "I think, perhaps, the most sincere of them all is Pobiedonestzeff."

"That man! My dear Nicholas, you must pardon my frankness, but he is a scoundrel who would cut your throat tomorrow if it suited his schemes. He is the last man I should like to hear of my plans."

The Czar's reply was almost despairing.

"Every one in Russia seems ready to cut my throat if I don't agree with them. The only question is which party will cut it first."

Wilhelm II seized the opening.

"Now you have put the situation as I see it. Of course I don't mean that; the people are on your side, I believe, and what you want to do is to be able to appeal to them to free you from these factions. To do that you must first place yourself in a position of personal security."

"I cannot leave my dominions," the Russian Emperor said quickly. "That would be running away."

"I was not going to suggest that you should. My plan is that you should secure yourself within your own territory."

"How?"

"By letting me march into your support."

The answer of Nicholas II was unexpectedly firm.

"I could not accept such assistance, I am afraid. I should never be willing to employ foreign troops against my own people."

"Not even to defend yourself—and the Empress and children?" This afterthought must have made an impression on the Rusian Emperor, for his colleague proceeded with more confidence: "You need not employ my Germans in any police work. Call them a guard of honor, and canton them round Warsaw."

The Czar was slow in answering.

"It would come to the same thing in the end, I expect. It would be next to impossible to prevent collisions between the people and your troops."

"In that case what do you say to Riga? A division would probably be enough to garrison the town for you and I could send them to sea. I could also station a squadron in the harbor and their guns would be sufficient to keep the town quiet."

Nicholas II appeared to weigh this proposition carefully.

"The occupaion of a seaport would not be such a serious matter as the occupation of Poland," he said, seeming to think aloud. "I do not like to say no, and yet I cannot bring myself to say yes, offhand. Are you willing to let your offer remain open? I need hardly say how deeply I appreciate your kindness."

"Nonsense—no kindness at all," the Kaiser said almost roughly. "I should expect you to do the same for me if I were in your shoes. It is the common cause of kings against mobs."

There was a short interval of silence during which I imagined that the German Emperor was watching his imperial brother's expression. When he spoke again, I fancied there was an undertone of suppressed excitement in his voice.

"I have thought of another place where you—and the imperial family—would be even safer than in Riga, provided it were garrisoned by German troops and watched by my fleet. I mean Cronstadt."

Cronstadt! The chief fortress of the Russian Empire. The key to Petersburg itself! What a prize in German hands.

"I think that is a good idea," Nicholas said, speaking with more cheerfulness than he had yet shown. "Yes, I think Cronstadt would be better than Riga. It is nearer the capital, and there is no civilian population to come into collision with the troops. I am inclined to accept your offer for Cronstadt."

"Eor what date?"

"That is a point which I shall have to settle when I get back I must consider how to withdraw the garrison without giving rise to suspicion. How much notice shall you require?"

"Forty-eight hours," was the prompt response.

"Then that is settled," Nicholas II remarked.

The conversation was over. The rest of the time the two sovereigns spent together was taken up with discussing the internal affairs of Russia, and the best means of grappling with the revolution.

At last his German majesty rose and bade his colleague an affectionate farewell. The Czar, of course, accompanied him on deck, and I emerged from my unpleasant seclusion.

As soon as the Kaiser's barge had quitted the side of the Polar Star and steamed off to where the lights of the Hohenzollern twinkled across the lonely waters of the bay, Nicholas II turned and descended again to his private apartments.

I followed him at a respectful distance, and as soon as he had shut himself into the smoking-room, I knocked at the door and entered in response to his command.

"I want nothing more tonight," he said, as his eye fell on my steward's uniform.

"I humbly beg your majesty's pardon, but I desire to be permitted to tell you who I am. I am A—— V——."

Nicholas II stared at me in astonishment for a few seconds. Then he sprang to his feet.

"By all that is wonderful, how did you get here! You are the very man I was wishing to see!"

A load was lifted from my mind by this reception. I hastened to explain.

"I was sent on board as the agent in charge of your majesty's personal safety. I have to ask as a favor that you will not inquire further."

"Have it your own way, Monsieur V——. I know you are a man of mystery. But since you are here you must give me the benefit of your advice. I have just had a confidential interview with my brother, the German Emperor."

"Pardon me, sire, but I have a confession to make to you. I have heard every word that passed between your majesties."

The Emperor gazed at me with a mixture of surprise and indignation.

"I did not think this of you, Monsieur V——," he said reproachfully.

"I did not think it of myself, sire. My only excuse—if Your Majesty will deign to accept it as such—is that if I had not accepted the task it would have been given to some one else even less worthy of your confidence."

The Emperor's brow began to clear.

"That is an excuse, certainly, for accepting the task, but hardly for carrying it out, monsieur."

"My only excuse for carrying it out has been the belief that my doing so might be necessary to save Your Majesty's life."

"My life! By whom is it threatened this time?"

"I consider that it is my duty to warn you of that, sire. But if you think I am entitled to any consideration, I would respectfully ask you to guard my secret. If your intention to accept the German Emperor's offer were known to M. Pobiedonestseff, I am not sure that you would reach Cronstadt alive."

Nicholas II sank into his chair with a deep sigh.

"It seems that my brother was right," he murmured bitterly. "It is the crown, not the emperor, that they are loyal to. Enough, Monsieur V——, your secret shall be kept. It is rather I who ought to ask you not to let Pobiedonestzeff know what you have told me."

I bowed in silence, thankful that I had extricated myself from a dangerous and difficult position.

"And now," the Czar resumed, "are you free to serve me in this matter?"

"I am on board solely with that desire."

"Tell me frankly, then, what do you think of the German Emperor's plan?"

"Sire, with your permission, I will relate a little fable which I once read in a book of Arabian tales. A dervish was seated in his hut one day when a camel came to the door, and said to him, 'Holy man, it is raining outside; will you allow me to put my head in the shelter of your hut?' The dervish consented, and the camel introduced its head through the doorway. Presently it spoke again. 'I find my shoulders are getting wet; be kind enough to let me bring them inside as well.' The dervish made no objection, and the camel came farther in. After a little while it said: 'It is uncomfortable for me to lean forward in this position; you cannot mind if I place my fore feet upon the threshold.' And without waiting for an answer, it stepped halfway into the hut. The dervish became uneasy, and seeing the camel prepared to encroach yet more, he called out, 'You are not to come further in.' 'Nay," said the camel, 'now that I have got half my body into the hut, you will find it difficult to keep out the rest.' And with that he came in altoether. A little later the rain left off and the dervish bade the camel go forth, as there was not enough room for them both in the hut. 'As to that,' said the camel, 'you are right, but since I am the stronger of the two, and this hut suits me very well, it is you who must leave.' So the dervish was obliged to go away, and the camel remained."

I found myself able to report to the Procurator of the Holy Synod that he had nothing to fear.

Next Sunday's (and concluding) adventure: "The Secret Treaty of Portsmouth."

To Her Lover.

Oh, love me well—
But love me not alone!
Love the hot sword, the banner, and the song,
The crowded way of sorrow and of wrong,
The dream no tongue can tell,
The enemy prone!
Yea, love not me alone—
But love me well!

Oh, serve me well,
But serve not me alone!
Serve all who will, the oppressor, and the oppressed.
Serve all who will not; bare thine aching breast!
Even though thou hear love's knell
Go bravely on!
Yea, serve not me alone—
But serve me well.

Wanted a Winner.

[Omaha Bee:] E. Phillips Oppenheim, the English novelist, is fond of American lobsters, which are more delicate than their English cousins. During his recent visit to New York Mr. Oppenheim was nightly to be seen in this lobster palace or in that, bending his keen visage in grave absorption over great scarlet shells of snowy meat.

It is related of Mr. Oppenheimer that one night his waiter brought him a lobster that lacked a claw.

"I say, waiter, there's a claw missing here, you know," he complained.

"Yes, sir," said the waiter. "Two lobsters got to fightin' downstairs, sir, and this here feller lost a flipper."

Mr. Oppenheim pushed back his plate a little wearily.

"Take him away," he said, "and bring me the winner."

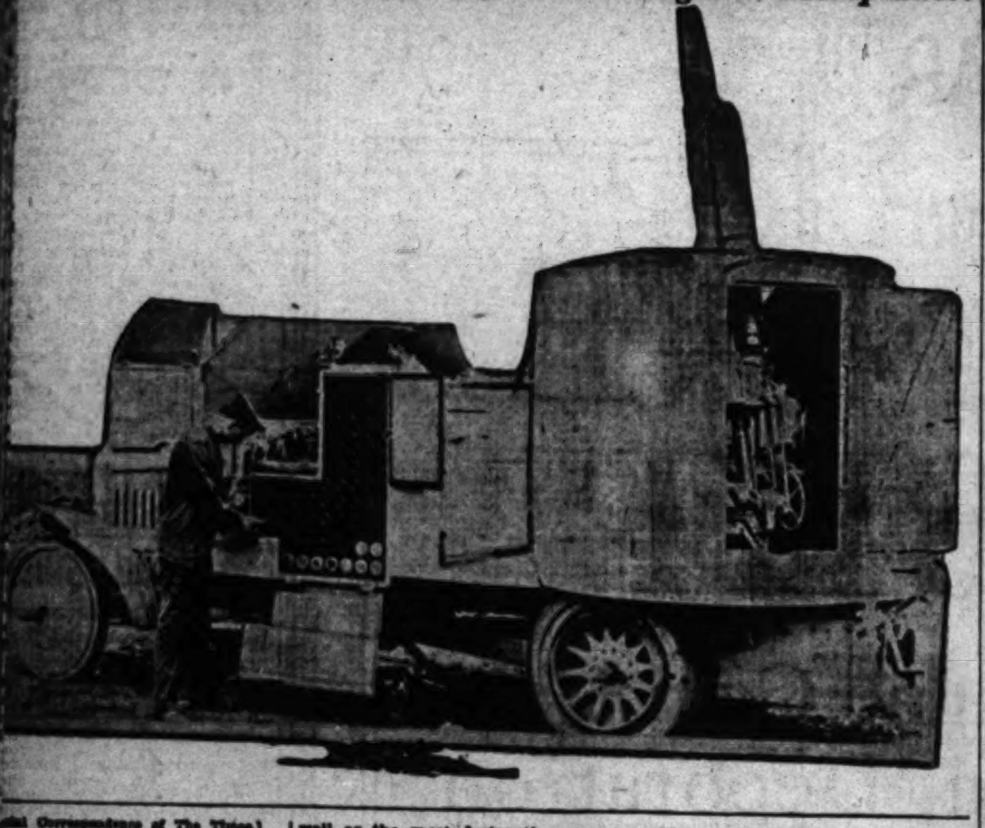
n Which Germany Prepares for War Against Aeroplanes.



ial Correspondence of The Times.]

LIN, Sept. 4.—Germany has ed what officers of the Ger- military establishment regard as ost complete and compact, as well as the most destructive weapon yet designed for combating aeroplanes and dirigibles in warfare.

It is an ingenious combination, in a single vehicle, of cannon, caisson and automobile carriage. The gun is said to be of high power, the automobile strong and speedy, and the convenient arrangement for carrying the ammunition renders the device distinguishable from others made for like purposes.

" 'How much to crack a nut on yer ad, Sam?' says Siphon with the in- cent tone of a guilty party.

" 'Two bits, boss—pay in advance,' ys the nigger, smilin'.

"So Siphon payed the money, layed cap on Sam's skull pretendin' like was a hickory nut, swung his brass- aded hammer—and the next mo- nt there was a tee-rific explosion."

Col. Crowe lit a brown paper cigar- e.

"That was a brutal trick," I com- nted.

"It sure was. It blew off Siphon's nd, caved in the glass front of the lace Saloon, killed a horse, wrecked lf the houses in the camp and gave t nigger such a headache he wasn't mself for most ten minutes."

With a long drive I sent the ball rtling through the atmosphere.

"Fore!" I shouted.

"What's that you said?" demanded e Cripple Creekian.

"Come on!" I shouted, rather irrit- bly, setting forth nimbly around a w of bunkers.

"Where y' goin'?" asked Col. Crowe.

"After the ball," I said.

"Hell! What's the use? That's too ap a ball to be wastin' all the aft- oon chasin' after. Ain't y' got ty more in yer bag?"

es. But it's one of the rules of that you've got to play on

"It's a Scotch game all right—walkin' nine miles and wastin' the best part of a pleasant afternoon follerin' a 30-cent ball. A Scotchman's always scared to death he'll lose somethin'."

I walked along rapidly congratulating myself that the ball had just cleared a water hazard.

"I knew a Scotchman onct named Lush MacTurtle. He wasn't human. He was a sheep herder. He drank Scotch whiskey because his folks sent it to him free, and he read the works of Walter Scott, not because he liked 'em, but because he was too bark-tight to blow himself 15 cents a month for a decent magazine. A feller that'll read Walter Scott from motives of economy is pretty far advanced in decomposition. MacTurtle's principal outdoor sport was knittin' socks. Whenever his stock was grazin' near Cyanide City he ust to call on Grandma Hupkins and them two would set under the trees and knit and knit and gossip and gossip for hours and hours. We thought at first that MacTurtle had matrimonial intentions on Grandma, but we found later that the Scotchman liked to set near her because he could borrow her yarn, she bein' old and childish."

"Did MacTurtle gather a fortune by these methods?"

"No, sir, he did not. He was too stingy to buy a gun, so one night Sandow Jones and his gang o' bandits descended on his camp and removed the rewards o' five years continuous meanness. A short time after that Mac got a letter from the Old Country. There was 2 cents postage due on it, so he sent it back unopened. One day he died o' suffocation of the soul. And then it come out what was in the letter he sent back for postage due: It contained a note from a English lawyer sayin' that the Duke of Spottygully was dead and Lush MacTurtle was heir to the throne with $2,000,000 additional as a bonus."

"What's the moral?" I asked.

"It's this," said Col. Crowe. "There's some Prodigal Sons what never come home simply because they're too darned stingy to pay car fare."

My ball had rolled into a gully and I managed to extricate it by dint of considerable unskilled labor and athletic chopping of grass.

"When does the game begin?" asked Col. Crowe, gazing over the horizon.

"What game?"

"The golf game."

"It's going on now, you lobster!"

"Naw! You don't mean to tell me!"

"What did you think I was doing all this time?"

"I hated to ask you," admitted Col. Crowe. "I thought maybe you was practicin' or somethin'. D'ye mean to say them profane words and movements you've been goin' through is actually golf?"

"Yes, that's golf. How do you like it?"

"Well," said Col. Crowe, "one time up to Sody Springs I seen a team o' blind clergymen playin' croquet with the local idiot asylum. I thought it was pathetic at the time; but now I've seen golf I'm beginnin' to think that croquet under such circumstances is full o' sociable excitement and competition."

"Croquet's not a game you can take seriously," I said haughtily.

"That's the charm about it, I guess," said Col. Crowe.

"I'm sorry you don't like golf, Mr. Crowe," said the president of the club rather distantly as we sat around a mahogany table cooling our parched throats.

"Don't judge me too hard, pardner," said Col. Crowe. "I'm willin' to throw up my hands and openly acknowledge that I got a different idea of sport from what you fellers have. You spend your winters pryin' dollars away from poor, abused Pierpont Morgan and in the summer you git a sort o' mild sensation of vitality by poppin' little rubber pills over daisy-covered meadows. Tastes differs. Some perfectly intelligent Brooklyn families likes to play 'Button, button, who's got the button?' Others doesn't."

"What is your idea of the ideal sport?" asked the president sarcastically.

The colonel sat awhile in thought.

"Back in 1894 when I was mayor and sargeant-at-arms of Athens Gulch we had residing there a leadin' citizen named Hominy Hawkins, who was engaged in the general feed business and ran an undertaking parlor on the side. There came to camp a mountain columbine named Pansy Budd. Hominy fell violent. Shortly afterward they was married and lived happy ever afterward for about six weeks. One day into camp rides Arapahoe McAllister, sheriff of Metropolis City.

" 'Do you count yourself among the happy bridegrooms of Pansy Budd?' asks Arapahoe, his mustache workin' up and down toward his ears.

" 'Bein' able to count up to one, I reckon I do,' says Hominy, fingerin' his Colt's.

" 'What's a bigamist?' asks Hominy.

" 'A bigamist is a lady that can make two husbands grow where but one sprouted before,' explains the sheriff o' Metropolis City.

"Don't care if she's a bigamist or a biplane,' shouts Mr. Hawkins. 'I got a clear patent on the lady and there don't no fish-eyed claim-jumper from Metropolis come down here and bluff me out o' my propity.'

"I married Pansy Budd before Justice O'Brien on the Third o' March last past,' growls Arapahoe, 'and I come down here to remove 'er peaceable and without no row.' Sayin' which he pulls a .44 with a muzzle like a gas pipe.

"I seen there was a-goin' to be trouble, and as new glass had been put in all our leadin' business houses after the last deebate o' this kind, I reckoned it would be savin' money for the city if I arranged this affair quiet as possible.

" 'Gents,' says I' 'Sapollo the Roman poet tells us that woman's smile is flimsy and whimsical like the flight of a house fly. Like the fickle house fly her smile is apt to land on the chin of a favored individual, the next minute to fly out o' the window and torment a perfect stranger.'

" 'Hurry up, colonel,' says Arapahoe,' I want to shoot this home buster and git back over the trail before sunset.'

" 'Well,' says I, 'considerin' the fly-like qualities of the female smile which you claim jointly and together, why not settle the shootin' match by the famous Mexican Fly game?'

" 'What's the Mexican Fly Game?' says Arapahoe and Hominy together in unison.

" 'It's played by two drunkards with two lumps o' sugar. The drunkards set cross from each other with the lumps o' sugar on the table in front of 'em. The air is full o' flies. Pretty soon one o' them flies sees a lump o' sugar, hesitates, coyly, and finally flops down on one o' the two lumps. The gent that owns the lump with the fly on it wins. You fellers are playin' for the matrimonial affections o' Pansy Budd. The prizes will be distributed this way: The feller that wins gits the lady, but the loser is entitled to two shots at the winner as he runs toward the house of his blushin' bride.'

"The rivals agreed and a table was cleared in the little room back of the Casino Palace. Arapahoe was set down by a lump o' sugar and Hominy by another. On the table between 'em lay a big horse pistol full o' poison bullets.

"I thought the case would be settled in less 'n a minute, but there was one thing we hadn't reckoned on—the contrary quality of the average house-fly. If y' don't want a fly around, there he is washin' his hands on the tip of yer ear or roller-skatin' down yer collar. But did y' ever come to the time when y' reely wanted the services of a fly? That's the only time in the history of insects when a fly ain't to be found. There wasn't a fly to be found in Athens Gulch that afternoon. For twelve solid hours them two bloodthirsty rivals set glarin' at their lumps o' sugar, occasionally takin' a side-glance at the poison revolver and sighin' with love for Pansy Budd. All the boys in camp went around tryin' to shoo flies into the little room out back o' the Casino Palace. Nothin' doin'. Meanwhile everybody in camp was bettin' money as to who would win and how much chanct the winner had o' gettin' away. Two or three fellers was shot discussin' the odds.

"At last, after thirteen hours of solid watchin', Arapahoe and Hominy fell asleep over their lumps o' sugar. And the very exact geographical instant their eyes closed, what d'ye think happened?"

We gave it up.

"Two loud, fat flies came buzzin' in through the window, circled round the room twice, and landed at the exact geographical moment, each on one o' the lumps o' sugar! Us boys was in a awful quandry. Who won, we wondered? We didn't want to wake up the homicidal husbands for fear they'd see the flies and start somethin' right there. We was total took aback. And while we was standin' there in a quandry, the clerk from the Buckingham Palace Boardin' House came rushin' down.

" 'Too late!' he hollers, 'Pansy Budd eloped last night with a silverware salesman from Denver.' "

Col. Crowe rolled another cigarette.

"What happened to Arapahoe and Hominy?" some one asked.

"They figgered out they was some kind o' relations, bein' sort o' bigamy-in-laws to each other," said Col. Crowe, "so they pooled their stake and opened up a saloon in Pueblo. It was called 'The Fellow Sufferers.' It done a big business."

"So you prefer sugar and poison bullets to clubs and golf balls do you?" asked the President.

"With a woman's heart in the jack-pot and the whim of a house-fly settlin' the fates o' two or three parties—say, what Scotchman ever thought of a game like that?"

The faint click of chips from the lounging-room indicated that Sandow Jones was teaching the Boodleberry Club another game which no Scotchman ever thought of.

AS OUR CONSULS SAY.

The German State of Bavaria has a population of 6,876,497, an increase of 352,125 in five years, with rather more females than males. Iron ore deposits have recently been discovered in Northern Bavaria. Vacant dwellings are very scarce. The postoffices, telegraphs and telephones earned $14,161,000 gross in 1910. American cotton, agricultural machinery, boots and shoes, typewriters, dried and canned fruits, toilet articles, tools and office fittings are extensively in use. Nuremberg sent us $3,257,330 worth of toys in 1910, out of total exports to us of the value of $12,614,000. The city is an up-to-date center of manufacturing, one of the largest in Europe.

Cactus leaves are sliced and used to make a beautiful pearly whitewash in Uruguay.

American typewriting machines have driven out foreign makes at Malaga, Spain.

American pumps ($10,000 worth) were successfully sold by an American traveling agent in Alexandria, Egypt, on a recent visit. He carried samples and gave three and four months' credit to responsible parties. This is brand-new trade.

The Japanese Products Export Company is projected by prominent business men to promote the export of Japanese products.

China will construct a naval dockyard opposite to Shanghai, at a cost of $750,000, gold. Foreign engineers will be employed.

Coal mining in the Island of Hokkiado, Japan, is to be largely increased by the Mitsui company.

Brazil is using French capital to the extent of 3,367,000,000 francs (707,731,000.)

One-third of the 3000 people at the new Swastika gold-mining camp (near Cobalt) in Ontario, Can., are Americans. They own the largest and most valuable interests there. Modern mining machinery is to be installed. The best engineering and geological authorities agree that the commercial possibilities of this new mining district are unsurpassed.

A Rochester (N. Y.) business man has secured a concession from the municipality of Cuidad Bolivar, Venezuela, to build and sell 300 houses; to construct a theater and park, and modern water and sewer service for the whole city; also electric railways, as in Caracas.

Amoy, China, has been in close touch with the Philippines for 300 years. Amoy is the only port in China having direct steamship service with the islands. Seventy-five per cent. of the business done in the Philippines is carried on by Chinese—some 8000 merchants, employing $25,000,000, gold, capital. Rich unused mines exist within a hundred miles of Amoy.

China sent us 2,355,370 pounds of raw silk in 1911 fiscal year, nearly twice as much as in 1910.

The port of El Triunfo, Salvador, was opened for foreign trade on July 18, 1911.

American sewing machines are very popular in New Zealand. In proportion to population, New Zealand buys more of them than does any other part of the British Empire. Even most of those got from Great Britain are made by an American company established there. Sewing machines (except tables and supports) enter New Zealand free of duty.

Uruguay is to have a state mercantile marine of two steamers of 5000 tons each, to cost 700,000 pesos.

Argentina, in the first half of 1911, had an export trade of $190,000,000, gold, and an import trade of $172,000,000, gold—both exclusive of specie.

The two American meat plants in Argentina get all their machinery admitted free of duty.

Canning and preserving native fruits has been started as an industry at Manila, Philippine Islands.

New Zealand, being a well-watered and mountainous country, is rich in water powers, which are to be utilized by English capital, following a report made by an American electrical engineer.

England is beginning to use automobiles for rural postal deliveries.

Walnuts are being sent from Tientsin, China, to the United States—$43,829 worth in 1910.

Greece had a foreign trade in 1910 of $57,000,000, consisting of $30,500,000 imports and $26,500,000 exports—an increase of $12,000,000 over 1909. The resources of the country are developing and the political and other conditions improving. Our share of the imports was only $430,000, though we took $2,643,000 worth of exports, of which $1,561,000 worth was currants. Forty-eight thousand emigrants left Greece in 1910 for the United States, out of the total emigration of 58,000. The city of Athens has been greatly improved of late years—asphalt streets and electric railways. Greeks in the United States send back from $5,000,000 to $7,000,000 yearly.

Last Words Heeded.

[London Daily Telegraph:] Two Florentine ladies have created considerable trouble both for themselves and others by their unreasoning obedience to a deathbed exhortation. These two ladies are extremely wealthy, having inherited anything between £60,000 and £80,000 from the father of the elder and grandfather of the younger. The testator, feeling that his end was near, told them that they would inherit all his property, and added the admonition:

"Remember, confide in nobody, trust nobody and never sign your names, never, never, never!" Then he died.

The two women who remained to enjoy his fortune adopted his last words as the guiding maxims of their lives. Part of their money was invested in mortgages, some of their property was leased, but in all their transactions they steadfastly refused to put their names to a piece of paper of any kind. In the savings bank they had a deposit of £4000, which they were required to draw out. Glad to get rid of his troublesome clients, the chief officer made the payment in the presence of four witnesses.

Trade With Non-Contiguous Territory.

Trade of the United States with its non-contiguous territories in the fiscal year which ended with June, will exceed $200,000,000, against less than $100,000,000 in 1904, says the American Asiatic Association's Journal. In this trade merchandise received in the United States slightly exceeds in value that sent to the territories in question, though shipments from the United States show the larger and more rapid growth.

In 1893, the earliest year for which complete records are available, the shipments from the United States to the Territories under discussion—Alaska, Porto Rico, Hawaii and the Philippines—aggregated $26,000,000; in 1910, $83,000,000, and in 1911 seem likely to be $96,000,000, a gain of $60,000,000, or nearly 170 per cent. Inward shipments from the Territories were $50,000,000 in 1903, $108,000,000 in 1910, and at the rate of $107,000,000 in the ten months of 1911, a gain of $48,000,000, or 80 per cent. over 1903. The largest gain in outward trade with the non-contiguous territories was in shipments to Porto Rico.

It's the Lord Will.

[Chicago Inter-Ocean:] "God has ordained that I shall spend a year in the Bridewell and the devil has confirmed it," was the declaration of a man giving his name as Phillip Benninger, 50 years old, to Sergt. John O'Conner at the Harrison-sreet station yesterday morning.

Benninger said that he was ready to begin his term in the Bridewell and that it was God's will that he serve a year.

He said that he was a stationary engineer and has lived in Chicago for the past ten years.

He said that he had no permanent address.

He was detained at the station pending an examination by the City Physician.

Wolf Scalp Swindling.

[New York Mail:] There is a law in Wisconsin under which the State pays a bounty on the scalps of wolves, the result being that those animals are persistently sought by hunters. So many wolf scalps have been turned in of late that the royalties have proved rather burdensome to the State Treasury. While examining a lot of scalps not long ago, a State official became suspicious. Were they real wolf scalps? Unable to settle the question, he sent a batch of the scalps to Washington for an expert opinion. He got it promptly. They were not wolf scalps at all. But guess what they were? Neither more nor less than the scalps of squirrels! It is estimated that the State of Wisconsin has been swindled out of $166,000 by the scalp trick.

Men Barred as Jurors.

[Macon Telegraph:] Coming as a surprise was the ruling of Judge Robert T. Daniel in Spalding Superior Court this morning that all men over 60 years of age were disqualified for jury duty. When the men who had been summoned for jury duty stood up the question was asked:

"Have any of you gentlemen a legal excuse for not serving on the jury?"

"I am over 60 years of age," replied a well-known citizen, "but I can serve on the jury."

"Not in this court," smilingly ruled the judge. "Heretofore, gentlemen, the age limit has been optional with the juror, but recent rulings of the Court of Appeals render the observance of the age limit imperative in this court."

Several grand and traverse jurors were excused. They had come to Griffin prepared to serve on the juries and had no intimation that they were to be excluded. This act on the part of Judge Daniel will probably result in the withdrawal of all names from the jury box of men who are over 60 years of age.

every portion of the exposed front. The fort was well equipped with three tiers of heavy guns, some of them of the best English make, imported by the Confederates. In addition, there was in front a battery of eleven powerful guns, at the water's edge on the beach. All the guns, of both fort and water battery, were within point-blank range of the only channel through which the fleet could pass.

The enemy considered the works impregnable, but they did not depend solely upon them. Just around the point of land, behind Fort Morgan, we could see that afternoon three saucy-looking gunboats and the famous ram Tennessee, looking like a great turtle, with sloping sides covered with iron plates six inches in thickness, thoroughly riveted together, and having a formidable iron beak projecting under the water. Her armament consisted of six heavy guns of English make, sending a solid shot weighing 110 pounds—a small affair compared with the heavy guns of the present time, but irresistible then against everything but the turrets of the monitors.

In addition to these means of resistance, the narrow channel in front of the fort had been lined with torpedoes. These were under the water, anchored to the bottom, and were chiefly in the shape of beer kegs filled with powder, from the sides of which projected numerous little tubes containing fulminate, which it was expected would be exploded by contact with the passing vessels.

Except for what Farragut had already accomplished on the Mississippi, it would have been considered a foolhardy experiment for wooden vessels to attempt to pass so close to one of the strongest forts on the coast; but when to the forts were added the knowledge of the strength of the ram and the supposed deadly character of the torpedoes, it may be imagined that the coming event impressed the person taking his first glimpse of naval warfare as decidedly hazardous and unpleasant. So daring an attempt was never made in any country but this and was never successfully made by any commander except Farragut.

The scene on the Cowslip that afternoon was a notable one, as she steamed along within range of the forts. The central figure was the grand old admiral, his plans all completed, affable and jolly with all, evidently not thinking of failure as among the possibilities of the morrow, and filling every one with his enthusiasm. He was 63 years old, of medium height, stoutly built, with a finely proportioned head and smoothly shaven face, with an expression combining overflowing kindliness with iron will and invincible determination and with eyes that in repose were full of sweetness and light, but, on emergency, could flash fire and fury.

After completing the reconnoissance and reviewing the monitors, the party retired to the flagship, where the final council of war was held. This was only noteworthy from the fact that it was here that Admiral Farragut was over-persuaded, by the unanimous solicitations of his captains, and gave up his original determination of taking the lead. This was very much against his own judgment, and the events of the next day proved that he was right. The Brooklyn, Capt. Alden, was selected to lead, she being provided with an extemporized torpedo catcher, projecting from her bow.

At sunset, the last order had been issued. Every commanding officer knew his duty, and unusual quiet prevailed in the fleet. The waters of the Gulf rested, for a time, from their customary tumult, a gentle breeze relieved the midsummer heat, and the evening closed upon us as peacefully as if we had been on board a yachting squadron at Newport. During the early part of the night, the stillness was almost oppressive. The officers of the Hartford gathered around the capacious ward-room table, writing what they knew might be their last letters to loved ones for away, or giving to friends messages and instructions in case of death. There were no signs of fear, but, like brave and intelligent men, they recognized the stern possibilities of the morrow and acted accordingly.

But this occupied but little time, and then, business over, there followed an hour of unrestrained jollity. Many an old story was retold and ancient conundrum repeated. Old officers forgot, for the moment, their customary dignity, and it was evident that all were exhilarated and stimulated by the knowledge of the coming struggle. Finally Chief Engineer Williamson suggested an adjournment to the forecastle, for a last smoke, and the smoking club went forward; but, somehow, smoke had lost its customary flavor, and, after a few whiffs, all hands turned in, to enjoy what sleep would come.

Balancing to Partners.

The gray glimmer of dawn was just beginning to struggle through a dense fog when we were roused, at three o'clock next morning, and the work of forming line was begun. A hasty lunch of sandwiches and coffee was served, the admiral proposing to have breakfast inside the bay at the regular hour. The precautions necessary for maneuvering through the fog made an unavoidable delay, for it was the admiral's intention to have the fleet close to the fort before sunrise. It was a weird sight as the big ships "balanced to partners," the dim outlines slowly emerging like phantoms in the fog. The vessels were lashed together in pairs, fastened side by side by huge cables; the Brooklyn and Octorora leading, the flagship Hartford and the Metacomet following. The remaining vessels were paired as follows, the one named first in each instance being on the starboard and most exposed side — Richmond and Port Royal; Lackawanna and Seminole; Monongahela and Kennebec; Ossipee and Itasca; Oneida and Galena. All the vessels had been stripped for the fight.

In addition to the seven pairs of wooden vessels, there were four monitors, the Tecumseh and Manhattan, single turreted, with two fifteen-inch guns each; the Winnebago and Chickasaw, of lighter draught, with double turrets, and with eleven-inch guns. The monitors, being very slow-gaited, were started in advance, the intention being to have them on the right flank of the line, in front, to partially shield the fleet from fort and ram.

It was fifteen minutes of six o'clock before the whole fleet got under way. About sunrise, while the line was being formed, a light breeze sprang up and scattered the fog, leaving us a bright and beautiful day. The fleet presented a magnificent sight as the stately ships moved on, each with the Stars and Stripes flying from every mast head, and the men gathered at their guns ready for work.

Banished to the Cockpit.

On the previous night the Admiral had issued orders that the army signal officers were not to be allowed on deck during the fight, but were to go into the cock-pit on the lower deck and assist the surgeons. The reason assigned was that these officers would not be needed during the passage of the forts, but would be wanted afterward to open communication with the army, and that therefore it would be a misfortune to have any of them disabled.

The two officers on the Hartford disrelished this order exceedingly, and, after consulting together decided that in the confusion of the occasion their presence on deck would probably not be noticed, and that they would evade the command if possible. In this they were successful until shortly before passing Sand Island and coming within range of Fort Morgan. Then the lynx-eyed executive officer, Lieutenant-Commander Kimberly, came to them very quietly and politely, and told them the Admiral's order must be obeyed. We made our way to the stifling hold, where Surgeon Landsdale and Assistant Surgeon Commons with their helpers were quietly sitting, with their implements, bandages and other paraphernalia spread out ready for use.

Nearly every man had his watch in his hand and waited for the first shot. To us, ignorant of everything going on above, every minute seemed an hour, and there was a feeling of great relief when the boom of the first gun was heard. This was from the monitor Tecumseh, at forty-seven minutes past 6 o'clock. Presently one or two of our forward guns opened, and we could hear the distant sound of the guns of the fort in reply. Soon the cannon-balls began to crash through the deck above us, and then the thunder of our whole broadside of twelve Dahlgren guns kept the vessel in a quiver. But as yet no wounded were sent down, and we knew we were still at comparatively long range.

I Am Called Into Action.

In the intense excitement of the occasion it seemed that hours had passed, but it was just twenty minutes from the time we went below, when an officer shouted down the hatchway: "Send up an army signal officer immediately: The Brooklyn is signaling."

In a moment the writer was on deck, where he found the situation as follows: The Brooklyn, directly in front of us, had stopped, and was backing and signaling. The tide was with us, setting strongly through the channel, and the stopping of the Brooklyn threatened to bring the whole fleet into collision and confusion. The advance vessels of the line were trying to back to prevent a catastrophe but were apparently not able to overcome the force of the current, and there was danger not only of collision, but of being drifted on shore. Meanwhile, the almost stationary fleet made a splendid point-blank target for the fort and for the four Confederate vessels, all of which were doing their utmost, giving us a terrible raking, making cruel havoc among the men, and ugly holes in the sides of the ships.

Running to the forecastle, I took the message of Capt. Alden of the Brooklyn, which was: "The monitors are right ahead; we cannot go on without passing them." Transmitting the message to the Admiral by an aide, he replied at once: "Order the monitors ahead and go on."

As the message was sent, the starboard bow-gun of the Hartford opened fire on the ram Tennessee, and the great volume of smoke following each discharge hid the Brooklyn from view, and made it impossible to receive or transmit messages from that part of the ship, while the smoke from the other guns made it equally difficult from any other part of the deck. The smoke hung low in the air and I thought it best to try and get above it, and accordingly ran up the rigging to the foretop.

But the Hartford had a howitzer in her foretop, which was hard at work, under the management of half a dozen sailors throwing grape and canister into the water-battery in front of the fort, and making it as difficult to signal here as it was on deck. So, not knowing what else to do, I kept on up the rigging to the top-gallant cross-trees, where there was just room to sit, holding on with the left arm around the peak of the top-mast. From this point, above all smoke, the scene was indescribably grand and terrific.

I Witness Sinking of the Tecumseh.

The fight was at its hottest. The Union fleet had reached the line, the crossing of which meant victory, and the result depended on the next few minutes. Just at this moment, to the horror of all, the monitor Tecumseh, a few hundred yards in the advance, seemed to stagger for a moment, then suddenly careened, and almost instantly disappeared beneath the water, carrying with her her commander, Capt. Tunis A. M. Craven, and 120 officers and men, hopelessly imprisoned in their iron coffin.

The pilot leaped from the pilot-house and some half-dozen men in the turret managed to jump through the ports, and were drawn into the whirlpool made by the sinking ship. They were rescued by a cutter from the Metacomet. This boat, flying the Union flag, rowed up under the guns of the fort, coolly picked up the drowning men, and rowed back to the lee of one of the following ships.

During all this time the Brooklyn had failed to move ahead, and now she delayed to signal back the fact already too well known: "Our best monitor is sunk." The message was sent to the admiral by an aid and the brief answer was returned, "Go on!" But still, for some mysterious reason, perhaps, fear of the torpedoes, perhaps, misapprehension of orders, the Brooklyn halted, and the delay was every instant more threatening and dangerous.

The Carnage on the Flagship.

It was the decisive moment of the day. Owing to our position, only our few bow-guns could be used, while a deadly rain of shot and shell was falling on us, and our men were being cut down by scores, unable to make reply. The sight on the deck of the Hartford was sickening beyond the power of words to portray. Shot after shot came through the side, mowing down the men, deluging the decks with blood, and scattering mangled fragments of humanity so thickly that it was difficult to stand on the deck, so slippery was it. The old expressions of the "scuppers running blood," "the slippery deck," etc., give but the faintest idea of the spectacle on the Hartford.

The bodies of the dead were placed in a long row on the port side, while the wounded were sent below until the surgeons' quarters would hold no more. A solid shot coming through the bow struck a gunner on the neck, completely severing head from body. One poor fellow lost both legs by a cannon ball; as he fell he threw up both arms, just in time to have them also carried away by another shot. At one gun, all the crew on one side were swept down by a shot which came crashing through the bulwarks. A shell burst between the two forward guns, killing and wounding fifteen men.

The mast upon which I was perched was twice struck, once slightly, and again just below the fore-top by a 120-pound shell, from a Blakely rifle on the rebel gunboat Selma. Fortunately the shell, which was about two feet long by eight inches in diameter, came tumbling end over end, and buried itself in the mast butt-end first, leaving the percussion cap protruding. Had it come point first, or had it struck at any other part of the mast than in the reinforced portion, where the heel of the top-most laps the top of the lower mast, this contribution to the literature of the war would probably have been lost to the world, as the distance to the deck was some one hundred feet.

Meanwhile, the men were working the guns that could be used, as though the sight and smell of blood had sharpened their appetites. There was no skulking; in fact, there was no chance to skulk, if there had been such a disposition. They stood to their work, white and black side by side. There was no thought of social differences then; and whenever a shot was believed to have been well placed, the cheers of the men rang out above the roar of the guns.

The Admiral Is Lashed to the Rigging.

Soon after the fight began, Admiral Farragut, finding that the low-hanging smoke from the guns interfered with his view from the deck, went up the rigging of the mainmast as far as the futtock shrouds, immediately below the maintop. The pilot, Martin Freeman, was in the top directly overhead, and the fleet captain was on the deck below. Seeing the admiral in this exposed position, where, if wounded, he would be killed by falling to the deck, Fleet Captain Drayton ordered Knowles, the signal quartermaster, to fasten a rope around him so that he would be prevented from falling. Finding that the Brooklyn failed to obey his orders, the admiral hurriedly inquired of the pilot if there was sufficient depth of water for the Hartford to pass to the left of the Brooklyn. Receiving an affirmative reply, he said: "I will take the lead,' 'and immediately ordered the Hartford ahead at full speed. As he passed the Brooklyn a voice warned him of the torpedoes, to which he returned the contemptuous answer, "Damn the torpedoes." This is the current story, and may have some basis of truth. But as a matter of fact, there was never a moment when the din of the battle would not have drowned any attempt at conversation between the two ships, and while it is quite probable that the admiral made the remark it is doubtful if he shouted it to the Brooklyn.

Then was witnessed the remarkable sight of the Hartford and her consort, the Metacomet, passing over the dreaded torpedo ground and rushing ahead far in advance of the rest of the fleet, the extrication of which from the confusion caused by the Brooklyn's halt required many minutes of valuable time. The Hartford was now moving over what is called the "middle ground," with shallow water on either side, so that it was impossible to move except as the channel permitted. Taking advantage of the situation, the Confederate gunboat Selma kept directly in front of the flag ship and raked her fore and aft, doing more damage in reality than all the rest of the enemy's fleet. The other gunboats, the Gaines and the Morgan, were in shallow water on our starboard bow, but they received more damage from the Hartford's broadsides than they were able to inflict. Meanwhile the ram Tennessee, which up to this time had contented herself with simply firing at the approaching fleet, started for the Hartford, apparently with the intention of striking her amidships. At the same time, the watter battery and a portion of the guns of Fort Morgan had a fine chance at our side.

Fortunate Change of Course.

We were now at the second period of the fight, when success seemed trembling in the scales. The Hartford and her mate had reached about a mile beyond the fort and the same distance in advance of most of the fleet, which were still under the guns of the fort. Had the ram kept on, it could have hardly failed to sink us, as our shot glanced harmlessly from its side, and we were unable, on account of the narrow channel, to move out of its way. But, for some reason, the Admiral Buchanan (who had commanded the Merrimac in her fight with the Monitor) changed his course, and made for the fleet at the fort. Perhaps the water between us was too shallow, or perhaps he thought us an easy prey for his leisure, and considered it more important to prevent other vessels from getting inside. Whatever the reason, his course was changed, and we were safe.

Our greatest annoyance now was from the three gun-boats, particularly from the Selma, which was handled with great ability. Three times Capt. Jouett, commanding our light-draught consort, the Metacomet, the fastest vessel in the fleet, requested permission from the Admiral to leave us and tackle the Selma, but the Admiral replied "Wait a little longer."

But finally we emerged from the narrow channel into the deep water of the bay, and then the desired order was given. Already men had been stationed with sharp axes, ready to cut the cables which bound the two ships together, and the Admiral had hardly waved his hand to Capt. Jouett before the ropes were severed, and, as the crew gave three hearty cheers, the Metacomet darted forward after the Selma.

The latter did not care to wait, but endeavored to escape up the bay. A brisk chase ensued, but the Metacomet was too much for her adversary, and, when one of her shots wounded the captain and killed the first lieutenant, a speedy surrender followed, and in half an hour Jouett returned with the saucy little rebel in tow.

Meantime, the guns of the Hartford had crippled the Gaines, and she was run aground near Ft. Morgan, deserted, and set on fire. The other gunboat, the Morgan, which had kept a safe distance during the fight, retreated under the guns at Ft. Morgan. And the great ram, after making an unsuccessful effort to sink or injure any of the Union vessels, and after receiving a heavier blow from the Monongahela than it had inflicted, also retired to the fort. The other vessels of the fleet, each with its own special record of bravery, followed the Hartford past the fort and joined us in the bay.

"The Ram Is Coming."

The roar of the battle was now over; the fleet came to anchor and preparations were made to give the hungry men some breakfast. Those of us who had been perched aloft came down on deck, and, as if by a general understanding, the officers of the Hartford, who could be spared from immediate duty hastened to the wardroom to ascertain how it had fared with their messmates.

We were just beginning to feel the reaction following such a season of extreme peril and excitement, when we were brought to our senses by the sharp penetrating voice of Executive Officer Kimberley calling all hands to quarters, and a messenger boy hurried down to us with the word, "The ram is coming." Every man hastened to his post, I to the quarter-deck, where the Admiral and fleet captain were standing.

The cause of the new excitement was evident at once. The Tennessee had left Fort Morgan and was making at full speed directly for the Hartford, being then perhaps a mile and a half distant. The spectacle was a grand one, and was viewed by the soldiers in both forts, who were now out of range of our guns and lined the walls. Few audiences have ever witnessed so imposing a sight. The great ram came on for a single-handed contest with the fleet. She was believed to be invulnerable, and had powerful double engines by which she could be easily handled, while our monitors were so slow-gaited that they were unable to offer any serious obstacle to her approach. Farragut himself seemed to place his chief dependence on his wooden vessels. Doubtless the crowd of Confederate soldiers who watched the fight expected to see the Tennessee sink the Yankee vessels in detail, and the chances seemed all in its favor.

I Signal the Order to Attack.

The admiral wished to order the whole fleet to attack the ram, but to do this by the cumbrous naval code of signaling would occupy some moments of valuable time. So, while the quarter-master was preparing to send up the flags for the general order, the admiral desired me to use the army code in starting the faster and most formidable vessels.

The Monongahela was lying, with all steam up, on our port quarter, perhaps an eighth of a mile distant. To send the message: "Capt. S.—Run down the ram.—Ad. F.," took less than twenty seconds, and before the signal officer had finished acknowledging the message, we could see the Monongahela moving forward, not waiting to raise her anchor, but slipping her cable. The same message followed to Capt. Marchand, of the Lackawanna, and to the monitor.

Meanwhile, the general signal, "Attack the enemy," had gone up to the peak of the Hartford, and there f lowed a general slipping of cabl and a friendly rivalry to see wh could quickest meet the foe. T Monongahela, with her artificial ir prow, was bravely in the lead, a struck the ram amidships at f speed, doing no damage to the ra but having her own iron prow d stroyed and being otherwise injur Next came the Lackawanna, with like result. The huge iron frame the Tennessee scarcely felt the sho while the wooden bow of the Uni ship was badly demoralized.

The Duel of the Flagships.

As the two vessels separated, t Lackawanna swung alongside t ram, which sent two shots through h and kept on her course for the Ha ford, which was no the next ve in the attack. The two flagships a proached each other, bow to bow, ir against oak. It was impossible f the Hartford, with her lack of spe to circle around and strike the ra on the side; her only safety was keeping pointed directly for the b of her assailant. The other ves of the fleet were unable to do an thing for the defense of the admir except to train their guns on the ra on which as yet they had not t slightest effect.

It was a thrilling moment for t fleet, for it was evident that if t ram could strike the Hartford the la ter must sink. But for the two ve sels to strike fairly, bows on, wou probably have involved the destru tion of both, for the ram must ha penetrated so far into the wooden sh that as the Hartford filled and sa she would have carried the ram und water. Whether for this reason or f some other, as the two vessels ca together the Tennessee slight changed her course, the port bow the Hartford met the port bow of t ram, and the ships grated against ea other as they passed. The Hartfo poured her whole port broadsi against the ram, but the solid sh merely dented the side and bound into the air. The ram tried to retu the salute, but owing to defectiv primers only one gun was discharge This sent a shell through the bert deck, killing five men and woundi eight. The muzzle of the gun w so close to the Hartford that the po der blackened her side.

The scene on the Hartford duri the moment of contact was of inten excitement. The admiral coolly sto on the port quarter-rail, holding the mizzen rigging, from which, one time, he almost could hav jumped to the deck of the ram. Fi Lieut. Watson, seeing him in this e posed position, secured him to th rigging by a rope's end with his ow hands; so that, during the day, h was twice "lashed to the rigging As the ships came together, Cap Drayton ran to the bow of the Har ford, and, as the ram sheered off avoid striking a square blow, he shoo his lorgnette at it, and exclaime "The cowardly rascal: he's afraid a wooden ship!"

"Save the Admiral."

The Tennessee now became the ta get for the whole fleet, all the ve sels of which were making toward pounding it with shot, and trying run it down. As the Hartford turne to make for it again, we ran in fro of the Lackawanna, which had al ready turned and was moving unde full headway with the same objec She struck us on our starboard sid amidships, crushing half-way throug knocking two portholes into one, u setting two Dahlgreen guns, and crea ing general consternation.

For a time it was thought th we must sink, and the cry rang ou over the deck: "Save th admiral! Save the admiral! The port boats were ordered lowere and in their haste some of the sailo cut the "falls" and two of the cutte dropped into the water wrong sid up, and floated astern. But the a miral, nearly as cool as ever, spra into the starboard mizzen-riggin looked over the side of the ship, an finding there was still a few inche to spare above the water's edge, in stantly ordered the ship ahead agai at full speed, after the ram.

The unfortunate Lackawann which had struck the ram a secon blow, was making for her once mor and, singularly enough, again came u on our starboard side, and anothe collision seemed imminent. And no the admiral became a trifle excite He had no idea of whipping the en emy to be himself sunk by a friend "Can you say, 'For God's sake' b signal?" he inquired. "Yes, sir," wa the reply. "Then say to the Lacka wanna, 'For God's sake get out o our way and anchor!'"

In my haste to send the messag I brought the end of my signal flag staff down with considerable violenc upon the head of the admiral, wh was standing nearer than I though causing him to wince perceptibly, bu I could not apologise until I finishe signaling. It was a hasty messag for the fault was as much with th Hartford as with the Lackawanna each being too eager to reach th enemy, and it turned out all right, b a fortunate accident, that Capt. Mar chand never received it. The army signal officer on the Lackawanna ha taken his station in the foretop, and just as he received the first five word the wind flirted the large Unite States flag at the mast-head aroun him, so that he was unable to rea the remainder of the message.

The remainder of the story is soo told. The ram was unable to strik a single one of the Union vessels while the concentration of fire upo it tore away everything except th solid iron. First, the flag-staff fell then the smoke-stack was shot away and finally a well-placed shot from the monitor Chickasaw broke the rudder-chain, so that the great ram would no longer mind the helm, and she lay like a huge monster at bay. Already a fifteen-inch solid shot from the Manhattan had crushed through the iron armor and let the daylight into her port-holes, and a fragment seriously wounded the rebel admiral.

And then, up through the iron grating of her deck came a staff, bearing a white flag. The firing ceased, and from vessel after vessel of the victorious fleet rang out such cheers as are seldom heard and never forgotten—cheers which meant victory after a hard and very doubtful struggle. And, as the cheering ceased, a dim echo seemed to come from below, where the wounded and dying, knowing the day was at last won, joined in the shouts of triumph, rejoiced that their sacrifice would not be in vain. So ended the fight.

Next Sunday the march of Sherman's army through Georgia and the Carolinas will be described, from the "human interest" standpoint, by Daniel Oakley, Captain Second Massachusetts Volunteers, who covered the entire march from Atlanta to the sea and then on to Goldsboro, N. C., where the great march came to an end with the receipt of the news that Lee had surrendered and that the war was at an end.

Selfish Man.

[Washington Star:] "Uncle Joe" Cannon, in a recent interview in Danville, was talking about the so-called hardships of the customs laws.

"After all, considering the splendid revenue they bring in, these laws inflict very slight hardships," he said. "The trouble is we look at hardships selfishly."

He smiled.

EW CALENDAR IS PROPOSED.

ll Is Drafted for the British Parliament.

ans-Atlantic Shipping Pool May Be Renewed.

lcutta Derby Sweepstake Enjoys Popularity.

[A. P. Correspondence.]

ONDON, Sept. 4.—Sir Henry Dal- leader of the ultra-Radicals in House of Commons, and father of bill which aims at giving Scotland al self-government, has just had pared a bill to alter the calendar. e bill, known as the Fixed Calen- Bill, contains some novel features. the memorandum which accom- nies it explains, the bill purposes to stitute for the present irregular endar a fixed calendar having reg- r periods, of which the week is the mon measure.

n this, as in other features, it dif- from the Calendar Reform Bill, roduced in the House of Commons 1908, but which never got beyond second reading stage. That bill ght to make the months as uni- m in length as possible, but as a ference in this respect is unavoid- le in a year with twelve months, is thought better to increase that ference so as to allow of the week ing a common measure of all nths. This arrangement makes it sible for each month to begin on unday and end on a Saturday.

NEW YEAR'S DAY.

A table giving the proposed fixed lendar shows that the months of nuary, February, April, May, July, gust, October and November would ch consist of twenty-eight days, ile the remaining months of arch, June, September and Decem- r would each have thirty-five days. ew Year Day" is set apart, thus inging the total of days up to the quisite number of 365, while for ap years a special day is set apart "Leap Day," which is to be inter- lated between the last day of June d the first day of July, as recon- tuted by the bill.

A clause in the bill lays down that e New Year Day and leap day shall ither be accounted days of the ek, and shall not, except where ecially mentioned or provided for, held to be included in any com- tation of days, but shall otherwise public bank holidays. The condi- s of labor on those two days and remuneration therefor, under the l, would conform as far as possible what prevails on Sundays. A fixed te, April 15, is selected for Easter y.

Finally the bill, if passed by Par- ment, will not become operative un- the government decides that suf- ient international concurrence has en secured.

MAY RENEW POOL.

It is generally anticipated in trans- lantic shipping circles that the pool- g arrangement, which expires on ctober 13, will be renewed at the sumed conference to be held in Co- gne during September. The Canadi- n Pacific Railway Company, which orks its shipping interests chiefly s a feeder for the railway, and which as heretofore opposed the extension f the agreement, has, it is believed, s a result of concessions granted by he continental companies, modified s attitude.

The movement of passengers during he first half of this year did not real- se expectations, partly on account of many Americans waiting until later n the year to visit England, thus voiding the high charges which pre- vailed during the cornation period. The decrease, however, was general in ll classes, both eastbound and west- bound. On the routes to America, the total decreas was 127,122. From British ports to Canada, on the other hand, there was in increase of 20,531. The continental lines have been the chief sufferers, the four leading ones having carried 85,843 fewer passengers than they did for the same period last year.

Under the old agreement these four companies were entitled to 62 per cent of the pooled traffic. They actually carried 18,844 fewer passengers than the number on which that percentage was based. In view of this, it is understood that they are prepared to adopt a conciliatory attitude to avoid a rate war.

DERBY SWEEPSTAKE.

The Derby Sweepstake, organized by the Calcutta Turf Club, the greatest sweep in the world, which has grown to gigantic proportions, is in danger of being abolished, or at least considerably curtailed. Under Indian, like British laws, clubs can organize sweepstakes for members only.

The "Calcutta Sweep," was started like the sweepstake in all London clubs on the Derby, to enable members to have an interest in the race without chancing much money. Unlike the others, however, the Calcutta one grew far beyond this, tickets being sold to anybody and everybody, and it was hard to find a European in India or one who had ever been there who did not have a ticket or at least an interest in one.

Ten years ago the first prize in the sweep was worth about $100,000; last year it was worth nearly a quarter of a million dollars. The first prize last year went to a doctor, who, however, had sold a half-interest in the ticket for $60,000.

Electricity From the Stars.

[Harper's Weekly:] Experiments conducted in Ireland, if they are to be trusted, reveal a distinct electromotive force exercised by the stars. Using a reflecting telescope of two feet aperture to concentrate the star rays, and a sensitive electrometer to note their influence, the experimenters had reasons to believe that they were able not only to detect, but to measure the electromotive force of both stars and planets.

To Venus, for example, they ascribed a force of about seventeen one-hundredths of a volt, and to Jupiter a force of at least three one-hundredths of a volt. In the case of Jupiter only a part of the planet's light fell upon the electrometer, so that the experimenters inferred that his entire electric influence must be much greater than that stated. Sirius, which appears to us as the brightest of the fixed stars, showed a force amounting to two one-hundredths of a volt.

THE PROPOSED AMENDMENTS.

Views of a California Lawyer.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 11.—[To the Editor:] The elections of 1910, following on the heels of the graft trials, resulted in a change of men and principles similar to that occasioned by the "sand lots" excitement, dominated by Denis Kearney. The last Legislature proved wholly subservient to Gov. Johnson and a mass of legislative changes and prospective, constitutional experiments were "pitchforked" through the Senate and Assembly by almost unanimous votes under pressure from the administration. Gov. Johnson's machine proved itself at once powerful and despotic.

Voters have now an opportunity to reflect upon the changes set out in the blanket sheet of proposed constitutional amendments. Some of them are undesirable and should be rejected.

CHARTERS FOR COUNTIES.

At present the fifty-seven counties in the State are governed by their respective citizens under the provisions of the Political Code of the State.

Different conditions in the various counties are met by particular enactments in reference to the class of counties (each county usually constituting a class) in question.

Under the amendment there could be fifty-seven different schemes of government for the counties, creating great diversity and confusion, and with no resulting benefit.

The arguments on the female suffrage amendment are chiefly noticeable for the impudent claims made by the advocates of the amendment.

Senator Bell tells us that the magnificent reforms which have put New Zealand in the foremost ranks of civilization are due to women's votes.

The corruption of the New Zealand electorate is notorious. A despotic minority in that dependency has almost abolished the liberty of the citizen and Australia is nearly as bad.

Coming nearer home we find polygamous Utah with Wyoming and Colorado among the female suffrage States. It is true that the governors of those States issue periodical proclamations telling how big they are and what a blessing female suffrage is. The facts do not bear them out.

In "Uncle Tom's Cabin" we are told of a negro who was burned at the stake in the South. Colorado, however, is the only northern State where a negro was fastened to a steel rail driven into the ground by a mob consisting partly of women and burned to death while the women applauded.

Wyoming in its early history was the only State which licensed gambling houses and houses for the practice of other vices. Somewhat later it was notorious as the battle ground for the "rustler's war."

It was a saying of the late Mr. Bagehot that there were three kinds of falsehood: Lies, damn lies and statistics. Mr. Bagehot has omitted the shameless mendacity of the philanthropic politician.

The arguments against the initiative and the referendum have been well formulated by Senator Wright.

The passage of the amendment will promote the constant disturbances of a restless and factious minority.

The passers of petitions for various purposes are now nuisances comparable to the book agent and the purveyor of Collier's Weekly.

The average American can be annoyed into signing almost any petition. This is one of the worst ways of ascertaining the popular will. A mass of undigested legislation, as happened lately in Oregon, can be presented to voters who have not the time, nor, perhaps, the capacity for analysing its contents, nor for harmonizing provisions that may be contradictory.

THE RECALL.

In treating of the recall it will be well to consider the reasons for including the judiciary under this head in a historic manner.

At a recent meeting to reform enthusiasts in San Francisco, where Mr. Uren and other instigators of new methods were present, Gov. Johnson and his adherents alluded unfavorably to President Taft's opposition to the recall of the judiciary and prophesied the victory of all his (Johnson's) policies.

The general objections to depriving any officer of his position without proving misconduct in office and of making him pay all the expenses of an unsuccessful contest on the subject are obvious.

The particular reason for embracing judges in these recall provisions seems to be the revenge of a beaten lawyer for an unfavorable decision.

It is a matter of recent memory that Gov. Johnson and the Legislature of 1911 were elected on the heels of the graft prosecutions and that the Legislature was obedient to the Governor in every particular. In the graft prosecutions a large number of wrongdoers were exposed to public odium or pursued in the courts with various results. Many of these people were notoriously guilty either of receiving or giving bribes. Many were granted immunity for the sake of their testimony and others were acquitted or convicted, as the case may be. The reversal of the conviction of Schmitz referred to in considering the proposed amendment to the criminal procedure was especially illustrative of the incapacity of the prosecuting lawyers. While such an eminent firm as Sullivan and Roche appeared for the government, the real responsibility lay with Messrs. Heney and Johnson. Mr. Heney was distinguished for his persistence and a certain noisy truculence, but possessed none of the higher legal qualifications, and Mr. Johnson, while a more respectable practitioner, was scarcely more gifted. The result was that the conviction of Schmitz had to be reversed. No one can read the opinion in that case without regretting the wretched blunders of the prosecution.

It is a well-known privilege of an unsuccessful advocate to curse the court, but it is unusual for such a beaten lawyer to have it in his power to attempt to turn out the judges.

If it is for the interest of the State to have a settled and orderly procedure, this amendment should be defeated. If it is to our interest to have the laws impartially and courageously administered, this amendment should be defeated. If this amendment has been in part dictated by feelings of spite or revenge of a practitioner unable to draw a valid indictment, it should be defeated.

CRIMINAL CONVICTIONS.

On the blanket issue of amendments with reasons for and against them, Senators Birdsall and Boynton give alleged reasons for the adoption of the amendment, but there is no argument given against it.

The arguments of the Senators are inaccurate and deceptive—the amendment should be defeated.

The Senators' argument in the first place entirely mis-states the present law. Imperfections in indictments, or technical errors or departures from code form or errors or mistakes in any pleading or proceeding do not affect an appeal from a judgment of conviction unless they prejudice the defendant in a substantial right. (See Sections 960, 1258, 1259 and 1404 of the Penal Code.)

The "nigger" in the amendment lies in the provision to the effect that no judgment of conviction shall be reversed for error in the indictment or information unless after an examination of the evidence the court shall be of opinion that there was a miscarriage of justice. That might mean that a man could be indicted for forgery and convicted of murder and if the evidence gave reasonable grounds to show the defendant guilty of murder the judgment should not be reversed.

The amendment disregards the "substantial right" of a person accused of crime to be distinctly told of the offense for which he is put on trial.

An opinion of the late Judge Temple declares that the Petition of Right, Habeas Corpus and the Great Charter—in fact, all the historic bulwarks of Saxon freedom, were wrung from authority for the protection of persons accused of crime.

It will be an evil day when the "substantial rights" of accused persons are sacrificed by this amendment because the graft prosecutors could not draw a valid indictment against Schmitz, for this appears to be the real reason for bringing this amendment forward.

Senator Boynton refers to a Missouri case and a Texas case which he does not specify further. He refers in the same way to a California case where the conviction was set aside because the indictment failed to state that the man killed was a human being.

This no doubt refers to the case of People vs. Lee Look 137 Cal. 590—decided in 1902, a case frequently cited by reformers of a certain class and usually cited with false implications, as here. In People vs. Lee Look there was no indictment. An information was filed against Lee Look because he "unlawfully and with malice aforethought killed Lee Wing." There was no allegation at all, as implied by the Senator, that Lee Wing was a man. Lee Look was not in terms charged with murder or manslaughter, which would have implied that the victim was a man. For all that appeared by statement or implication in the information, Lee Wing might have been a monkey. It was held that a man's life cannot be judicially taken on such a pleading.

Senator Birdsall cites his authorities by book and page. He states that in 62 Cal. 309 a conviction of murder was reversed because the trial court permitted a surgeon to testify to the probable position of the deceased when the fatal shot was fired. The case in question is People versus Westlake and is far from bearing out the Senator's comment. The judgment of conviction of the murderer in that case was in fact affirmed.

The arguments of Senators based upon false allegations of fact are not convincing. Mis-statements of law inspire distrust. All technical errors not affecting substantial rights are by the law now existing to be disregarded on appeal. Errors that affect substantial rights should be ground of reversal. The truth seems to be that the amendment in question was formulated so that prosecutors of graft indictments might hereafter secure convictions without stating any offence.

The question raised by this amendment is whether the people desire to put a man on trial and sustain his conviction when he is not charged with crime. The amendment should be defeated.

EMPLOYERS' LIABILITY.

The amendment in reference to employers' liability is grossly unjust and wholly bad. Yet there is no argument against it on the broadside issued. Senator Welch says the object of the amendment is to enable the Legislature to administer the laws without the interference of the courts. This, if practicable, seems undesirable. The "interference of the courts" is the factor that distinguishes a government of law from a government of arbitrary despotism. Under the amendment in question a case could be made as follows:

You instruct your cook not to use kerosene to light the fire. The cook disobeys your instructions, use kerosene, burns down the house, injures your wife and children and is herself injured, and you have to pay for the cook's injuries "without the interference of the courts."

Can farcical legislation be more wickedly unjust?

Senator Roseberry, recently appointed counsel to the State Board of Health by Governor Johnson, shows alleged reasons why this infamous amendment should be adopted, insisting upon the economic and moral gain and showing how insurance companies have profited under the present law.

As a matter of fact the amendment in question tends to compel every employer to insure and might well have been entitled "an amendment to assist insurance companies to increase their dividends."

The Senator refers to the law introduced by himself and passed at the last session (chapter 399, laws 1911.) The statute is said to have been copied from a law of Michigan. It is a confused piece of legislation, needing much judicial interpretation. It refers to injuries approximately causing death and injuries approximately caused by accident.

It may be supposed that the learned Senator intended to use proximately instead of the above meaningless word. His law, bad as it may prove in some aspects, is certainly better than this dishonest amendment.

GORDON.

A Lawyer's Scruples.

[Chicago Record-Herald:] "It looks bad," said the defendant's lawyer. "I'm afraid they've got you."

"But there must be some way to save me," replied the law-breaker. "Can't you find a serviceable technicality?"

"I've tried my best to do so, but there seems to be no chance. The only hope I have is that we will be able to find somebody who will be willing to go on the stand and swear that he saw you in another county at the time you were burning your books here."

"But what good would that do? They have the letter in which I wrote to my partner telling him that I had burned the books."

"That's so. There's no chance in that direction. It's too bad you wrote that letter. I know a man who would go on the stand and swear to anything for $50."

"Can't you fix one of the jurors?"

"What! How dare you suggest such a thing to me? I want you to understand that I am an honest man and am sworn to uphold the dignity of the courts."

Was No Mossbank.

[Washington Star:] John Adams Thayer, publisher, once declared at a dinner in New York that when he was a printer he used to change his job six or seven times a year.

"I always bettered myself," said Thayer. "I always advanced my pay a dollar or more by every change. I remember a Boston foreman who said to me, when I told him I was leaving for Chicago:

"'Well I suppose you'll get a job out there; but remember, boy, a rolling stone gathers no moss.'

"'Moss, sir,' I replied, 'is for ruins.'"

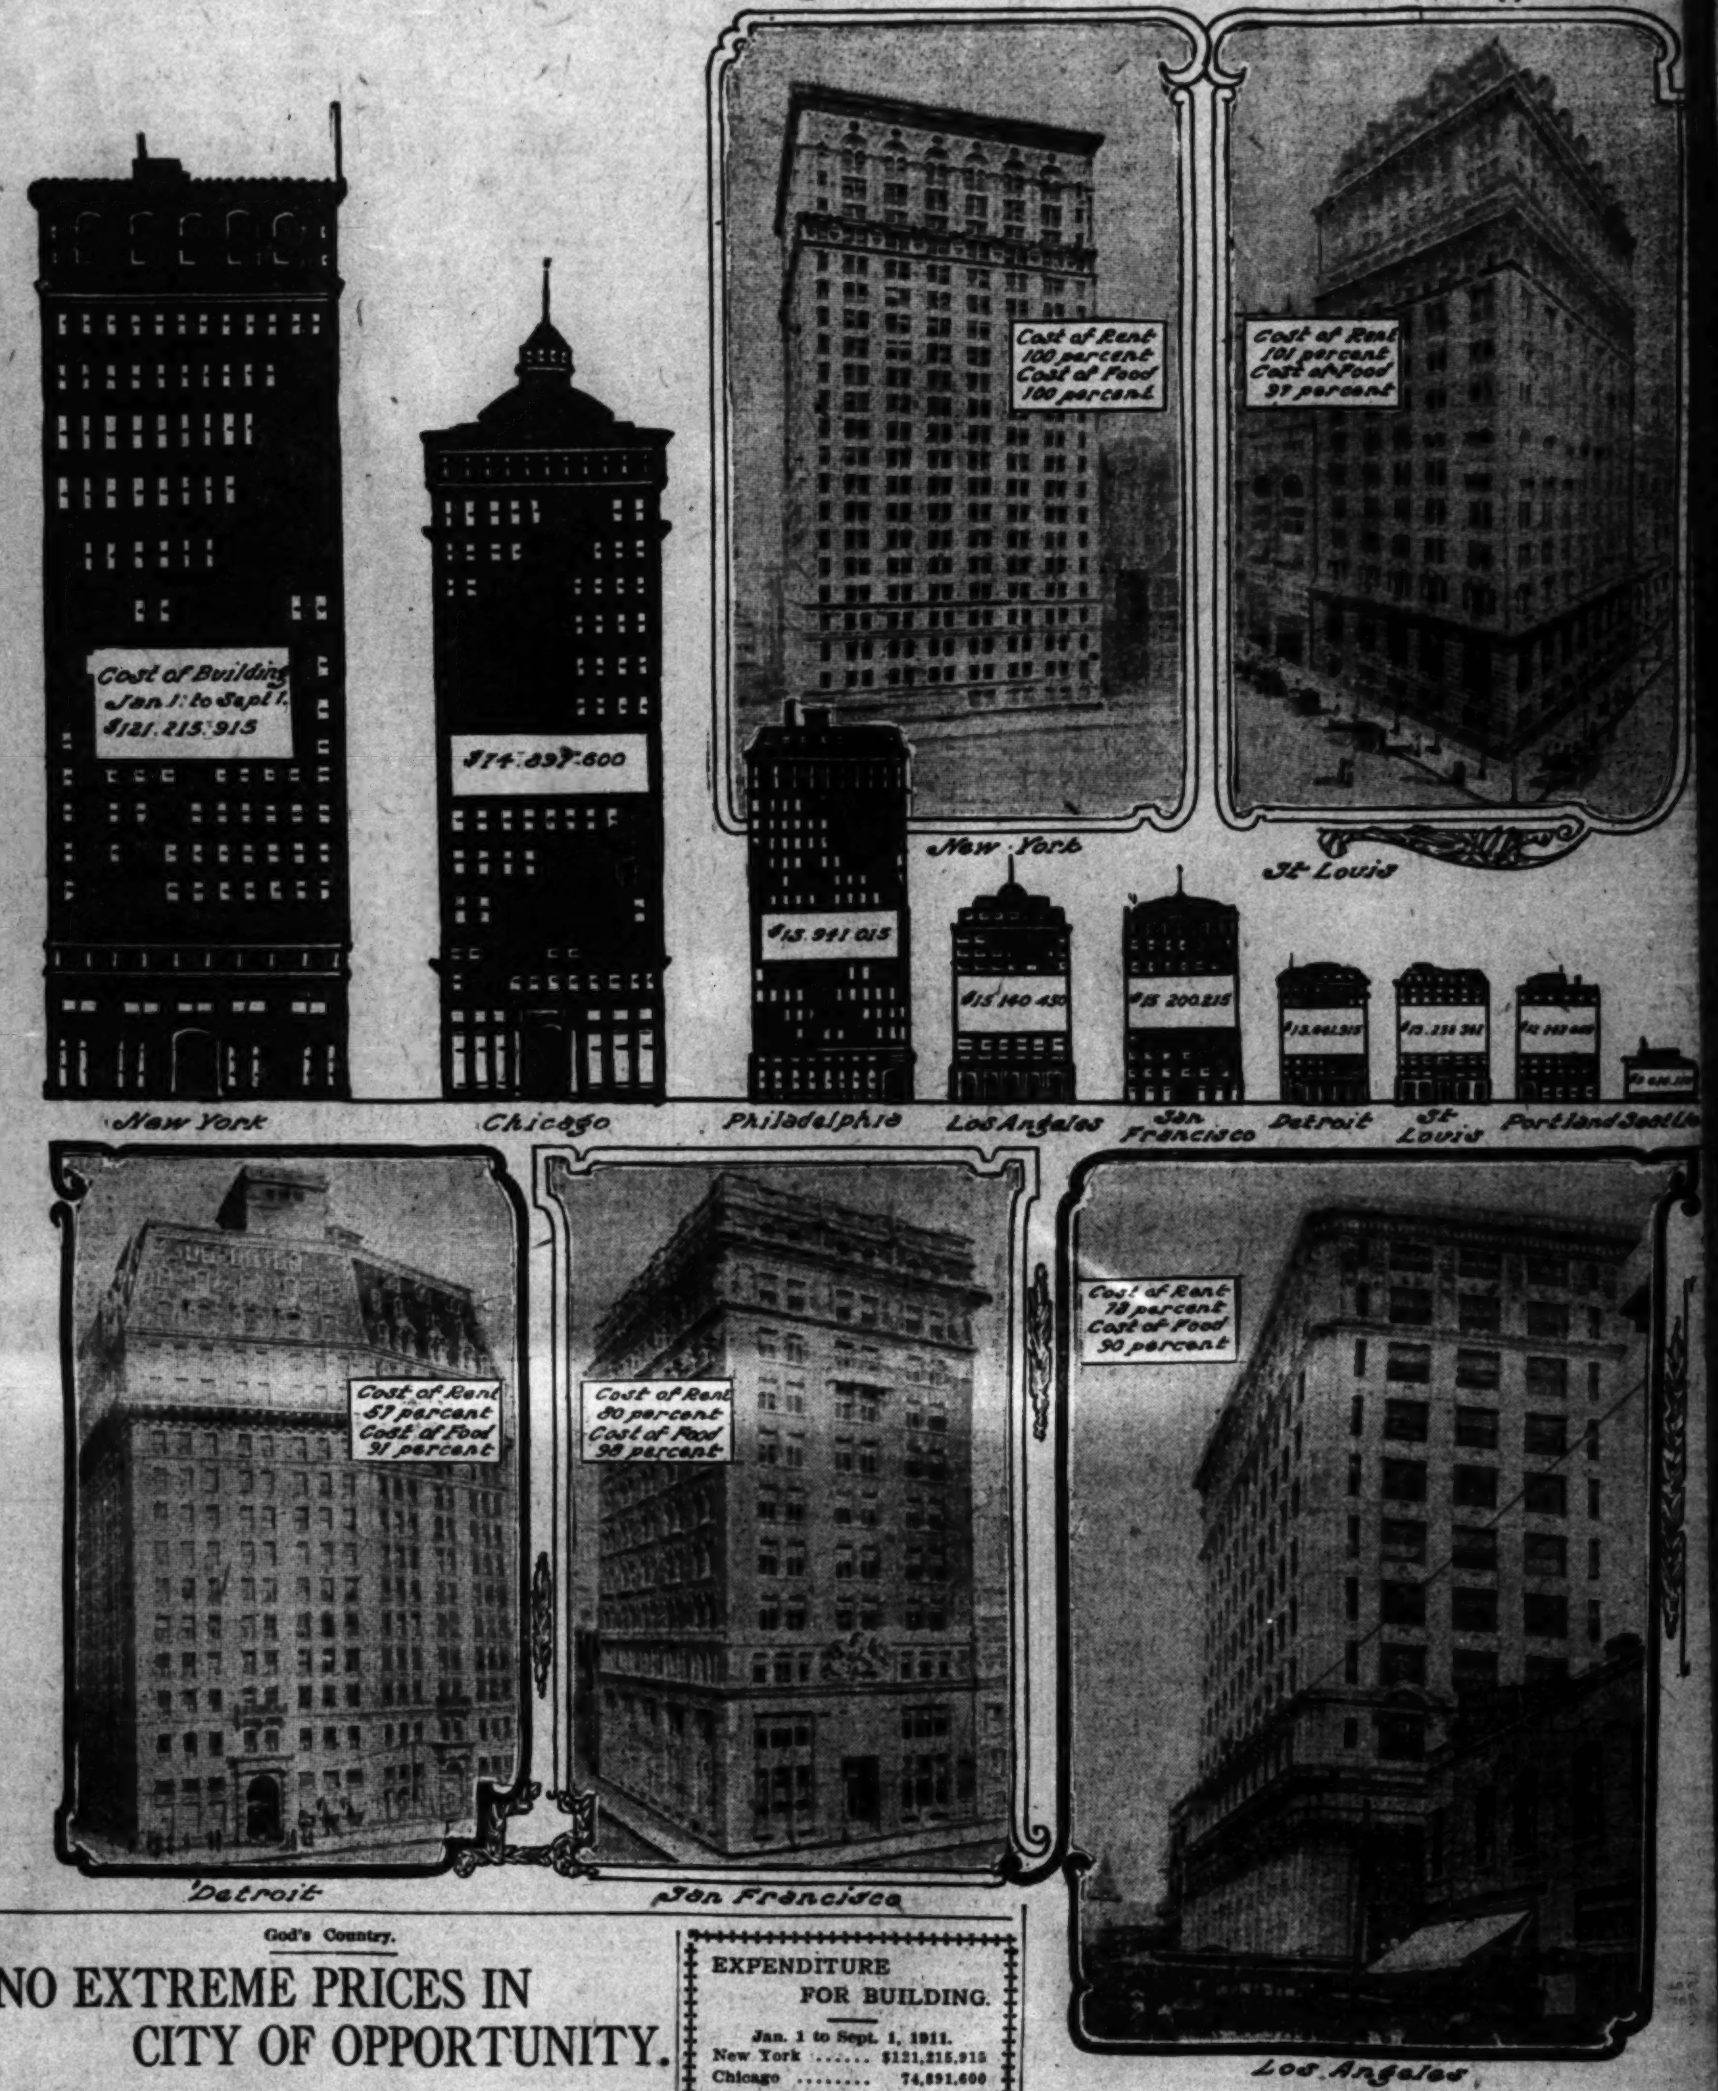
Cost of Living in Los Angeles Compared With That of Other Large Cities



Statistics That Talk.

Graphic presentation of fact that it costs less to live in hustling, progressive Los Angeles, with all its present activity and future promise, than in eastern cities that are steeped in calm.

God's Country.

NO EXTREME PRICES IN CITY OF OPPORTUNITY.

Los Angeles, With Biggest Population Advance, the Greatest Building Activity, Most Amazing Past and Most Promising Future, One of Cheapest of American Cities for Average Man to Live In.

THAT cynic who observed that "there are three kinds of lies, lies, damn lies and statistics," evidently must have lived in a town that was hard hit by some all-revealing tabulation of facts and figures. Statistics, intelligently prepared and interpreted, are a most illuminating basis for comparison and estimation. Cold, hard figures, such as those so carefully and laboriously compiled by the government census are invaluable in checking up the actualities of progress.

Statistics, formerly ignored by all but the student and the profound man of science or business, have in the past few years begun to have a real grasp upon the popular understanding. Crop reports couched in terms of millions of bushels or hundreds of thousands of bales are now-a-days devoured by the farmer as well as by the broker at his ticker. Census reports, building statistics and figures of shipping movements are no longer the enigma of higher mathematics to the popular mind.

This growing interest of the American people in the facts of every-day existence is one of the surest indications of the inate practicality of the average individual on this continent and augurs much for the prosperity of the future. The public doesn't believe everything it is told these days, but in the language of the street demands to see the "dope" that was formerly handed out, fixed to order, by the "dopesters."

FACTS THAT IMPRESS.

A careful study of comparative dweller in this city, and especially any man who has invested in real estate hereabouts, that this is the best place in the world for him. Here are some of the big facts about Los Angeles that are revealed by statistics and which command attention:

First—Los Angeles is growing in population faster than any other large city on the American continent. The census figures are familiar to all. Still more eloquent census statistics are in the making at this time.

Second—Los Angeles is erecting more buildings and putting more money into construction than any other city of anything near its size in this country. This is an easily ascertainable fact. The climate of this section is a drawing card which adds yearly a great host to the population of the city, a host which must be housed, which must be fed and which must be supplied with manufactured products.

Third—Los Angeles is spending more money in great public improvements in onticipation of future necessities than any other city of its size in America. In terms of millions of dollars the statistics of this kind of development have been published so often that any school child can rattle them off from memory. The results logically to be expected from the expenditures for the harbor, the aqueduct, the good roads system, the facilities for power distribution, the municipal railway and for other great improvements paid for out of public funds are not to be calculated in mere figures. The impetus to be given the city by the opening of the Panama canal can not be expressed mathematically.

ties than any other city of any size in any country on the globe. With an assessed actual wealth that is a source of amazement to statisticians everywhere, Los Angeles can boast resources incalculable. The one thing more astonishing than the reports of the agricultural development of the present in the back-country tributary to this city is the accurate statement of just how small a percentage of the Southland has actually felt the scratch of the plow. Amazement at the annual $100,000,000 total of manufactured products is lost in the contemplation of the statistics of products shipped in and in the realization that all of these ought to be manufactured here and can and probably will be manufactured here in the days to come.

NO PENALTY ATTACHED.

One might suppose that the man living in the midst of such possibilities and opportunities as prevail here would have to pay some kind of a wealth must often pay the penalty of risking their all on a mere gamble. Food and drink and wearing apparel and all that go to make up the necessities of life under ordinary conditions are in such boom places to be had only at prices that soon put an ineradicable kink in the pocketbook.

The idea that Los Angeles is a boom town has not been entirely extinguished in the minds of many easterners who have not been here to investigate for themselves. "The cost of living must be something fierce in Los Angeles," is an expression commonly heard in the East.

No more erroneous idea could possibly exist. Living is high enough everywhere so far as that goes, but living, in the fullest, broadest sense of that term, is not high in Los Angeles as compared with other cities. Living, on a strictly food and rental basis, is absolutely cheap in comparison with that in many eastern cities.

Appended is a tabulation based on careful study and comparison and on such statistics as are available, showing the cost of living in several of the leading American cities. The whole is computed with New York City as the basis of comparison and by representing the cost both of rent and food in the metropolis at 100 per cent.

LIVING AND EXISTING.

The rental situation in Los Angeles is a peculiar one, owing to the climatic conditions and the preference of the inhabitants here to live in detached houses. In other big cities even in San Francisco, the detached house set in a green lawn is almost unknown excepting in suburbs far remote from the business center. Here, a great majority of the population wants to live in the old-fashioned possible here and will be possible here even when the city has attained to a higher population, owing to the expansion policy of the various electric railway systems and to the fact that Los Angeles has all out of doors to expand in. Nowhere else in the country are there so many people who are paying for their own homes or who own them outright. This condition, even in the face of the fact that over 500 new houses are started here every month, tends to reduce the supply of detached houses for rent and hence

ASSISTING AT THE KING BUSINESS, NEW OCCUPATION FOR YANKEES.

Americans Who Are Helping to Rule in China, Turkey in Japan, India and Siam---Some Who Hold High Titles in Europe and Latin America.

[SPECIAL CORRESPONDENCE OF THE TIMES.]

WASHINGTON (D. C.) Sept. 17.—Assisting at the king business—sitting alongside the throne and lending a helping hand to the support of the scepter, or occasionally straightening the crown when it has tilted catybias—seems to be a growing occupation for Yankees hankering for life at foreign courts, and near unto the purple.

Here is young William Morgan Shuster making great splashes in printer's ink as the new Treasurer-General of Persia and general housecleaner of the ancient kingdom of the Shah, who, after outwitting the jealous Russian and Belgian representatives at the court of Teheran, is slated to be the organizer of the Persian monarch's war against his iron foe, the ex-Shah.

I remember this prodigy very well in his student days, although he was a class below me at the Central High School, here in the capital city. He was a serious chap, known as a "fiend" for study, who was reputed to made "ten in everything" and to have "phenom." The military experience, which he is now reputed to be putting into use against the ex-Shah, was gained during those four years in the school's cadet corps, of which he rose to be colonel, the highest rank attainable. The next I heard of him he was studying at old Columbian College by day and at the law school by night. Then when the Spanish War broke out he was a stenographer in the War Department, but was soon to enter the customs service, first in Cuba and next at Manila, where he came to rule as collector, a Presidential appointment, when he was but 24.

When Luke E. Wright resigned as Philippine Commissioner, and Shuster was appointed in his stead, at a salary of $15,000 a year, the latter was still in his twenties. And here he is, at the age of 34, sitting up against the ancient throne of Cyrus and Darius, giving their successor, Ahmed Mirza, some needed pointers anent the Shah trade.

MAHARAJA'S YOUTHFUL ADVISER

Just such another precocious lad was Ralph W. Whitenack, the present boy adviser of the Maharaja of Baroda, which gorgeous potentate of India visited us in 1906 in search of a progressive American qualified to help reorganize his kingdom and teach his people the higher civilization.

While yet in New York, the Maharaja dropped into the American Museum of Natural History, there met Prof. Bumpus, and promptly confided to that learned gentleman his special need. Yes, to be sure, the professor knew the right man for the place, and thus was young Whitenack boosted to the lofty station alongside of the bejeweled throne of Baroda.

This boy adviser hailed from Wilmington, Del., and had worked his way through Brown University, at Providence, by doing odd jobs at typewriting outside of study and recreation hours. The very June preceding the Maharaja's tour of America the indefatigable lad had won his sheepskin at Brown, along with a working fellowship in political and social science at the University of Wisconsin.

He had written masterly monographs on social problems, but was a mere boy—still in the gray dawn of his twenties.

The Prince of India sent for the youth, looked him over and thrust at him a salary offer that knocked the wind out of him. And Whitenack of Brown '06 lit right out for the other side of the world, to ancient Baroda, where he found awaiting him a rambling and capacious bungalow of brick situated opposite the palace gate and stocked with a full corps of servants to call him "sahib"—chef, cook, butler, chamberboy, coachman. He also has his secretary and tutor in "Gugari," the native dialect.

"WHITENACK SAHIB."

Whitenack Sahib, while lounging upon his broad verandas, gazes across a wide park of greensward, dotted with spreading palms, his tennis court, his stables and the quarters of his servants. Directly across the road is the palace, where thrice weekly he breakfasts with the Mahajara, at whose side he is often seen riding in the royal park. His gravest troubles are caused by raids of voracious monkeys upon his verandas and tearoom.

In his work of setting the Maharaja's kingdom to rights, he started in by organizing savings banks. Next he introduced modern cotton-weaving mills, cotton oil plants, dairy farms, sewer systems and water supplies.

courses and band concerts in the parks. And the very latest news from Baroda is that he is helping the Maharaja to uproot the native custom of secluding women, in which crusade they have the co-operation of the Maharene, who traveled with her royal husband when he visited this country.

MADE HIM A MANDARIN.

Further over—in far Cathay—there is another of these American chaps at work, injecting Yankee business spirit into an oriental body politic. This is Edward Bangs Drew, a Harvard graduate, who went over to China and became commander of the maritime customs service, a high office, which he now holds, with headquarters in Shanghai. Besides decorating him with the double dragon, the late Emperor made him a mandarin, entitled to wear a red button in his cap.

A generation ago there was sailing the Great Lakes as a cabin boy a lad of fourteen, who couldn't be kept at home because the itch for scouring the seas was a disease of his blood. Later he commanded both steam and sailing merchantmen on the Atlantic and Pacific, and became superintendent of Cramps' shipyard, in Philadelphia, whence he took the ill-fated battleship Maine on her trial run.

This tried mariner, Ransford D. Bucknam, was next selected to deliver to Sultan Abdul Hamid the cruiser Medjidia, which that monarch had ordered from the Cramps after our spanking of the dons had impressed the world that American-built warships were some pumpkins.

The story is that Bucknam on heading the Turkish cruiser into the Golden Horn noted by the calendar that the day was the glorious Fourth and decided to celebrate it in the old-fashioned "unsafe and insane" American style. Undaunted by the fact that the minarets of Constantinople lay right before him and the banner of the star and crescent fluttered in his eyes—also unmindful of the fact that the "sick man of Europe" hated salutes of all kinds and had strictly forbidden them within the imperial hearing—Capt. "Rance" had the crew of the Medjidia fire from her great guns a Fourth of July broadside that made the imperial bric-a-brac rattle throughout the Yildiz Kiosk and caused several ladies of the harem to faint from fear that their master had been blown to smithereens.

IS NOW A "PASHA."

That others besides fools go in and win where angels fear to tread history has shown over and over again. Threats of dire punishment for Capt. "Rance" had no sooner passed from Sultan Abdul's lips than that monarch became overwhelmed with curiosity to see this bold Yankee mariner, who was not afraid of him. And when Bucknam was given an audience with the sultan he so tickled Abdul's ear with yarns of the sea and far-off lands that the Ottoman ruler gave him a flattering invitation to remain in Constantinople as a high official of the sublime porte.

He was made naval adviser and personal aid-de-camp to the Sultan, and while putting the Ottoman navy arch from assassination. So Abdul, as an act of gratitude, conferred upon him the title of pasha, the highest in the imperial gift. And under the regime of the new Sultan, Bucknam pasha has been retained as vice-admiral of the Turkish fleet.

MIKADO'S YANKEE ASSISTANT.

The Mikado, too, has his Yankee adviser, Henry Willard Denison, a Vermonter, who in Grant's administration, was accredited to Yokohama as our Consul, and whose knowledge of international law so impressed the Mikado's awakening court, that in 1880 that imperial monarch persuaded the young man to accept the commission of legal adviser to the Ministry of Foreign Affairs at Tokio, and in the thirty-one years that have since transpired Denison has made a great name for himself at the Japanese court. He is one of the Mikado's representatives on the permanent court of arbitration at The Hague, and was the adviser of the Japanese commissioners, who in this country drew up the treaty of Portsmouth, ending the Russo-Japanese War. And as a reward for his many services the Mikado has decorated him with the grand cordons of the Orders of the Rising Sun and Sacred Treasure, besides awarding him lately an annuity for life and a special gift of $10,000 as a token of gratitude for helping to end the war with the Czar. This shrewd and circumspect adviser of the mikado attended Columbian Law School, in Washington with Durham White Stevens, and the two went to Japan at about the same time—Stevens as our Secretary of Legion. And while Denison was making his mark as legal adviser in the Ministry of Foreign Affairs, Stevens—also taken into the Mikado's service—worked his way up to the rank of counselor of the Japanese legation at Washington, and finally to that of "diplomatic adviser," which rank he was enjoying when assassinated by a fanatical Korean several years ago.

SIAMESE KING'S ADVISER.

At the same time that Stevens was at the height of his power in Japan, Edward Henry Strobel—an honor man of Harvard, who had served his country as secretary of legation at Madrid and Minister to Chile—was distinguishing himself at the Court of Bangkok, as general adviser to the King of Siam. He had just succeeded in ending the Siamese-French crisis, in abolishing State-regulated gambling, in revising the harbor laws and in initiating many other reforms for the Siamese King when his life was lately cut short by the bite of an Egyptian insect.

But it is not only in oriental countries that Americans are assisting at statecraft in one way or another.

Petted by European rulers, who have pinned upon his bosom a dozen glistening orders, that quondam Bostonian, Reginald Henshaw Ward, member of the London banking-house of that name, now holds the rank of "councilor" of the Nicaraguan Legation at Lisbon, although his home is in England, where he is down on the books as "Lord of the Manor of North Scarle, Lincolnshire." In European courts he is addressed as "count," a pontificial title of nobility which he holds by hereditary patent from Pope Leo XIII. And there is also James Gustavus Whiteley of Baltimore, who some years ago joined the Belgian Consular service, in which he has been elevated to the highest rank of Consul-General. King Leopold, before he died, made Whiteley a "Knight of the Royal Order of the Crown of Belgium."

BOWSER'S BANE.

His Mother-in-Law Won't Let Him.

BY M. QUAD.

When Mr. Bowser, as a young man, was courting my daughter, I says to her, says I:

"Sarah, that young man is bossy. He's eccentric. He's going to make a husband to try the patience of the best wife on earth. I hope you are not in love with him."

"But I am, mother," says Sarah.

"But I hope you won't marry him."

"He's asked me, and I shall."

When Mr. Bowser came to me to ask my consent I laid down the law to him. I told him who would have to knuckle under if it came to a struggle, and he called me a dear old lady and said he'd be only too glad to take orders from me. I haven't bossed him so very much, but I've made it a point to drop in on his house every few weeks and see that he wasn't getting too chesty. I walked in unexpectedly the other day to be received by Sarah, while Mr. Bowser was still upstairs. Without his dreaming of my presence, he called to her from the upper hall: "Sarah, if you have thrown my socks out of the window why don't you come up and throw the rest of my clothes after them?"

No attention was paid to his remarks, and after thumping around for two or three minutes he called again:

"Woman, you have been selling my collars and cuffs to a tramp again! I've hunted for half an hour and can't find them."

He expected Mrs. Bowser to come rushing upstairs and find his things, and she had started to do so when I told her to sit down right where she was and let him whoop and be hanged to him. It wasn't long before he was yelling again:

"Do you hear me down there, or have I got to yell the roof off? Is this a house or a wigwam? I've finally found a collar, but it's forty rods too long for me, and I want to know what in blazes is the matter!"

Sarah would have answered, but I hushed her and for the next ten minutes we heard nothing more. Then Mr. Bowser came down with a tread that shook the whole house. As he reached the sitting-room he exploded with:

"Woman, I've called to you 9000 times and got no answer! By the great horn spoon, but—!"

"That's enough of that Mr. Bowser," I said as I pointed my finger at him.

"Oh, it's you—you—!" he gasped as he recognized me.

"Yes, Samuel, and now you cuddle down. There's no one in this house going to break their neck for you. If you can't find your things go without!"

He flushed red and white and then sat down with a great jar and looked around with a sneer on his face and said:

"I hadn't been notified that you were coming on a visit."

"You don't have to be," I replied. "I come and go when I please."

"Perhaps you imagine you run this house as well as your own?"

"I don't imagine anything about it. I have arrived to stay as long as suits me, and you want to quit prancing around or I'll attend to your case. You may bulldoze your wife, Samuel, but you can't me! No one asked me to come, but in looking over my diary I saw that it was about time for you to break loose again, and so I put on my hat and started. You were hollering about a collar. What's the matter with it?"

"Mrs. Bowser tied knots in it to spite me."

"Nonsense! You talk like a kid four years old. The trouble is that you got up, just as you have a dozen times before, and put on your day shirt over your nightshirt, and of course everything is hunched up, around your shoulders."

"I couldn't have done it," he replied.

"But you did. You can dress yourself that way if you want to, but don't raise a row over it. Don't sit there and glare at Sarah like a tiger does at a lamb. If you feel that you must glare and look like a pirate, try it on me."

"I had him pretty well in hand within the next ten minutes. He went back upstairs and got into an old suit of clothes without uttering a yell. When he came down and went hunting about, I asked what he was after.

"I'm going to paint the front steps today," he replied.

"You are not going to do anything of the kind. I'm not going to have the muss around while I am here."

He sat down and read the newspaper for awhile, and then I saw him sneaking down cellar.

"What are you going down there for?"

"To fix the gas meter."

"You stay right here! You know as much about gas meters as I do about angels' harps. I don't propose to be blown up on the first day of my arrival. You let that meter alone or I'll do some talking to you!"

Mr. Bowser uttered a "Humph!" and went out into the back yard and sat down in the shade. By and by I saw a man open the alley gate and beckon to him, and I also caught sight of a cow in the alley, and sauntered out. I reached Mr. Bowser just as he was saying to the man:

"Well, if you will guarantee her to give twelve quarts of milk per day I'll take her at that price."

"Samuel, what little trick are you up to now?" I asked.

"I'm buying a cow," he answered as he wheeled on me defiantly.

"Oh, no, you're not. You just think you are. Is this one-horned, bob-tailed, slab-sided creature called a cow? How much milk is it she gives per day—twelve drops? Has your wife asked you to buy a cow? Have I said a cow would be a good investment? Mr. Bowser, we will go into the house, and this man can drive his menagerie on to the next town!"

Mr. Bowser hung back a little, but the true mother-in-law has a little way with her. We had scarcely got into the house when the dear man proposed to his wife a ten-mile ride on the trolley car to look for huckleberries. When I vetoed that he wanted to remove the old paper from a bedroom and put on fresh. He was after the step-ladder when I stopped that.

Half an hour later I found him in the kitchen, preparing to make ginger ale, and I almost had to take him by the ear and lead him out.

An hour after that he got to the alley gate without my seeing him and had about closed a bargain for a peacock and seven hens, when I butted in. When I got him into the house again he wanted to tune the piano, and when I broke him off he discovered that all the bells in the house needed fixing. We had some little argument about that, but, of course, I prevailed.

Shortly after dinner he dodged me and got out on the street to see a man about a flying machine, but I struck his trail and ran him down, and from that time until he went to bed I had him under my eye.

I don't think Mr. Bowser liked it at all, but when you have a son-in-law what are you going to do about it? Is he to have his own way and make a failure of things, or is the mother-in-law to step in and make the home a paradise and a joy forever?

VAN NUYS—SCENE OF GREATEST ACTIVITY

"The Acreage of Today is the Town Lots of Tomorrow"

Why You Should Buy Van Nuys Lots and Van Nuys-Lankershim Acreage

Suppose that a friend, in whose reliability and judgment you had the fullest confidence, should come to you and say:

"If you wish to make money or build a nice suburban home, I know the ideal place.

"It's only 4½ miles from the city limits of Los Angeles, in the center of one of the most beautiful and most fertile valleys in Southern California. It contains many thousand acres—nearly 50,000—which are now being split up into small holdings and rapidly settling up.

"It has a new city, which though only six months old, would be a great credit to a growing six-year-old community. The city is the metropolis of the entire tract; is connected with the good roads of Los Angeles by a splendid $500,000 boulevard. The Southern Pacific Railroad runs through it; the rails of a double track electric railroad are being laid to it at the rate of over a mile a day.

"This new city already has a drug store, grocery, livery stable, barber shop, butcher shop, shoe store, dry goods store, hardware, furniture store, postoffice, two restaurants, rooming house and two lumber companies and a good school with over fifty pupils enrolled. Also, a good bank building and a newspaper building, now being erected, with many more planned for immediate construction.

"The lots are large, suitable for re-subdividing into city lots later. The surrounding acreage is selling rapidly for suburban estates and small farms. There is abundant water supply."

the entire agricultural, mineral and timber land is capable of supporting a population of 25,000,000, and in this connection he flayed unmercifully the unwise policy of ultra-conservatism that has been adopted. He resented the imputations that had been cast upon the pioneers who had discovered and had attempted to develop the coal lands and scathingly rebuked the special agents of the government who had so wantonly traduced those men.

"The real trouble," he said, "lies not in Alaska, but in the office of the Pocahontas coal trust. The real reason why the Alaska coal fields have not been opened up is because the Pocahontas coal trust is gouging from this government every year sufficient money to build a new battleship. And to our undying shame and discredit be it said this coal is hauled from the Atlantic to the Pacific in foreign ships.

"Could anything have been more degrading to anyone who knew the real facts than the spectacle of the great fleet of the United States warships making its tour around the world while the vessels that carried the food for the sailors and the coal for the warships were those owned by foreign countries? How all Europe must have laughed in its sleeve!

CITY OF OPPORTUNITY.

compared with those in a few middle western cities.

The comparison, however, is not apt, even under the conditions, for in the middle western city, the renter is a long distance from his place of business, while here he may be but fifteen minutes out. Rents far out in Los Angeles, when, indeed, any house so situated is available for rent, are as cheap as they are anywhere. The fact is that the easterner who wants to live in a detached house thinks nothing of an hour's ride in the morning and evening.

The citizen of Los Angeles will be paying for his own home nine times out of ten, on installments that are no greater than the monthly outlay for rent of the inhabitant of the eastern or middle western city. It is for the most part only the temporary resident who is paying rent on a detached house in this city and short-term leases are always higher.

Apartment-house, hotel and rooming-house rentals here average about the same as those prevailing in San Francisco and are only about 80 per cent. as high as those charged in New York. The Los Angeles figure, everything considered, could probably more correctly be placed at 78 per cent. for living rentals in general, owing to the greater number of detached houses for rent within the city limits here.

The real difference between living in a rented bungalow in Los Angeles and existing in a closed-in flat or apartment in the average eastern city is not to be calculated in dollars and cents or percentages. The difference in the manner of living of the poor or only moderately well circumstanced family here and of the slum dweller in New York is appalling. Many an unfortunate family on the lower East Side of Manhattan is paying out in rents what the Los Angeles laborer is laying by as payments upon a pretty cottage of his own in a clean and beautiful section and on a car line.

FOOD COST LEAST.

The year-around cost of food in Los Angeles, quality and kind considered, is probably the lowest in any American city of large size. A careful study of market statistics from various cities would serve to place it at 90 per cent. of that prevailing in New York City.

The all-year-around availability of fruits and vegetables, fresh from the grove and the truck patch is the first thing that counts in favor of Los Angeles. The dweller in the eastern city must scheme and plan and change his diet with the season to keep within the cost limit he can afford to pay for foodstuffs. Here the market is comparatively steady and such scheming is unnecessary.

Fresh meats are cheaper here than in New York, which must depend entirely upon the Chicago packer. This condition prevails throughout the year. Flour is higher in Los Angeles than in many other cities, as are also eggs, cheese, lard and certain canned products. Staples average about the same most of the time. Potatoes are high here. Butter averages about the same as in New York.

With meat cheaper than on the Atlantic Coast, however, and with fresh vegetables available the year around, the question of food cost may easily be settled to the advantage of Los Angeles. It is at least 10 per cent. cheaper here than in New York and fully 8 per cent. cheaper than in San Francisco. Food costs a little less here even than in Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Detroit and Minneapolis, cities in the Middle West's great grain belt. The high cost of living fallacy as applied to Los Angeles should be exploded to stay exploded.

To make its stockholders' investment perfectly secure, as well as generously profitable, is "Home Builders" constant aim. The management is just as careful in the conduct of this big business as you are in your own affairs.

The stockholders' money is invested in deeds and mortgages on approved properties, none of it goes into speculation. "Home Builders" builds houses on contract, not on prospect of sale. Its security is fixed, as well as profits known, before it invests a dollar.

Stockholders who have been in the company 42 months have received in cash dividends more than half of their original investment, besides these cash distributions, it has laid away a surplus of more than $200,000.00.

These are some of the reasons why its shares have advanced from $1.00 (par) to present price of $2.25, and why they continue to advance.

HOW I EARNED MY FIRST DOLLAR.

BY J. A. GRAVES.

When I was a boy, living with my parents on a ranch above Marysville, in Yuba county, in this State, a neighbor of ours had an exceedingly heavy crop of fruit. It was in fact so heavy that he was put to great straits to save it. He employed me to assist him. One of my duties was to check up weights of fruit hauled off by a man with several teams, whom he had employed for that purpose. When I gave this freighter his voucher at the end of the first day for the money earned by him, he rebated me in coin $1, which I promptly deposited in the pocket of my jeans. Being a devout and constant Sunday-school scholar, the recollection of this illegal gain grieved me for years. After I became an orange grower, and found how legitimate the pious fruit shippers, then engaged in that business here, regarded a thing of this kind, I became reconciled to my offense. Thus we see how time and example heal all wounds.

BREWERS SELL SITE.

R. A. Rowan Co. have sold for the Maier Brewing Company, et al. to Charles F. Hunt, of San Francisco, four lots of the Wilhardt tract, having a frontage of 100 feet on San Fernando street and running through for 260 feet to Naud street. The consideration is reported at $11,000 cash.

IVYWILD TRACT OPENED.

A tract of 113 acres, two miles west of the city and at the junction of the Venice Short Line, the Playa Del Rey line, and the Santa Monica Air Line has been subdivided and is now on sale. It is located on a gentle slope toward the city, with a fine view of the mountains to the northwest. National boulevard cuts the property in two, while Washington boulevard passes just to the south of it. The contracts for improvements have been let, and the work of laying water mains, constructing cement side walks and curbs, and grading and oiling the streets is to be begun this week. The construction of a cement station and several bungalows will, it is reported, be under way within a few days. The new tract is to be known as Ivywild, and the general agents, Reed & Chipley, have opened up offices in the Consolidated Realty building.

THE M'CARTHY TRACTS.

Among the beautiful homes recently completed in the Wilshire district, are two just finished by the McCarthy company on Van Ness avenue and Westminster avenue near Fifth street, in its Van Ness avenue square. These houses are built artistically on the Swiss chalet style, and contain eight large rooms each. Following are the sales reported by the McCarthy company during the past week in its various tracts: To Oscar Samuelson, lot in Florence Avenue Heights tract, $700; To Mrs. Julia A. Early, lot in Fruit Acres tract, $900; To Thomas A. Knight, of Bakersfield, lot in Greater Los Angeles tract with bungalow; To William H. Vedder, lot in Main street villa tract.

PASSES HALF-CENTURY.

L. E. Shepherd, president of the Southwest Land Company, owners of New Vermont Square, was given the surprise of his life upon the occasion of his fiftieth birthday anniversary. He was requested to attend a meeting of the finance committee of the board of directors to take up an important matter, the subject in hand proving, however, to be an elegant silverheaded monogramed cane which was transferred to Mr. Shepherd. At this juncture the wives of the members present appeared and the meeting was adjourned to the Alexandria Hotel where dinner was served followed by a theater party, with Mr. and Mrs. Shepherd as guests of honor.

FINE BUILDING PLANNED.

Richard L. Phister has purchased from the Title Insurance and Trust Company, for $12,500, a lot on the west side of Bixel street between Seventh and Eighth, 50x101 feet in size. Mr. Phister will immediately erect a four-story brick apartment house on the property, which he has rented in advance for a term of ten years. The sale was made through the agency of R. A. Rowan & Co.

A locator of oil lands is obliged to expend at least $100 each year in development work. He has until the 31st of December of the year following his location to make this expenditure. Until the 31st of December the land is not subject to relocation, for it is not "unoccupied mineral land." Any person entering upon the claim and attempting to locate it is a mere trespasser and acquires no rights whatever. If prior to December 31 the original locator is by the jumper or the jumper's grantee, or lessee or any person acting by, under or through him, excluded from the land, the original locator is then excused, as against the trespasser from doing the work, and he may at any time within five years institute and maintain an action for recovery of possession.

It would be well for the original locator who is prevented by the jumper from doing assessment work to begin suit before December 31 to recover possession and file a lis pendens. This would cut off the jumper from abandoning the claim to some second jumper who could not be shown to be in privity with him.

With respect to oil lands or quartz claims, or placer claims or timber lands or coal lands, or farms lands, that have, either legally or illegally, been withdrawn from location and entry by an executive order, for the benefit of our grandchildren, or of Pinchot, or of the Pocahontas Coal Company, it would be well for the prospector to let them severely alone. The citizen, however righteous his cause, who engages in litigation with the United States, may be a very young man when he starts it, but he will be a very old man when he emerges, and he will know as much about demurrers, and motions to strike out and continuances as any lawyer in the land. Many and many a time he will prepare for trial and be present with his witnesses to be informed that the third assistant deputy special counsel whom the Department of Justice has delegated to try the case is taking his summer vacation at Newport, or his winter vacation in Florida, or is unavoidably detained by the illness of his mother-in-law or is engaged in the trial of another case somewhere or other, or is not feeling very well himself. Of course, the court could not under such circumstances force the unfortunate United States to trial, and the case goes over for a year and the plaintiff takes himself out of the room muttering to himself the words for which Edward Everett Hale's man without a country was condemned to a perpetual home on the rolling deep.

We are reminded by this incident of the old maxim that whom the gods would destroy they first make mad. Labor unionism has indeed an assured basis, not only in moral logic, but in the essential circumstances of modern industry. Modern enterprise calls for the incorporation of capital; incorporation of capital calls in turn, and imperatively, for incorporation of labor. Without incorporation labor can not hope to hold its own against incorporated capital. But while labor is under the necessity of enforcing its just dues by incorporation, it gains no new or special rights by incorporation. Labor assumes the character of a highwayman the moment it insists under the powers of incorporation upon things which do not belong to it in moral right. These are simple, even self-evident, principles. It would seem that nobody should be so dull or so selfish as not to recognize and concede them. But organized labor—under selfish and vicious leadership—does not recognize and does not concede that there are limitations upon its powers. And it is because it seeks, as in the demands of the shopmen's federation, under the powers of corporate action, to get more than its rights, that it destroys its respect and standing with reasonable men. Here in San Francisco, for example, we find organized labor standing not for the legitimate and proportionate interest of the working man, but rather for the selfish interest of a particular group against other workingmen, at the same time reaching out for privileges inconsistent with common equity—with the rights due to others in moral logic and common sense.

In the later development of organized labor there is something akin to the madness which invites destruction. Society cannot concede to organized workmen a disproportionate share of the products of industry. It cannot concede a disproportionate authority in affairs, nor the privilege of nullifying laws made in equity for all. It cannot consent that other elements in society shall knock under to one element and surrender to it things which belong in equity and in due proportion to all. It surely will not, while reason and justice survive, subordinate intelligence to selfishness and the spirit of aggression, however fortified in organization or however aggressively marshaled. There is that in the nature of men, especially of men bred in the precepts of liberty, which must inevitably rise in resentment against proposals repugnant to the spirit of reason and the plain dictates of common justice.

We say that aggressive unionism has touched its high-water mark in the demands of the shopmen's federation, because these demands go beyond the limits of justice—because they illustrate illegitimate pretensions and stamp the whole scheme as inequitable, dishonorable, destructive. On a large plan and with unmistakable emphasis they represent unionism as insisting upon more than it has the right to ask for, as attempting with the weapon of organized might to gain more than is morally right. This attempt has been balked by the resistance of the men immediately in charge of the interests under assault; and we repeat that behind these agents there is the irresistible force of an overwhelming popular sentiment.

It is a notable fact in the history of social movements as in the history of individual men that practical breakdown usually follows moral deterioration. Whatever or whoever may be sustained by the forces of justice and consistency—whatever or whoever is morally worthy—finds the ground underfoot firm and the going tolerably easy. It is when equity is forgotten, when justice is thrown to the winds, when there is an attempt to substitute the force of might for the force of right, that strength is supplanted by weakness. Organized labor was strong when it stood for the demand of the workingman for a proportionate share in the products of community effort, for a proportionate authority in public affairs, for a proportionate respect and consideration among social forces. Public opinion sustained demands inspired by the common sense of justice. It was not until organized labor ceased to stand for the rights of men in due proportion that it lost the consideration essential to public respect and to the legitimacy of its powers. It has ceased to be a champion of rights. It no longer even pretends to base its demands upon reason and equity. It has cast aside every restraint of morality to become the agent of an insistent and remorseless selfishness. It has become an openly aggressive and conscionceless power, marching under a black flag, threatening destruction wherever there is not instant yielding to its summons of surrender and tribute. It has been morally debased, and it must die as it deserves to die.

And yet there remains the necessity for some scheme of incorporated labor, inspired by justice and supported by reason, to sustain the cause of workingmen against selfish and incorporated capital. Legitimately organized labor is one of the fixed hopes of society now and in the future. That there may arise such a form of incorporated labor is the wish of every man not blinded by self-interest or class-interest, by every man inspired by the hope of justice among men.

Brentwood Park house of John Albert Campbell.

CHICAGOAN WOULD LIVE.

Forsakes Existence in Windy City for Life in Southland—Is Building at Brentwood Park.

John Albert Campbell, formerly member of the Federal Construction Company in Chicago, has forsaken that city for the southland and is now building a home at Brentwood Park, along Santa Monica Canyon. Mr. Campbell purchased two large lots in this residence park through the Braly-Janss Investment Company. On one of these he has under construction an $8000 home which he will occupy as his residence. On the second lot he plans to build another sightly house for investment purposes.

The Campbell house is of the country home style of architecture. The front porch opens, at either end, to two terraces. On each side of the house are glass porches, one opening from a den and the other from the dining-room. Aside from these two rooms there are, on the lower floor, a living-room, bedroom, kitchen, servants' room and a screened porch. The upper floor has two bedrooms, bath and a rear balcony.

The Braly-Janss Investment Company now has offices in the Pacific Electric building in the offices recently vacated by the Janss Investment Company.

RESIDENCE LOTS NEAR AN INDUSTRIAL DISTRICT are always worth a premium on account of the location, but in this case they have not been raised. If you buy now you will be in line for the profits when the natural increase in values takes place.

THE LAW OF SUPPLY AND DEMAND governs realty values. The demand for desirable residence lots in El Segundo will always be strong. But the supply of good lots for sale grows less each day.

EL SEGUNDO HAS STANDARD OIL REFINERY. Cities with Standard Oil refineries have without exception enjoyed great development and proven fields for profitable investment.

REAL ESTATE BETTER THAN SAVINGS BANKS. It is always good policy to have a fund in the bank to provide for the "rainy day," but placing all of your money in a savings bank at a maximum interest of 4 per cent, will not produce as large returns as a profitable realty investment.

Have a Home of Your Own in El Segundo!

For small cost you can have a cozy home and garden on one of these low-priced lots. They are high and sightly and the soil is a fine sandy loam. Plenty of water will always be available, Why not get close to nature, where life is worth living, and have a little "estate" of your own? El Segundo offers you this chance. As Tom Fitch Says—

"Co-operation, Collectivism, Consolidation whether of Capital or Labor and Condensation of Forces Express the Tendencies of the Age."

Every Word Here Stated is True

You know that although you may not have stopped to think of it. Business is being concentrated, professions are being specialized, societies are forming strong centers, municipal and State governments are being individualized. Combinations of capital as well as labor are centralizing their ideas, are each grouped harmoniously, co-operatively and working out its own problems.

Co-Operation Rules the World Today

In Europe Co-operation is nothing new. There it has thrived and flourished to an extent almost unbelievable in all of the enlightened countries and has within a period of from 50 to 60 years, built up various lines of industries to proportions never dreamed of by the original organizers.

Rio Tagus has been developed pally by a long adit, and a 300- rift on the ledge. A shaft has sunk on the vein and is going r. The new shaft has ned a depth of 1,430 feet, and ing down at the rate of 120 feet month. The shaft has three partments, and has dimensions of by seventeen feet. It is going through a hard greenstone ation, at an average cost of 30 per foot. It is claimed that sinking of this shaft has set a record on the Mother Lode, both speed and low costs.

e ore is at present coming from 200, 300 and 400-foot levels, but in a short time lower levels will opened. The orebodies show an rage width of over twenty feet values understood to run around per ton. The ore is free-milling, sequently a high extraction is ieved without difficulty. New k people acquired the Lightner ut a year ago, since which time ensive improvements have been mpleted. The Lightner now ranks one of the leading producers on Mother Lode.

Utica's Water System.

The owners of the noted Utica nes, Angels Camp district, have mmenced the preliminary work on miles of new flumes from the servoirs to the main power system. proximately 3,500,000 feet of lum- r will be consumed in the work. In st years mines in this district have en badly handicapped in the dry ason by lack of water, and this stacle the Utica company is pre- ring to eliminate.

Developments at the mines are roceeding along broad lines. In the ross the shaft, including a 400-foot inze, has attained a depth of 1800 et. Operations are concentrated at e 11, 12 and 13 levels, with suffi- ent ore coming from these points keep sixty stamps in constant ac- on. This plant handles approxi- ately 350 tons per twenty-four ours. The Gold Cliff mine is also roducing steadily. At this property e shaft has a depth of 800 feet, hile a winze of equal depth has been nk. The ore bodies are showing cellent strength and no difficulty experienced in keeping the forty- amp mill in commission. About 35 tons are treated per day. The lphurets from both mines are ipped to the Selby smelter.

Work at Golden Dream.

The Los Angeles people interested the Golden Dream Company, op- rating on the Yuba River, are re- orted to be meeting with good suc- ess in their efforts to recover auriferous values from the river bed. Considerable work has been carried n during the past summer, and re- ults are said to be satisfactory. As the dry season advances opportunities for more effective recoveries in- rease, attendant upon the lowering of the water carried by the stream.

It is believed that the dam has been fficiently strengthened to enable perations to be conducted into the te fall months without particular ficulty. Last year work was great- hampered by the early high water, not being of sufficient magni- flood of water hurled against it. J. C. Littlefield is manager.

Developments at San Luis.

Arrangements have been perfected for the driving of a lower adit at the San Luis mine, located near Downieville. The crosscut is designed to intersect the pay-shoot at a depth of 200 feet and is expected to open considerable virgin territory. Work on the new avenue will commence as soon as arrangements permit. In the upper levels the vein continues to show excellently as work progresses.

Practically all of the machinery for the new mill is on the ground, and the management plans to commence crushing before the end of October. Sufficient quartz is blocked out to insure the operation of the mill for an extensive period, according to recent reports of the management. The San Luis is controlled by Los Angeles interests.

Compressor for Monte Cristo.

The owners of the Monte Cristo gravel mine, in the Downieville section, have placed orders for a compressor and machine drills. Buildings for the plant are being erected, and it is planned to have the drills in action within a few weeks. At present the channel is yielding $1000 per day with two shifts engaged in breasting. With the installation of power drills the production will be largely increased.

Siskiyou Syndicate Mines.

Another rich strike is reported from the Cub Bear mine, one of the Siskiyou Syndicate properties. The vein continues to run over three feet wide, with values showing excellent quality. Several pounds of exceptionally rich quartz have recently been extracted, while the entire vein reveals ore of high milling grade.

The syndicate has completed the new mill at the Keating mine, in the Coffee Creek district, and anticipates an active season. A considerable quantity of good ore is blocked out, with developments continuing extremely satisfactory. This property is located in Trinity county, in the noted Coffee Creek section, and has produced considerable rich ore in past years, although only operated along narrow lines.

TWO SHIFTS WORKING. COLE-GOODWIN PROPERTY.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

GLOBE (Ariz.) Sept. 22.—Two shifts are being worked on the well-known Cole-Goodwin copper mine in the Pinal Mountains, southwest of Globe. The property is locally considered one of the most promising in Arizona, with an outcrop more than a mile long and with good values for the entire distance. While there are many small openings, the deepest shaft is 420 feet deep, with a considerable amount of drifting, especially on the 300 level. The ore on the lower levels is generally a good grade of sulphide, especially valuable in the Globe smelter, which lately handled five tons sent over for a test, which averaged 12 per cent. copper. It is believed that the mine will yet be a valuable concentrating proposition, as the average grade of the ore body is not high.

While a new board of directors of the Warrior Development Company lately was chosen at an annual meeting of the corporation held in Globe, there seems to be no prospect that the company will take up its option on the Warrior property, from which there have been shipments for the past year of over 100 tons a day of 10 per cent. copper ore.

Five churn drills are being operated on the Live Oak property, the hoes passing into the mineralized zone at the average depth of 705 feet. Twenty tons of silicious copper ore are being shipped daily from the old Live Oak workings to the El Paso smelter.

CANANEA PROPERTY. WHAT IS BEING DONE.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

CANANEA (Sonora) Sept. 22.—The Cananea Consolidated Copper Company now is shipping a bit better than sixteen carloads of copper bullion a week, each car carrying a load of 100,000 pounds, all billed to refineries in New Jersey. The weekly value of the bullion thus shipped approximates $220,000. Not all the value is from the Cananea mines, a part being credited to the concentrates received from the Miami concentrator, near Globe. The Cananea plant now is considered complete, with eight blast furnaces, two reverberatories and ten roasters. The pay roll carries the names of 3500 men, mainly Mexicans. Labor costs have been reduced to a minimum, especially around the model smelter, where the ore and concentrates are handled almost automatically.

Renewed activity is noted at the famous old Pedrazinni mines, where about 25,000 tons of rich tailings are being worked over, with the average yield of fifteen ounces of silver to the ton. In the mine new development work has shown the presence of many high-grade, though small, bodies of silver. The company is receiving from ore shipments about $40,000 a month, and is expected to have an annual output of nearly $500,000.

The Tigre company, east of this point, had a production last month of $90,000. A new cyanide plant is recovering about $1000 a day from the working of tailings.

Corner-stone Models of 1909 and 1911,

number of 33,760 were paid per week $262,550, an average of $7.77 a week. But these are the wages for full time. Curtailment amounts to one-quarter time, probably more. This reduces the average week's wage to $5.25. The American Linen Company pays an average wage of $7.65. Running four days a week, the average amount in the envelopes is $5.10. The Merchants' Manufacturing Company averages on full time $7.20, and pays under present conditions an average of $4.80 for four days. From the average wage of the doffer girl, $4 a week, to the $8 or $9 of the speeder tenders, the $11 a week of the slubbers, to the $15 of the spinner, earned when employed at full time, is deducted now every week one-quarter part or more of their customary earnings, because of the depressed condition of the business and the curtailment policy which has been forced upon the management. It is a serious matter to the wage earners of a mill town. It is a serious matter to the storekeepers and local industries. It should prove, too, a bad thing for the political party responsible for such conditions."

Similar testimony was sent in from New Bedford, Lawrence, Lowell and other New England textile cities. Then came the relief (New England's "Relief of Lucknow") in the shape of President Taft's veto of the textile tariff-ripping bills, with the result the following telegraphic information was published all over the East and elsewhere.

"Boston, Sept. 11.—Nearly 25,000 persons engaged in the New England textile industry resumed work today after various periods of idleness due to a pronounced policy of curtailment. Within eight days, 85,000 textile operatives in the New England States have been called to their machines."

Textile New England is now busy and happy. It is for the American wage-earning voter all over the country to fear this lucky escape from industrial death prominently in mind when he goes to the polls in November, 1912—and also the further fact that our great wages-earning iron and steel industry was equally in danger. When the American wages-earning fails to vote in protection of his weekly envelope he has only himself to blame when the inevitable wages "calamity" results.

Wages in Australia.

Wages have been fixed for five years from 1910 by the special wages boards of Australia at the following weekly rates in English money:

	£.	s.	d.
Bakers	2.	6.	5
Bootmakers	1.	13.	7
Engravers	2.	6.	8
Potters	1.	15.	11
Brewery employees	2.	5.	4

as per the government statistician's Year Book. These rates affect over 75,000 workers. Reckoning the English £1 as being equal to $5 American, the rates of pay named are considerably lower than the rates paid to similar workers in this country.

A Wages Comparison.

American bricklayers are paid three times as much as British bricklayers; stone masons get more than double as much; carpenters get double as much and smiths the same. The ratio of wages (United States and Great Britain) is 243 to 100 in the building trades; 246 to 100 in the printing houses, and 232 to 100 in nearly every other industry.

Wage Conditions in England.

As to wage conditions in England, the London correspondent of the American Economist writes under date of August 21, last:

"Let us see what this boasted free trade prosperity was that the foolish British workingmen were striking against. In London, for instance, the carters, or truckmen as they would be called in America, came out for 50 cents more wages a week. They were getting the magnificent wages of $6.25 for drivers of two-horse trucks and wagons, and $5.25 for drivers of one-horse vehicles. It must be remembered that the most of these men are married and have families, and that they are in their way skilled workmen. Then up in Manchester and Liverpool all the dock laborers struck. Their average wages were from $3.75 to $4 a week. Here is a family budget of one of these men, who has a wife and three children. Rendered as nearly as possible into American money:

Rent, $1.12; coal, 25 cents; light, 14 cents; Burial insurance, 12 cents; friendly society, 14 cents; trade union, 8 cents; knocker up, 6 cents; firewood, 3 cents.

This leaves the workman with the balance of his wages, about $1.81, for food and clothing for himself and his family, and in winter the balance will be smaller because he will have to spend more on fuel and light.

The item of "burial insurance" and "friendly society" require some explanation in America. They are both forms of insurance, and are absolutely necessary. The burial society undertakes for this weekly payment of 12 cents to bury the laborer or any member of his family needing that attention, and the friendly society, for 14 cents a week, looks after them when they are ill. The "knocker up" wakes up the workman in the morning, so that he may not be docked for being late at work.

The plain fact is that half the working people in England do not know what is means to have enough to eat. A few days ago there came into notice in London the case of a domestic servant who had left her place to marry a railway conductor. A year later she came back to her old mistress and begged to be taken back as a daily servant, this meaning that she would be allowed to sleep at home.

"I have been hungry ever since I left this house," she said, "and now that we have a baby to feed we shall all starve if I don't find work."

It is hard to find in England a working class home where the wife is able to devote all her time to her family. Free trade "prosperity" in that country seems to rest largely on the work of married women and the starvation of children.

Do not forget these free trade facts (low tariff here is virtually the same thing) American wage-earning voter, when you go to the polls in November, 1912—vote to "protect" your own high (protection) wages.

Strike Notes.

Bavaria had 335 strikes and lockouts in 1910, involving 17,755 workmen, who lost $714,000 in wages.

Alabama was free from strikes in 1910 and therefore increased its coal production in the year by 2,388,629 short tons, or 17.42 per cent. The total output was worth over twenty millions of dollars.

Had it not been for the time lost by strikes the 46,541 coal miners of Ohio would have averaged 230 working days in 1910, instead of 203.

Oklahoma had 8213 coal miners on strike in 1910, and the average time lost by each man was 152 days, a total loss of 1,248,376 days' work and wages. That time and money is lost and lost forever.

In Illinois coal mining in 1910, out of a total of 72,645 men, 67,212 were idle for an average of 136 days, causing a total loss of 9,133,953 days' work and wages. That great volume of time and money is also forever gone.

By reason of the strikes in August, Great Britain lost $20,000,000 worth of her foreign trade in that single month.

Much strike rioting and shooting in Bilbao, Santander, Malaga and other cities of Spain is reported under date of September 12.

Because eighteen men refused to wear union buttons, 1250 coal workers have gone on strike in the Panther Valley region of Pennsylvania. Strikes for this cause are unprecedented in the anthracite region.

The Brooks Locomotive Works, Dunkirk N. Y., have closed down because of the boilermakers' strike—the many suffering for the few.

The National Erectors Association (iron works) has determined to fight the "closed shop" demand in New York and elsewhere. It is a fight for industrial freedom.

Seamen's Wages at San Francisco.

According to the 1909-10 report of the Bureau of Labor Statistics of California, the rates of wages for white seamen sailing from the port of San Francisco are (with board:)

	Per month.
Masters	$100 to $250
13.6 per cent. getting $125.
Mates	$55 to $130
10.9 per cent. getting $100 and over.
And 24.8 per cent. $75 to $100.
Seamen	$30 to $75
66.7 per cent. getting $45 to $50.
Firemen	$45 to $55
47.7 per cent. getting $55.

The summary is:	Percent. of total employees.
$150 to $250 a month	3.5
$100 to $150 a month	3.4
$75 to $100 a month	3.1
$50 to $75 a month	36.5
Less than $50 a month	43.5
Total per cent.	100.0

The total amount of wages paid to persons of all occupations employed on vessels engaged in the trade of the port of San Francisco amounts to over ten millions of dollars a year.

The larger part of the Orientals employed work as coal passers, firemen, seamen and waiters. They are paid in Mexican silver—reduced to United States gold coin in the rates hereafter named. They number 1235 against 14,443 whites, or less than 10 per cent. Their range of wages runs from $2.50 to $25 gold per month. Of the 1235 Orientals employed, 127, or 10.3 per cent., received from $10 to $25 gold per month, while 1108, or 89.7 per cent., receive less than $10 per month. The prevailing rate of wages is $7.50, 60 per cent. of the 1235 getting that pay. Evidently Oriental shipping labor at San Francisco is not hurting the white shipping labor there to any appreciable extent.

And who does not know "Uncle Billy?" I shall not mention his surname; it would be invidious; he married Miss Boyle forty-odd years ago; I blew into Wilmington on the day of his wedding and only knew one other man but Gen. Banning, and that was Herman Hellman; but Herman insisted that I should go with him to the wedding; I accompanied him, and after the ceremony there was a supper given to about eighty guests, and I, the stranger, was appointed toastmaster. Twenty-five years afterward "Uncle Billy" and his wife celebrated their silver wedding, and I was again toastmaster.

I occasionally meet Billy Rowland, looking not five years older than when he was Sheriff thirty-odd years ago, and captured Vasquez, the highwayman. He has loaned more money that he never expected to get back than any man in Southern California. Henry T. Gage came to Los Angeles thirty-odd years ago, and has been Governor of our State. Gage, Workman and Rowland all have grown-up sons and daughters

Found in Destruction of Property Which It Is His Special Function to Create or Preserve—McNamara Arrests Followed by a Period of Noteworthy Calm.

[Century Magazine:] The never-ceasing lawlessness among us divides itself naturally into two classes. When it is perpetrated as a means of livelihood it is clearly crime; but when it is projected and carried out all in the way of lessening the tedium of life or of promoting the ease of living it may be classed with the practical joke as belonging to a broad species of humor.

The striking unionist who has found irksome his sworn obligation to advance the nobility of labor turns with incongruous joy to the breaking of the heads of those who desire to work while he is resting, and to destroying the property which in the economy of nature it is his special function to create or to preserve. But the incongruous fun which pervades most strike riots is small humor compared with the practical joke of dynamiting the buildings and construction work of employers who are so unfortunate as to find themselves outside the pale of labor-union approval. Until recently that form of humor has been rather popular. It distributed itself by leaps back and forth over the country, and always the point of the joke exploded with the regularity of clockwork. The sense of the incongruous in these droll explosions has been heightened by labor-union spokesmen, who, without winking, have ascribed the explosions to the owners themselves, whose motive, of course, was to perpetrate a joke on the labor unions by seeking to bring them into disrepute.

A discussion of the incongruous side of labor agitation is made timely by the recent activities of Mr. Gompers. As the head of the American Federation of Labor his efforts to advance the material welfare of American workmen are naturally conspicuous, and nothing relating to his efforts is more notable than the absence of criticism among his followers of his philosophic tone, of his aggressive strictures, or of his reform proposals. As the spokesman of the aims and hopes of unionism he has had the field very much to himself, and the humor of imputing the atrocities of strike troubles to the "enemies of labor" has been a favorite weapon.

Also the administration of justice has called forth from him almost more humor than the impartial enforcement of the laws. His suggestion that the country might well dispense with a third of the judges, and more profitably use their salaries to indemnify injured workmen, for complete humor lacks only an added recommendation that the "injured workmen" be selected from those hurt in the act of destroying property in time of strike. Quite recently he has achieved the humorous situation of entertaining a committee of august Senators with his views on the importance of impeaching the justice who found it advisable to sentence him and two other labor leaders to prison.

But on the Fourth of July last Mr. Gompers carried humor to the front rank of argument by treating a meeting of 3000 labor-union protestants against the McNamara extradition, to a parody on the Declaration of Independence. Whether his hearers were familiar with that solemn document or not, they could appreciate the fun of hearing their champion insert the word "capitalists" in place of the royal tools and tyrants who were so effectively excoriated by the fathers of the revolution. Whatever might be said for or against the manner of haling the dynamite suspects before a distant tribunal, it is plain that the McNamara arrests have been succeeded by a period of noteworthy calm. The clockwork seems to have run down, the fuse appears to be wet; and the labor-union leader, temporarily relieved of apprehension that employers will dynamite their own property and slay their own workmen in order to cast suspicion on the "friends of labor," gives vent to the gaiety of his heart.

The success of this effort to inject travesty into a discussion of the wrongs of labor suggests that persuasive argument might be derived by such a facile advocate, from a perversion of the Gettysburg address, and possibly of the Sermon on the Mount. The idea that "capitalists" in general block the way to the laboringman's Arcady overflows with humor, since without capitalists all men would labor, and the market for labor would be so overstocked that each man might be limited to working for himself. That proposition is almost as humorous as the policy of promoting the interests of labor by limiting the amount of labor and curtailing the sources of skill and efficiency. In as much as two-thirds of the labor performed in the world is for the purpose of feeding, clothing, housing and personally benefiting those who must depend on their daily wage for the means of subsistence, it is certainly "ludicrous or absurdly incongruous" to affirm that working people will be benefited by limiting the quantity of labor.

But the serious and sacred cause of labor advances even with the handicap of preposterous fallacy and frivolous leadership. Its sensational spokesmen have no trouble to get a hearing in this strenuous and stirring country; the general public likes to be amused or distracted, and seldom recoils from lawlessness that is "ludicrous or absurdly incongruous;" the newspapers find it convenient to fill inconsequential "space" with amusing crime and humorous perversions. Thus the cultivation of lawless thinking progresses, and the public mind is jogged only by events which stagger common sense—after which the appeal of sane humanity is again drowned by the plaint and quip of the demogogue, who is, as a rule, only striving to make a show of rendering service for a salary paid for the furtherance of objects like the "closed shop" and other special privileges—objects which, in their relations to the common good, are too often in themselves incongruous, and for that reason not susceptible of advancement by plain fact and serious argument.

Peace Orders.

ONE LITTLE STRIKE IN LOCAL BUILDING TRADES.

FEARING that future acts of violence by unionites will hurt the case of the McNamaras, accused of dynamiting the plant of this newspaper and murdering twenty of its employees, the labor union bosses throughout the United States last week ordered their followers to refrain from lawlessness for the time being. Before this order was received in Los Angeles from Indianapolis, union plasterers here threw up their jobs Monday morning, ten minutes after donning their overalls and demanded an increase of 50 cents a day. They threatened drastic action if the advance was not immediately forthcoming.

The Master Builders' Association was taken completely unawares and the plasterers on four of the large jobs that have to be finished at a specified time, were given the raise, with the understanding that it was only temporary. The plasterers in the past have been paid $5 a day. It is now the intention of members of the Master Builders' Association to cut the scale to $4.50, and continue to pay $5 per day only to efficient men. It happens that at present there are more square yards of plastering being done than ever before in the city's history. In another month the greater part of this work will be finished and plasterers will be available at the same scale that is now paid to carpenters—$4 a day. Members of the Master Builders' Association anticipate that 75 per cent. of the plasterers now employed will be without work, and those who led in the recent demand for higher wages when the contractors were in a hole, will not be shown any favors.

Secretary Tuite of the Master Builders' Association has located his office temporarily in the quarters of the Builders' Exchange in the Stimson building. In the absence of Joseph T. Campbell, secretary of the Builders' Exchange, Tuite is holding down both jobs. From the offices carpenters and plasterers are supplied to contractors in large numbers daily.

A new practice has gone into effect at the Labor Temple. Hereafter, as was shown last Monday, employers will not be served with a notice when a strike is contemplated, and no demands will be submitted until after the union employees walk out. A number of "silent" strikes were planned for this month by the local bosses, but the order of a few days ago from Indianapolis will put a quietus on them. Employers throughout Los Angeles do not anticipate difficulty with the unions for some time, especially while the tail of the dove of peace is kept salted by the union bosses at Indianapolis.

BODILY ASSAULTS APPROVED.

Strike Leader Says He Is Glad a Railway Company Is Losing a Fortune Daily.

Responsibility for violence in labor disturbances has invariably been denied by labor leaders, the defense being made that all disorderly acts are committed by "sympathizers." The leader of the recent Brooklyn street railway strike, however, refused to hide behind that time-worn subterfuge. In reply to a query during the strike he announced boldly that he was highly satisfied as the company was losing $150,000 a day "counting the claims for damages to persons injured." It is plain, therefore, that bodily assaults not only upon strikebreakers, but upon passengers and bystanders are regarded by union leaders as a legitimate aid in achieving their purpose. In commenting on this phase of union lawlessness, the New York Journal of Commerce editorially:

"There is one thing in con

Buy Your Stock at Once

The Los Angeles Investment Company is a stock company, a corporation. Its chief business is buying and selling real estate. It has paid more in cash dividends to its stockholders than any other similar company in the world. During the last fifteen and one-half years stockholders have received an average of about 39 per cent. a year in cash dividends. Every stockholder shares proportionately in every profit. No promotion stock has been issued—and no stock has been given away or traded for real estate or anything else. The Company is in its forty-sixth year, and in its sixteenth year in Los Angeles. The Los Angeles Investment Company has no "agents," "agencies" or "branches" anywhere. It pays absolutely no commission for the sale of stock. More than 20,000 people are interested in it and its associated enterprises. Are you one?

Your Money Back

No investor in this Company has ever failed to have returned to him on demand his investment in full, without questioning or argument.

This is the most vital point to watch. During the panic of 1907 stockholders of the Los Angeles Investment Company had returned to them in spot cash all of their investment, if they wished it. The Guarantee Fund of more than $85,000, held and managed by the Globe Savings Bank, has for its sole object the protection from loss of small stockholders. Its purpose is to give you back your money on demand. It is possible for the Fund to return all of an investor's money, because the Company receives it all to start with, none of it being diverted to the pockets of "agents" as "commissions."

There is nothing evasive in this guarantee. It does not undertake to try to sell your stock to some one else. The money is there. If you want your money back—ask for it.

South Fields.

ELL FINISHED IN ONE YEAR.

aware Union Finally Is in the Sand.

nge Oil Company Decides to Go Deeper.

nges Drilling on Other Side of Gulch.

pecial Correspondence of The Times.]

NAHEIM, Sept. 22.—Successful lopment work in the La Habra Brea Canyon oil field has created e than unusual interest during past few weeks. In the Olinda rapid progress has been made in ork. In the Fullerton the Stand- Oil Company has its new derrick n the Stearn-Goodman lease. The ware Union has attracted atten- by getting well No. 42 into oil . This well was started just a ago and the success in getting own with a small hole in that th of time speaks highly of the ager, Frank Gardner, and at the time makes a new record for camp, in that No. 42 has carried inch casing to a gre er depth any other hole in the field.

e ten-inch was started at 1400 and at around 2400 feet they are standing the eight-inch, mak- 2000 feet for the ten-inch. The nt oil sand was entered near the level. The drill has gone through feet of it, and it is believed that e remains ten et or more. The is in such fine shape in the mat- of a large-sized and straight hole in other ways pleasing to the oil ators, that it has been decided to inue on down with it. The sand aining will make a good well on wn hook if more and better sand ot found below, and at any rate ill not injure it to stand idle ile. The prospecting work done w this sand will be watched with greatest interest, and if this well uccessful in finding the Menges it will come in a gusher. Other- they can go back to the sixty- of sand. No. 37 of the same com- has started the six-inch casing 200 feet, and it is believed that sand will be reached soon.

he Orange Oil Company has a t new record for the field and Southern California in drilling ugh 700 feet of oil sand in a single tch. No such depth of oil sand ever before been cut in this field the announcement of its presence been of great interest. The Or- is now working in the second oil below the 700-foot deposit, hav- entered into the second in a com- tively short tme after finishing first. The well is near the Menges and although the upper oil sand not carry the high gravity oil the Menges is producing, it is eved that this will be obtained to ertainty and the well become a t producer with particularly long assured.

he Murphy Oil Company is drill- out the cement on the No. 4, and soon be sinking there again. The t-inch casing has been landed at 0 feet, and the outlook is excellent oil is expected to be reached with- he next four or five hundred feet. he Union has the No. 3 Bastan- ry well now down 2700 feet with -inch casing, and at present cutting the oil sand. This well promises be an excellent producer and proves a large territory.

nnouncement is made from au- ritative source that F. J. Phillips has ured control of the Shaffer Oil pany. Sinking on the property is be resumed at an early date. This perty was a partnership business differences of opinion prevented elopment. The outcome is good ws to the field as a whole, for there no doubt that the company stands position to do much in proving up valuable area.

he Menges company has a rig go- up for its No. 9 well, and is sit- ted just across the gulch from the e of its famous high gravity gusher, ich several months ago established fact that this field possesses high avity sand. It is the belief that it ll get the same results on this side the gulch. This well will be tched with great interest by those terested in the oil field.

Adding to the interest centering in territory this side of the Menges lch is the starting of a new well by e Brea Canyon Company within a one's throw of the site of the Menges o. 9. The new Brea Canyon well ill be No. 26. The rig is up and ey are hastening toward spudding in fast as they can.

The Standard Oil Company has sed the Olinda company's 35,000- arrel tank, and also the 35,000-bar- l tank of the Brea Canyon Com- any. These steps are considered ighly significant, particularly so in iew of the fact that during the week a carload of line pipe was delivered at Olinda for the Standard. Connecting these facts it certainly looks as if the Standard would contract at least for part of the oil product of the Olinda, and Brea Canyon fields.

ROYALTY OIL SOLD.
ONE MILLION BARRELS.

One of the biggest oil contracts ever consummated in this city was closed the other day when the 1,000,000 barrels of Lakeview royalty oil was sold by the owners, Julius Fried, Parker Barrett, J. M. Dunn and A. E. Hodgkinson, to the Union Oil Company and the Kellogg Oil Company. The price paid for the oil was better than 30 cents a barrel.

The oil secured by the Union does not go to the agency, but is for the use of the Union alone. The negotiations were conducted for the owners of the oil by George Whittaker, their attorney. He also represented them in the drawing of a new lease covering the Lakeview ground for the Union Oil Company, which owns a majority of the stock of the Lakeview Oil Company. Under the terms of the new lease at least two of the wells are to be drilled 2700 feet deep, and eleven are to be drilled all together. The drilling is to continue unless the price of oil should go below 20 cents a barrel. In that event the drilling is to cease temporarily.

WILL GO DEEPER.
ANOTHER OIL SAND.

The Pyramid Oil Company has the four inch casing on the ground to be used in its well on Section 18, 32-25, which it expects to complete within the next few days. The well has reached a depth of 3870 feet to date, having gone through over 500 feet of oil-bearing shale, all of which carries a strong flow of petroleum gas.

The formation at the bottom of the hole is brown shale of which about 20 per cent. is oil sand. While this formation carries the heaviest flow of gas that has ever been found in the Midway field and also good quantities of oil, it is not considered by the Pyramid management that this is the true oil sand. Drilling is to be continued in this well until the shale has been completely penetrated and the true oil sand tapped.

On Trip to Mexico.

Robert Henry Brown, president of the Eagle Rock Bank and also of the Dos Banderas Oil Company, has gone to Tampico to spend a few weeks in reviewing operations in the Mexican oil fields. The Dos Banderas company has leases on about 1500 acres in the Tampico district and the casing, tools and supplies for a 2100-foot well have arrived from Pittsburgh. The first well will be drilled near the company's wharf on Lake Viejo, which is reached by navigable canal direct from the harbor of Tampico—only seven miles away. This is the nearest point to tidewater of any in the famous Mexican oil field.

Fly As a Traveler.

[Saturday Review:] One does not, I think, always realize the extreme mobility of the house fly. The other day I was in a train which was drawn up at a station on the P. L. M. line in France. There was a fly with me in the carriage and the window was open. Presently the Savoie Express went by, its speed reduced for the moment to a crawl as it passed over the points of a junction. As the wagon restaurant passed my carriage one of the cooks opened his window and put his head out. Instantly my fly left my carriage and flew into the Savoie Express; the window was shut, and the train de luxe, with its long line of polished and glittering saloons of the International Sleeping Car Company, went on its expensive way. The next stopping place, if I am not mistaken, would be Dijon; but the fly would probably still be lunching in the restaurant and would hardly alight there. Without fares to pay or luggage to pack, and with the briefest of toilets, standing on four legs and brushing the others together, two at a time, he was ready to fly out and take possession of whatever part of the world he was in, to dine in the most fashionable restaurants or sleep in the most comfortable hotels, and the moment he felt bored to take ship or train or horse or motor car or aeroplane and travel the world until he was ready to alight again.

A Long Steel Shaving.

[Topeka Capital:] W. B. Huff, a machinist, claims to have broken the world's record by making the longest shaving ever produced. While turning down a piece of vanadium steel he cut out a spiral sliver that measured 121 feet in length stretched out on the sidewalk. Shortly after getting this remarkable result he cut another shaving that measured 155 feet. In the accomplishment of both of these feats he claims to have twice broken the world's record. The best previous record ever reported was from the Santa Fe Railroad shops at Topeka, where a shaving 110 feet long was turned out.

Coalinga.

NEW GUSHER IS STILL FLOWING.

Canadian Coalinga's Well Looks Very Good.

South Field Operators Are Quite Jubilant.

Coalinga Royal Gets Into the Second Sand.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

COALINGA, Sept. 22.—The Canadian Coalinga gusher, the new well in the south field, continues its flow of oil through the hole full of water, with occasional blowouts. After each of these it is necessary to fill the hole with water again, to keep the well from flowing into the air.

The sump holes were rushed to completion today, the workmen starting under the direction of George K. Anderson yesterday afternoon. A gate valve is being placed on the casing today, and if the well does not bridge over, or the gas pressure subside in a short time, it will be bailed down and allowed to flow through the eight-inch casing. Allan Pollak, a director of the company's interests, and T. H. Thompson, the manager, believe that if the well is allowed to flow, and can be controlled, it will bridge over at the bottom and allow them to cement off the water with the eight-inch, and drill again into the oil sands with six-inch casing. They both declare that the water is shut off tight with the ten-inch, but want to take no chances on the outside pressure collapsing the big pipe. There are nearly 2700 feet of this ten-inch in the hole, and if the well can be cemented off again with the eight-inch casing there is hardly a possible chance that any accident can occur.

Pollak is highly elated over the strike of his company, but he is taking his time about arranging for a production from the well. He wants to take no chances whatever, and bailing will not start until he is fully convinced that they cannot go ahead otherwise.

Orval Geiser, who drilled in the Silver Tip, claims that at no time did that gusher ever make such a showing as the Canadian well is making at the present time.

After passing through the first sand at 1050 feet the Coalinga Royal Oil Company, on section 8 19-15, about twelve miles north of Coalinga and a short distance back of Oil City, went into the second sand at 1170 feet yesterday afternoon. The drill was sent about two feet into the sand and the gas pressure was so great that the mud and sand were forced about fifty feet up into the casing. The oil and gas showed up very encouragingly in the bailer and on the tools, and the drilling was suspended to await orders from Los Angeles, where the principal stockholders, directors and officers of the company reside.

The first sand was about five feet through and produced about 26 per cent. gravity oil. The second sand is showing up considerable lighter even than this and Supt. Williams is confident that he has now reached what he has been after for nearly two years. He has wired the main office of the company the result of the last few day's work and is anxiously awaiting instructions. The well has been drilled in a dry hole and the sand can easily be tested out. The water was shut off at about 900 feet in ten-inch casing and is being drilled now in six and one-fourth-inch.

MONEY BUT NO FUN.

Ottawa's Wealthiest Resident Started With Neither Friends Nor Education.

Ottawa has the reputation of having more millionaires than any other place in Canada, writes William E. Curtis, in the Washington Star. The richest resident is a Mr. Booth, who came in the early days from Nova Scotia as an ordinary lumber jack, rafting on the river and filing saws in the mills. He had no friends or education, but possessed the natural gift that so many people covet, of making and saving money. He saved enough out of his wages to buy a shingle machine, which he worked himself while his wife tied up the shingles in bundles. Then he got another machine, and then another, hiring hands to work them, and he laid the foundations of a fortune which is estimated at $60,000,000.

He owns $30,000,000 worth of pine forests where the ax of the lumberman has never been heard; he owns paper mills, saw mills and various other manufacturing industries, and handles $20,000,000 worth of lumber annually. He built with his own money a railway from Ottawa to Georgian Bay to haul his logs and lumber down to the former place and sold it to the Grand Trunk company a few years ago for $13,000,000.

Mr. Booth is now 85 years old, and although a great sufferer from rheumatism, still manages his enormous business with the same sagacity he has always shown. He has two sons, who have been brought up in his mills. One is cashier and the other is superintendent of a paper factory. Neither he nor they have ever had any fun in their lives, and have never developed a sense of enjoyment, but the "boys" will have about $30,000,000 each when the old man goes to his account.

England's Welsh Statesman.

[Newark Evening Star:] Lloyd George, the Welshman and Radical, who has arisen to such prominence in British politics, is credited with being the principal factor in bringing about the agreement which settled the great labor strike and averted a national calamity. But yesterday this singularly able man was placarded all over England by the Conservatives as a dangerous social and political firebrand. It was Lloyd George who drafted the budget bill that the House of Lords threw out and which was the cause of the lords' undoing. Indirectly he brought about one of the greatest revolutions in British history. He has now done for England a service of incalculable value, and the career of this Welsh lawyer has only begun. Beyond doubt he will be the Premier of England if he lives, and he may then do even greater service for his country in its foreign policy

MINES AND MINING.

Fair, is now touring Southern and Central Arizona, gathering exhibits and mineral specimens for his collection, now the most nearly complete of any in the Southwest. He has been especially energetic in securing mineral types, rather than specimens, and hopes eventually to show all formations in which all Arizona metals are to be found. The mineral exhibits are mounted upon wood blocks, grouped carefully with respect to mineralogical classification. In addition, a number of the best known of Arizona mines are represented by special exhibits, under glass.

Ray and Hayden were visited during the week and inspection was made of the Ray mines and reduction works by a carload of notable mining men and financiers, including J. D. Ryan, one of the heaviest owners of the Calumet and Arizona and Cananea Consolidated stock; W. E. Cory, late president of the United States Steel Corporation; R. L. Agassiz, vice-president of the Calumet and Hecla Copper Company; W. D. Thornton, president of the Greene Consolidated; P. L. Foster of the London Exploration Company, and Dr. L. D. Ricketts, general manager of the Greene Consolidated and consulting engineer of the Phelps-Dodge Company. No explanation is given for the visit, other than that the party is on a tour of a number of the southwestern mining camps.

THE VULTURE MILL.

TONS OF TAILINGS.

[Special Correspondence of The Times.]

PRESCOTT (Ariz.) Sept. 22.—Just at present the Vulture mill is being operated entirely on tailings, of which there are thousands of tons available. There is no report of the richness of the material left from the operations of the bonanza days, but it is noted that the very latest mechanical and chemical ideas have been resorted to in order to get a profit out of the material at hand. There have been other cyaniding attempts at Vulture and some of them have been successful, but nothing before has approximated the clean class of work now being done.

It is told that the extraction is at least 96 per cent. of the assay value. Little is being done in the mine, in which the new workings now are down below the 700 level, but this inactivity is understood to be due to an internal row in the company and not to any lack of value in the ore at that depth. Only a small part of the great ore body was explored in the past, and there is every probability that another bonanza may some day be discovered by the aid of expert geologists. The property once had an eighty-stamp mill of the simplest type. It now is equipped with a modern twenty-stamp mill operated by gasoline power, with an adjunct of a fine cyaniding plant.

Plans are being made by the Arizona Power Company for extension of its wires into the Bradshaws to Crown King, Tiger Tip Top and other famous mining camps that have made rich history for this locality. By this action fuel costs will at least be cut in half, and a market afforded for surplus power readily to be utilized by the power company at its works on the lower Verde at the mouth of Fossil Creek.

IN THE EARTH.

Rare Minerals, Metallurgy and Chemistry.

Porphyritic Rock.

ROSEMONT, Aug. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending you a sample from the Mohawk claim in Rosemont, Kern county. This is a group of five claims. I wish you would analyze these samples.

Yours respectfully, J. C. M.

ANSWER: The sample carries very low values in silver, lead and iron, with a bare trace of vanadic acid. Not tested for gold.

Gypsum.

ASH FORK (Ariz.) Aug. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Am sending you by today's mail sample of rock found four miles from Ash Fork. Please let me know through your "In the Earth" if it has any value and how much. What is it?

Thanking you in advance, I remain,

Yours truly, E. M. H.

ANSWER: The sample is a good grade of gypsum. Material represented by it is of commercial value and when "burnt" is Plaster of Paris of commerce.

Ferruginous Quartz.

LOS ANGELES, Aug. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The sample enclosed is from Northern California. Would you kindly tell me through your columns what is the nature of the ore contained therein?

Thanking you in advance,

Yours truly, D. S.

ANSWER: Free gold is sparingly present in the sample with iron oxides, titanic iron ore, trace of cinnabar and one grain of platinum. The platinum looks artificial; that is to say, the grain of platinum looks as if it was not placed in the rock by nature.

Mica Schist.

MIDDLETON, Aug. 28.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am sending you a sample from the northeast corner of Lake county, California. Will you kindly classify it for me and let me know if it carries values?

I am a subscriber of The Times and this is the first time I have sent any rock.

Yours truly, D. G. L.

ANSWER: Glad to hear from you. Your samples consist of three specimens of silvery-lustered mica schist and one sample of low-grade (gritty) talc.

By "values," you, of course, have gold in mind; free gold is not present in any sample.

Granite.

AZUSA, Aug. 29.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am mailing to you a sample of what appears to me as a piece of wall-rock, but carrying some quartz of gold and silver, and quite a showing of some kind of other metal. I picked hand-pieces off, here and there, to make an average sample.

The wall shows on the bottom of a fifty-foot offset in a solid rock five feet thick, seven feet high, and I do not know how deep, and it is located two miles east of Azusa, Cal.

I will be glad to have through your "In the Earth" column, an assay of this sample with such information that you know will aid me on the subject. Yours very truly,

"A SUBSCRIBER."

ANSWER: Some years ago we were called upon to witness the workings of a placer machine in the locality you refer to, and while in the "territory" some fifteen mining boys brought samples to the camp, all of which samples were referred to as "heavy in lead and nickel." Some of the specimens plainly exhibited contents of galenite (lead sulphide,) but the nickel values were remarkably low—in fact a trace of nickel only, and that trace was obtained from the phyrrhotite (magnetic pyrite,) present.

Your samples represent the ore described and are chiefly granite with ferruginous quartz, carrying microscopical pyrite (iron disulphide,) with trace of lead.

Iron Gossan.

SAN FERNANDO, August 29.—[To the Editor of The Times:] I am enclosing specimen of quartz taken from what we hope is a good mine and located about fourteen miles from San Fernando. Shall be pleased to get your opinion as to its value, and any advice you may have to offer. Thanking you in advance.

Yours respectfully,

S. U. S.

ANSWER: It is impossible for any one to give practical advice on a mine or claim without a personal examination of the property.

You submit two samples, one of which is gossan, an oxydized iron sample, which is often the indicator to a lead of good ore.

The other sample is of some 45 per cent. coarse pyrite, with arsenical pyrite, and trace of iron-copper sulphide, and if this is a sample of the ore (under the gossan,) you have a refractory grade of smelting ore, and of doubtful value.

To answer the question further, have a reliable assayer to assay the sulphides.

Probably Gannister.

LONG BEACH, August 30.—[To the Editor of The Times:] Enclosed please find sample local fire-clay. would be glad to know its value and test for that purpose. Thanking you in advance. Very truly yours,

G. F. C.

ANSWER: Would prefer to test a massive sample of the clay. Correspondents are advised not to submit powdered or milled samples. Gannister is: "A refractory silicious cherty stone, mixed with fire-clay used for lining bessemer converters and for macadamizing roads."

Black Sand.

LOS ANGELES, August 31.—[To the Editor of The Times:] The sample herewith came from near San Diego. A trace resisted hot acid. Does it contain platinum? What is the value of gold in it?

An answer in the "In the Earth" department will be appreciated.

Yours truly,

J. H. P.

ANSWER: The "black-sand" of the mining boys carries 85 per cent magnetite (magnetic iron ore) and if it occurs in quantity it would pay to separate the magnetite and sell it as iron ore.

In the mass we find titantic iron (non-magnetic,) with microscopical garnet, quartz and tourmaline. No platinum is pressent and no free gold is observable under the glass.

There are many substances that are not soluble in hot acid—quartz, for instance.

Aventurine.

LOS ANGELES, Sept. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] This sample I found with a few others like it near Pala, San Diego county. It looks like gold quartz to me. Please state what it is in the "In the Earth" column, and greatly oblige.

Yours very truly,

P. Mc. C.

ANSWER: Aventurine (such as your sample) is: "A vitreous variety of quartz generally translucent, and of a gray, green, brown, or reddish-brown color, and containing minute yellow spangles. These are most frequently produced by scales of mica, but sometimes, according to Gahn, by metallic copper crystallized in the form of flat segments of a regular octahedron.

"It is used for ring-stones, cuff buttons, shirt studs, watch charms, etc. Beautiful specimens of artificial aventurine may be obtained by heating together for twelve hours a mixture of 300 pounds of pounded glass, 40 of protoxide of copper, and 80 of oxide of iron, and afterwards allowing the mixture to cool very slowly. In fact the name for the natural substance has been borowed from that of the artificial gold-spangled glass, which in its turn, originated in the circumstance of a workman having accidentally (par aventude) let fall some brass filings into a pot of melted glass, which he thereupon called aventurine." There is a feldspathic aventurine which occurs native, and it is known as sunstone (aventurine feldspar.)

Vanadium.

PRICE (Utah) Sept. 2.—[To the Editor of The Times:] By this mail I am forwarding to your "In the Earth" department two samples of mineral from near Price. No 1 is possibly carnotite, but what causes the green coloration? No. 2 I take to be vanadate of some kind, but am unable to place it satisfactorily.

I will thank you to reply, also to the questions numbered. (1.) What is metallic vanadium worth per pound? (2.) Will mineral carrying 8 per cent. vanadium values pay to mine and ship?

You are no doubt aware that the steel trust is now mining carnotite in the Paradox country of Colorado, therefore I am anxious to get my bearings on the claims in which I am part owner. Yours respectfully,

G. F. P.

ANSWER: Glad to hear from you. No. 1 is impure carnotite (double vanadate of potassium and uranium,) impurities and coloring matter is occasioned by copper values present to a very low per cent., and yet the sample is carnotite and not descloizite.

Sample No. 2 is low grade descloizite, with no cleavage, of a blackish color, with small olive-colored crystals present, and yielding "a chatoyant, bronze luster; light brown inclining to red at the edges by transmitted light. The colors are zoned with straw yellow, reddish-brown, and black on surfaces of fracture." Hardness, 3.5; specific gravity, 5.85. Zinc, copper, manganese and iron are the impurities in the sample. Descloizite is soluble in dilute nitric acid, and its powder—before the blowpipe—fuses, "and is partially reduced to a black slag investing a globule of metallic lead."

Replying to your other questions: (1.) Vanadium is now selling at $8.50 per pound, and owing to the immense stocks of vanadates on hand, with no mineral under 20 per cent. values, the market price will probably go lower.

(2.) "Mineral carrying 8 per cent. vanadium values" will not pay to mine and ship."

It does not clearly appear whether your claims are near Price, or located in the Paradox country.

LEGAL RIGHTS OF A COW.

Street Railroad Conductor Badly Treated By a Bovine Which Was Then Arrested.

[New York Herald:] What are the legal rights of a cow?

Upon the decision of that question, which is now agitating the judicial luminaries of Winsted, Ct., will rest a proposal of vital interest to New Yorkers.

A lawyer of Hartford, Ct., has begun a suit against Henry M. Cowler, who owns a cow. The contention is that the cow was standing on the rails of the Farmington Valley Railway, plunged in profound meditation, when a car came along. The conductor was on the footboard. He advised the cow to move aside, and when she did not he addressed her in language offensive to any cow of sensibilities.

Thereupon, so the allegation goes, she turned, cast a reproachful look upon the conductor, and bit him. Then she leveled her horns and neatly and expeditiously tossed him off the car, after which she resumed her interrupted reverie. Subsequently the cow was arrested on charges of disorderly conduct and assault and battery, but she has since been released pending a decision of the problems involved.

Persons who are obliged to t with interest, for the reason th decision may mean that a trolle

IRON MAN BUYS FINE TRACT.

SANTA BARBARA, Sept. 23.—P. H. Murphy, a Pittsburgh iron manufacturer, owner of Graystone terrace, Montecito, has added to his holdings here by the purchase of 125 acres from G. B. Parma, adjoining the Murphy place, and running across the hills north of the Sycamore Canyon road. The purchase, which was made without the services of an agent, represents an investment of more then $50,000.

It carries with it, a 300,000-gallon reservoir, and water rights from a 1100-foot tunnel. Mr. Parma has held the land for many years, and has devoted a portion of it to fruit and vegetable growing, and also to olives. He retains 190 acres in the same locality.

Mr. Murphy now has a contiguous tract of 138 acres. The Parma ranch he will devote to lemons and to the breeding of fine stock. He left Sunday for his eastern home, and will return here in March.

The lots face on Brand boulevard and Central avenue and are the last of the holdings of G. E. Smith, who two years ago purchased half interest in the tract. The price received is reported at $10,000.

The effort to annex the northern part of this valley is proving unexpectedly successful. A canvass of the territory shows that a big majority of the people in that section are in favor of the move.

UNPAID DRINK BILLS.

A West Australian Scandal That Affects Five Prominent Members of Parliament.

[London Globe:] Although in Australia members are paid for their services, and also receive free railway passes, it is quite evident that in some cases their "ex.'s." are very heavy. Every one who has lived in a warm climate knows the danger of drinking too much water and the care to be observed in proper dieting; at the same time, for five honorable members to owe between £600 and £700 between them to the Parliamentary caterer wants some explaining. One member alone has run up a "score" of £80 for drinks and board; but the worst feature is that the members in question have made no attempt to liquidate their liabilities, despite gentle reminders and more direct requests for payment.

It is the custom at this "best club in the State" to pass in "chits" for liquors ordered or drinks consumed, and in the cases of the five individuals referred to, their "pile of pasteboards" represents the enormous amount of £700.

In Sir John Forrest's time, as Premier, some years ago, a similar state of things occurred. A number of members had passed in heaps of "chits," and for months and even years they remained dishonored. At last Sir John Forrest passed the drink bills to the debit of the State, some of the dishonest politicians having quitted political life, others of them having died.

But it is very evident that nothing like this will be allowed to happen now, for the Perth "Sunday Times" is in possession of the names of the "defrauding five," and "will publish them in cold, black type, unless they pay up in full and decent time before the election."

Cut this adv. out for reference.

DO YOU WANT TO KNOW ABOUT YOUR BUSINESS, HEALTH, MARRIAGE, LOVE AFFAIRS, OR HOW TO IMPROVE YOUR CONDITION FINANCIALLY AND SOCIALLY?

ALWAYS CONSULT THE BEST. IT IS THE CHEAPEST IN THE END. IT IS BETTER TO CONSULT NO CLAIRVOYANT THAN ONE WHO IS NOT ABLE TO HELP YOU.

If you want the truth, with reliable advice, you will consult Stanley and Holt on past, present and future.

STANLEY AND HOLT
fully appreciate that in this day of sensational advertising there are more false claims and misrepresentations chaperoned through the columns of the daily press than the most hypential tongue could utter in a lifetime, until one cannot be blamed for doubting almost everything they read. Therefore, they say to you—come to them this very day and let them give you a complete reading, telling you every hope, fear or ambition, better than you could explain yourself. They will tell you the bad as well as the good, keeping nothing hidden from you. They will tell you everything upon matters of love, marriage, divorce, business, health; in fact, they will read your life like an open book.

NO NEED TO TELL THEM.
There is no need to tell Stanley and Holt your story. There will be no "quizzing" or asking of questions. Their talents enable them to instinctively know your wants and troubles. Without any attempt at mystification, but with unerring sight into the inner nature of things, they reveal that which you most want to know.

To whom it may concern: We take great pleasure in recommending our brothers, PROF. STANLEY AND HOLT, as life readers of good standing, having to our knowledge been fully developed in all the various phases of mental mediumship. We cordially recommend them to any individual or society that may need their advice.
DR. JOHN WESTERFIELD,
President Indiana State Association of Spiritualists.

Don't struggle with a burden you can divide. A troubled mind begets a morbid conscience. Sympathy, consolation and timely advice heal the worst of wounds. Be advised and relieved of anxiety.

MRS. MASSON,
the noted palmist of London, Eng., may be consulted at 222 S. SPRING ST., (over Owl Drug Store) by those desiring CAREFUL, CONSCIENTIOUS AND SCIENTIFIC HAND READINGS FROM ONE OF THE FOREMOST PALMISTS OF THE DAY.

The earnest student and thinker will soon learn in his investigation along psychological lines that that which pertains to occult phenomena proper can readily be distinguished from crude and oft-exposed SLEIGHT-OF-HAND TRICKS, the most common of which is the telling of the subject's name, age, etc., AFTER HE HIMSELF HAS WRITTEN THAT information.

PALMISTRY, HONESTLY PRACTICED, WILL NOT tell you your name, but it WILL give you information of considerably greater value in every-day life.

Your vocation, your present line of work, matters of health and domestic life, financial conditions, and ways and means of climbing out of a rut of ill luck into wide paths of success and prosperity can all be told you through scientific palmistry WITHOUT A SINGLE QUESTION, WRITTEN OR VERBAL.

MRS. MASSON DOES NOT APPEAL TO IGNORANT SUPERSTITION, BUT TO THE FINEST INTELLIGENCE.

PROF. C. IRVIN ALTHOUSE,
305½ S. SPRING, NEAR THIRD ST.
A RESIDENT OF LOS ANGELES 28 YEARS.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is an experienced practitioner in the science of modern ASTROLOGY, by which he has made many REMARKABLE PREDICTIONS. The horoscope shows the powerful influence of the planets in all affairs of life. It shows diseases, deaths, love and marriage, financial affairs, talents, environments, about children, relatives, when and where to travel, what to seek or to avoid, when in danger of losses, troubles, etc., etc.; also your good periods coming—GIVING DATES OF THESE EVENTS FOR THE FUTURE.

PROF. ALTHOUSE read E. H. Sothern, Nat Goodwin, Mary Mannering, Gadski, Admiral Schley, David Starr Jordan, ex-Gov. Pardee, ex-Senator Clark, Gen. Chaffee, Edison, Sousa, Modjeska, Julia Marlowe, Anna Held, Jefferson, Capt. Hobson, Lillian Russell, Calve, Admiral Evans, H. E. Huntington, De Wolf Hopper, Maxine Elliott, Ethel Barrymore, etc.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S SKILLED WORK, with his trained judgment, must in no wise be classed with that of other readers. Therefore, do not waste your money on the idiotic advice and warning of HUMBUG astrologers, palmists, psychics—those doing dishonest work.

PROF. ALTHOUSE is an expert PALMIST, and WITH EACH PALM READING gives also an ASTROLOGICAL READING.

DR. J. A. LARSON writes: "I want to say that your reading was the most satisfactory thing I have ever had in my life. I know a great deal about these sciences, and I consider your work as the most THOROUGH and reliable of any reader in the United States."

LOUIS JAMES says: "I wish to say that your reading was entirely SATISFACTORY."

FREDERICK WARDE says: "Your reading was most SATISFACTORY. Your knowledge and skill is REMARKABLE."

MME. SCHUMANN-HEINK says: "I was greatly surprised to find how many of your warnings were well founded. YOUR READING WAS MOST MARVELOUS."

The interpretation of a horoscope is a fine art; the percentage of "GENUINE" astrologers is exceedingly small. To know a little of astrology out of books, and to be a skillfully trained, EXPERIENCED ASTROLOGER, are two entirely different things. Therefore, in this work, it depends largely WHO it is that reads you, as to the RESULTS obtained.

PROF. ALTHOUSE'S wonderful proficiency in the casting of HOROSCOPES and hand reading has brought him a LARGE AND SUCCESSFUL PRACTICE. The most private confidences are reposed in him, and his advice is sought in the most difficult and critical circumstances. Personal attention. Strict privacy. HIGHEST GRADE OF WORK that skill and many years of experience can produce; therefore HIGH-CLASS PATRONAGE SOLICITED.

WANTED—THE U. S. NAVY IS TODAY composed of the finest body of picked men in the world. It has no place for the ne'er-do-well or the failure.

More than 1000 men apply for positions in the navy each week. Only about 20 per cent. of these pass the examination and are accepted. This shows that the navy picks its men with rigorous care and pains.

The navy does not urge any man to enlist. But it does urge both parents and sons to investigate the opportunities the navy offers young men (17 to 35,) either as a four-years' training or as a life's work.

The life is healthful, the work agreeable, environment wholesome and healthful, and the man who wishes to learn by study and travel or to learn a trade will find ample opportunity as will the man who desires to save money and win promotion and retirement on three-fourths pay.

The nearest Navy Recruiting Station is at San Fernando Bldg., Fourth and Main sts., Los Angeles, Cal. The officer in charge will be glad to see parents and sons, and explain everything you wish to know about work, pay, promotion, retirement, recreation, etc. Or send for "The Making of a Man-O-Warsman." It is free. Address BUREAU OF NAVIGATION, box 225, Navy Department, Washington, D. C.

FRANCE AND GERMANY IN HARMONY ON MOROCCO.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

PARIS, Sept. 23.—The latest reply of the French government to the German proposals, which was approved today by President Fallieres, who received the Cabinet at Rambouillet, was dispatched to Berlin tonight.

A semi-official communication issued this afternoon said the reply showed some slight divergence from the text of the German note, but added:

"The changes are inspired by the general views expressed at the last conversation between Herr von Kiderlen-Waechter and M. Cambon."

The communication continues: "It is said France insists that the relations between the Maghzen (Moroccan foreign board) and the powers shall be carried on through the intermediary of the French Minister to Morocco.

"In the matter of consular courts and foreign proteges, France, in order to remove the abuses complained of, desires that not only Germany but all the powers shall agree to the revision of the Madrid convention until French jurisdiction has been completely re-established in Morocco. Finally, Foreign Minister de Selves proposes a new wording for the clause relating to the control which France agrees to exercise over transport enterprises.

"It is hoped that these differences will be easily smoothed over."

GERMAN DINES CAMBON.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

BERLIN, Sept. 23.—The German Foreign Minister Herr Von Kiderlen-Waechter, is giving a dinner today to the French Ambassador, M. Cambon and Mme. Cambon.

The next official meeting between the Minister and Ambassador Cambon will be on Monday when it is expected that the Moroccan part of the agreement between France and Germany will be put in final form, but publication of the terms will be withheld until the matter of the cession to Germany in French Congo has been fully arranged.

THREE LOUISVILLE FIREMEN KILLED BY FALL OF BRICK.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

LOUISVILLE (Ky.) Sept. 23.—An avalanche of bricks from upper walls of a burning six-story building in the wholesale district crashed through three floors of an adjoining building tonight, killing three firemen and injuring several other men.

The dead:

LIEUT. VIRGIL FERGUSON, salvage corps.

FIREMAN RICHARD HARDIMAN, salvage corps.

FIREMAN RICHARD DIAL, salvage corps.

The injured:

Jacob Staegel and Arthur Montanus, employees of the Kentucky Wall Paper Company.

The firemen and clerks were on the street floor of the Louisville Paper Company when the upper walls of the adjoining building of David Baird & Sons, wholesale milliners, crashed in on them without warning.

The Baird loss is $200,000, while adjoining stores also suffered damages.

THE WALKING DELEGATE.

In Two Cases the Medford Unionites Say He Walked Away With Their Money.

[BY DIRECT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

MEDFORD (Or.) Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] For the second time in thirty days the Cooks' and Waiters' Union of Medford has faced alleged deficits because of departing business and walking delegates. Today it was discovered that Charles Woodruff, who took the place of Harry Gray, was missing, and it is alleged he took with him $80 collected as dues from members. The union now faces dissolution or re-organization.

A month ago Harry Gray, then walking delegate, disappeared, taking with him the finances of the union, amounting to $100. Woodruff was named to fill his place. He collected the dues for September and then is alleged to have departed.

Members, following the report, were disgusted and took no pains to conceal it. It was the intention of the union to place Woodruff under bonds to prevent a repetition of the Gray affair, but delayed in taking any action, and this procrastination, according to many members, has placed them in bad with the international union.

ACCIDENT, SAYS JURY.

Death in Chicago of Wealthy Wisconsin Lumberman Not Suicide as Was First Thought.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23. — Coroner Hoffman, after investigating the death of Charles W. Allen, the wealthy leather manufacturer of Kenosha, Wis., who was killed yesterday afternoon by falling from the window of his room on the fourth floor of a downtown hotel, expressed the opinion that the death was the result of an accident.

Relatives and employees of the hotel said Mr. Allen had been subject to attacks of vertigo for several years. The Coroner believes the manufacturer was seized with a dizzy spell in his room and went to the open window to get air and accidetnally fell into the light shaft.

FINGER-PRINT TEST.

COLORADO SPRINGS (Colo.) Sept. 23.—Arthur J. Burnham, who has been under arrest since the discovery of Sextuple murder in which he lost his wife and two children, and in which he lost his neighbors, Mr. and Mrs. Henry F. Wayne, and their babe, has been released from jail, but will be kept under surveillance. After securing his liberty he went to the office of an attorney and made over a $3000 Woodman insurance policy to the two children of his cousin, E. E. Hardwick of Detroit, Mich. His release followed a comparison of his finger prints with those found on an ax. Little progress has been made in the search for the murderer in the last few hours.

SINCLAIR KILLS MAN.

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Upton Sinclair, the novelist, was in an automobile this evening which ran down and probably fatally injured an unidentified peddler while the author was on his way to his home in Edgemoore, Del. Witnesses said the accident was unavoidable, as the peddler walked in front of the car. Sinclair was not detained.

NEW YORK, Sept 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] Robert Hichens, the English author, arrived here on the American liner, Philadelphia today to attend the rehearsals and production of "The Garden of Allah," dramatized by him, and which will open at the Century Theater. It is Hichens's first visit to America.

Asked how he thought Amreican novels compared with the English he said they didn't seem to be any worse than those on the other side. His latest novel, "The Fruitful Vine," will be published next Monday. It deals with the influence of children upon their parents.

PASTOR PARSONS CASE.

SALEM (Or.) Sept. 23.—After careful investigation the case of John Parsons, superintendent of Alaska Missions, charged with the misappropriation of church funds, and other indiscretions, the Special Conference Committee of the Oregon Methodist Episcopal Church made public today its findings, vindicating him of all charges excepting one accusing him of favoring the granting of a license to a saloon within 400 feet of the Fairbanks Church. Before a motion could be made to adopt the report, a member of the conference objected to Parsons's vindication of all charges but one, and Bishop Smith, concurring, said the committee should either clear Parsons of all charges or find him guilty. The committee was ordered to reconsider the saloon license charge and return a blanket report.

GRAPE PRICES POOR.

STOCKTON, Sept. 23.—[Exclusive Dispatch.] The tokay grape growers of northern San Joaquin county are very much discouraged over the latest returns from shipments to the East, as they lost about five cents per crate on the grapes sold in Philadelphia and Boston. The price was 72 to 76 cents per crate. This gives the grower 30 to 34 cents for producing, hauling, picking and packing. Twenty-five cars of grapes were shipped out of Lodi last night via the Southern Pacific. Twenty-three cars went out Thursday night. The growers and shippers are holding back fairly well, but some of them are beginning to be discouraged over the possibility of the reduction in supply materially helping the market. The consensus of opinion, is that the embargo will be maintained another week at least in the hope of improving the prices.

REASON OF WALKOUT.

SEDALIA (Mo.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] The walkout today followed a refusal by the company to grant a conference. The local shops of the railroad closed down last night announcing "general retrenchment" as the reason for an indefinite suspension. This action, it is now believed, was taken in anticipation of today's movement of the shopmen's union.

In refusing the request for a joint conference made by the unions north and south of the Red River, company officials announced that conditions in the two districts were so different that joint conference would be useless.

In addition to better general working conditions the shopmen demand higher wages.

MEETING MONDAY.

DAVENPORT (Iowa) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Day Wire.] The International Association of Machinists at its convention today called a meeting of the national executive officers of the sheet metal workers, boiler makers, blacksmiths and pipe makers, interested in the proposed strike on the Illinois Central Railroad and other Harriman lines. The meeting will be held in Davenport, Monday.

STRIKE STARTED.

SEDALIA (Mo.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Car shopmen on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railroad throughout the entire system struck today because the company refused to grant a joint conference with the men of the two systems north and south of the Red River regarding working conditions. Fifteen hundred men in all are said to be out. Four hundred are at the local shops.

Night Wire.] The strike of the car men and inspectors on the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, which began today in the shops of the company along the entire system, is the result of a demand for a new schedule of wages, according to W. A. Durham, assistant general manager of the company. The company announces that it can not legally comply with the demands.

CONTEST ON ELECTION.

ST. JOHNS (N. B.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Official returns from the recent election, made public today, show William Pugsley, the Liberal Minister of Public Works, to have been re-elected by a bare majority of two votes. Early returns indicated a majority of about sixty votes. The Conservatives have indicated their intention of asking a recount.

ATTACK ON REYES.

VERA CRUZ (Mex.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] In a statement for publication, made shortly after he landed here today, Francisco I. Madero bitterly and sarcastically assailed Bernardo Reyes. He sneered at the general for withdrawing from the Presidential race, boasted of his own strength and declared that fear of losing his life prevented Reyes from starting a revolution.

STRIKE IN MEXICO.

CHIHUAHUA (Mex.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Striking street-car men fired on a car which the company had run out of the barns this afternoon in an effort to resume service, interrupted this morning by a walkout of all the conductors and half of the motormen. No one was injured.

FURNITURE DESTROYED.

A quantity of second-hand furniture, valued at $1000, was destroyed late last night when a fire started in the rear of No. 213 East Fifth street. The property was owned by George Benz, and was stored in the lot behind his place of business. The cause of the blaze is unknown.

PARSONS, KAN.

PARSONS (Kan.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] Fifty car repairmen, employed in the Kansas and Oklahoma shops of the M.K. and T. Railway, walked out today following a general strike order issued to car men throughout the system.

THREE HUNDRED AFFECTED.

HOUSTON (Tex.) Sept. 23.—[By A. P. Night Wire.] It is

ZBYSZKO WANTS GOTCH TO WRESTLE WITH

ZBYSZCO, the Polish wrestling champion, will come to America the last of October, on his third visit to this country. He comes with every expectation of securing a championship match with Frank Gotch, and returning to Europe with the world's title of the mat.

On behalf of the Pole, Manager Herman challenged the winner of the Gotch-Hackenschmidt match in Chicago on Labor Day, and as Zbyszco is the logical candidate for a match, it is a difficult matter to see how the champion is going to ignore him if he does not retire, and there is no expectation, apparently, that he will leave the public mat.

While it is a fact that Gotch defeated Zbyszco two years ago, there can be no denying that the Pole went into the match illy prepared; in his worst form of a strenuous year, and that he was defeated by trickery of the mat, rather than by superior strength or skill. Pictures of the Gotch-Zbyszco match have shown the world that in both falls secured by the champion, the Pole was not on the defensive, once having his hand out-stretched to begin the bout with the customary courtesies, and on the other occasion caught turning in expostulation with the referee.

This match was no true test of merit, and is so regarded by all experts. Gotch was unable to gain any alvantage over Zbyszco in an hour's previous wrestling, and would very probably have met defeat on that occasion, had the match been permitted to pass the 60-minute limit.

Since his advent in America, Zbyszco has defeated every man of note, with the exception of Gotch, and as he is the logical choice, Herman will use every effort to secure the bout, and offers Gotch, through the columns of The Times, $10,000 as his share if he will consent to meet Zbyszco in a finish match for the title, and is prepared, he writes, to post $1000 and agree to post the balance upon signing articles.

Should Herman fail to do this, he agrees the forfeit shall go to any charitable organization The Times may name.

Says Manager Herman: "In the meantime, I am prepared to prove to the followers of wrestling in America that Zbyszco is capable of defeating anyone that can be secured to go against him. I want to show that he is a gr... with th... pleased ... meet a... can be ...

Trick Play Favored.

GRIDIRON TACTICS TO DEFEAT WE

THE question that is bothering the average football fan at present has to deal with the style of play that each will use during the coming season.

It has always been the fond principle of the coach who has the weight in his favor to devise ways and means for bringing the game to close quarters and it will remain so always. Under the first revision of the rules, primarily intended to force out the mass plays, it was only a matter of a few games until the heavier teams discovered formations that were twin brothers to those discarded and yet fitted in with the regulations.

In the first year of its existance, the forward pass was almost totally ignored by Kansas University. The Jayhawkers had a line averaging about 200 pounds, and a backfield well schooled in the system of play where the full-back carried the ball through center two-thirds of the time.

The next year saw the advent of the tackle out of tackle play, which, owing to the scattered defense, made weight a far more powerful instrument of destruction than it had been before. Mighty line bucking formations were devised that hurled themselves at a single man where formerly two or three had been prepared to meet the attack.

Nearly all the accidents at the close of the 1909 season occurred to men playing the defensive, not because the new rules had failed to make open play, b... it both ... the spe... was goi... saw it ... terferen...

of the thir-teen-story Los Angeles Investment building at the northeast corner of Eighth and Broadway, and of the Garland building, immediately adjoining on the north, the east side of Broadway from Seventh to Eighth will present a solid block of metropolitan buildings, all, with the exception of the Lankershim Hotel at Seventh and Broadway, erected within the last three years. This will be a block of whose skyline the city may well be proud; as it will boast an unbroken chain of really modern structures.

The last link to be completed in the chain of skyscrapers which will soon extend from Seventh to Eighth, was the Hoffman building, adjoining the Parker Bros' Block on the south. The latter building was completed about three years ago. Adjoining the Lankershim, the Hooker building was completed about the same time.

The new $1,000,000 home of the Los Angeles Investment Company will front 100 feet on Broadway by 150 feet on Eighth and will be of the same height as the Garland building. With the latter structure, the Investment Block will make a total of 200 feet on Broadway rising to a height of 150 feet. There will not be such another corner in the city.

TO BE HOME OF STOCK.

In discussing the plans of the Belasco with reference to its new location, yesterday, John Blackwood, manager of that theater, said:

"The new Belasco Theater to be erected by Mr. Garland will be used as the home of the Belasco stock company, with Lewis S. Stone at the head of the organization, directed by the Morosco-Blackwood company, who now control the Belasco on Main street, the Burbank Theater and Hamburger's Majestic Theater, as well as the franchises for the Shubert-Liebler-Savage independent $2 traveling attractions and the John Cort $1 traveling shows that for the present season will be housed at the Lyceum, under the management of the Orpheum company.

"As soon as the Broadway Belasco is completed, the Belasco stock company will be moved from Main street over to the new structure, and the present Belasco will then be devoted to the traveling $1 shows.

Only the highest class of royalty plays will be presented at the new Broadway Belasco. The company will include many new faces, as well as several of the players that have made the Belasco a popular amusement place in this city for the past seven years.

FACT AND COMMENT.

Los Angeles, the city of splendid achievement, must always regard the annexation of Hollywood as one of the best bargains a city ever made. Los Angeles had annexed and annexed as one great wave of expansion after another swept out beyond the restricted incorporation limits of the old pueblo days. Raw, scattering settlements, one after another, had been brought into the fold and had caught the spirit of hustle and grown into compact and beautiful areas. Los Angeles had added to itself everything from bare barley fields to a water front, and every acre added had justified the hopes of its backers. Then came Hollywood, a sightly, beautiful city, with schools and churches and attractive homes, with parks and wide, paved streets, a veritable city made to order, knocking for admission. It is almost an injustice to refer to the acquisition of Hollywood as an annexation, for it was rather the voluntary union of one splendid city with another.

The coming in of Hollywood, costing the city nothing, and bringing so much to Los Angeles, must take rank with the acquisition of the harbor as the banner transaction of the annexationists. With Hollywood came an addition of approximately 5000 to the population of the Southland metropolis. Of this, 5000, there was practically not one who wasn't a member of a family occupying a beautiful house, for Hollywood is a city of handsome homes exclusively.

With Hollywood came into the city's possession one of the finest polytechnic high schools in the entire West, a school employing twenty-five highly-trained instructors and buildings grouped about a common campus. This high school, the first in the country to adopt the academic grouping plan for departmental work, and offering the best of training in no less than fourteen different courses, was of itself, an acquisition of incalculable value to the city. Hollywood's grammar schools are second to none, and its kindergartens are models for other cities.

CHURCH DENOMINATIONS.

With Hollywood, came into Los Angeles, eight attractive houses of worship, representing as many progressive denominational bodies. These churches are, some of thm, architectural gems. All boast large and active congregations. Hollywood has a fine library, splendidly stocked with books.

There are two noteworthy private schools in this beautiful city within a city. The larger of these, the College of the Immaculate Heart, is attended by over 200 girls and young women, and occupies one of the finest buildings of the old California mission type in the section. The Hollywood school for girls, situated in a garden of palms, is one of the most popular schools of its kind in the southland.

In the Hotel Hollywood, the foothill city boasts one of the most attractive tourist hostelries in the section, a building which is pointed out as one of the show places of California. Hollywood has up-to-date business houses, two national and two savings banks, a newspaper of its own and not a single saloon.

There are miles upon miles of wide, shady streets within the limits of Hollywood. Some of these paved, pepper-lined avenues are famous throughout the country. In the immediate vicinity of Hollywood are to be found some of the most beautiful drives in Southern California, notable among these, being the Cahuenga Pass boulevard, between Hollywood and the great San Fernando Valley, the scenic drive to Laurel Canyon, Vermont avenue from Griffith Park to the sea, and Sunset boulevard, from Beverly Hills to the Plaza.

Nor does the charm of Hollywood end here. Set against the foothills, six miles from the heart of Los Angeles, and twelve miles from the ocean, Hollywood overlooks both city and sea. Being at an elevation of from 400 to 800 feet, its climate has an all-the-year-round superiority. Many of the dwellers in Hollywood have their homes in the midst of bearing orange or lemon groves, and nowhere the growing of flowers and semi-tropical plants.

HOLLYWOOD'S ADVANCE.

The advance of Hollywood has been phenmenal. Seven years ago this favored section was little more than a ranch. Ten years ago men as yet not much more than boys hunted quail over the sites of some of its most beautiful mansions.

From the time when H. J. Whitley laid out the place, Hollywood has steadily advanced. The lots offered for sale have almost from the first been purchased by those intending to build homes. The speculator has never been a gradual upward trend of values, a trend that has never been affected by the fortunes of real estate elsewhere. Today Hollywood's houses are filled with home owners and there is scarcely a dwelling to be rented for love or money in the place.

The growth of Hollywood has not been confined to any particular section. North, east, west and south, the expansion has gone steadily onward. To the east the city had grown to the very limits of Los Angeles before the two cities became one. To the south the division between Hollywood and

FOR SALE—
DON'T WASTE YOUR MONEY.
HERE'S A BUNGALOW, $1250.
PAYMENTS LIKE RENT.

Two reasons why you should make your rent money BUY you a home. First—because it's wasteful to pay out money month after month merely for a place to live in —when you could save this same money by putting it into a home. Second—because every dollar well invested in and about Los Angeles today will bring you a handsome profit on account of the steady, persistent increase in population in this favored section. This home-buying business is good logic; it's the difference between making money and losing money. Thousands of Los Angeles families have secured their homes this way. If you're paying $15 monthly rent now, you can have a home of your own. Take this bungalow, for instance—it's a little beauty. Only 17 minutes from 6th and Main street, on the best car line. A well-built four-room house, with attractively decorated rooms, screen porch, bath and toilet. The lot it stands on is 72 feet wide and 200 feet deep. Free water, in steel mains under natural pressure. Good soil for your garden and chickens. I'll sell this on a payment of $100, and the balance at $15 monthly. The price of house and lot complete, is only $1250.

FOR SALE—BY OWNER.

More than one year past I built for my own use a beautiful home, and about the time of completion was suddenly called from the city and as I have, after waiting one year, positive knowledge I cannot, for business reasons, again locate in the city, decided to dispose of same.

House consists of ten rooms; hardwood floors downstairs and finished floors upstairs; hammered brass trimmings, woodstone sink, plate glass windows in front, two toilets, sleeping porch, furnace, cemented cellar, and the house has eastern frontage, on a lot 60x142, at the corner of Second and St. Andrews sts., Wilshire district.

The actual cost of construction of house is more than $8000; mortgage of $4500. Call and see the place and after deciding value of lot make me an offer. Best offer takes the place. Address OWNER, 207 National Realty Bldg., Tacoma, Washington, or call at 227 Security Bldg., Los Angeles, Phone F2222.

P.S.—Would consider renting very reasonable to right parties with references.

FOR SALE—
Here are a few of our best buys left in our Monte Vista Valley. We want all this property sold immediately, as we must devote all of our attention in just a few days now to our townsite project there.

Note the prices, bearing in mind that this property is 1500 feet above the sea, only 15 miles to this office (splendid roads.) Electric line absolutely assured; pure mountain water piped to each lot.

$ 250—We have only six of these fine big half-acre lots left. Each one is 87½x250 (more than a half-acre net,) covered with beautiful oak trees. Just opposite our new townsite. Terms, one-fourth cash, balance two quarterly payments at 7 per cent., or can give 5 per cent. discount for all cash.

$ 450—One full acre, 174½x250. This is the last acre lot we have left for sale among the beautiful oak trees and adjoining the townsite; elevation 1500 feet; an ideal spot for a little suburban home. Terms, one-fourth cash, balance three years, 7 per cent.; 5 per cent. discount for all cash.

$ 875—Would you like a secluded nook of a little over two acres? About half of this piece is level, the balance runs up on a beautiful hill slope covered with oaks. Just the place for a rustic bungalow.

$1250—Five acres having just the right combination of soil, water and climate required for lemons or oranges. This is demonstrated by other groves around it. Our new car line will pass this property.

$9000—The best 20 acres we have left unsold for oranges or lemons. A beautiful decomposed granite and silt soil. Abundance of cheap mountain water. The elevation of 1700 feet assures against damaging frost. We could sell either 10 acres of this if desired at the same rate of $450 per acre. One-fourth cash, balance three years.

Do not try to imagine.
Don't hesitate.
Investigate! That's the thing.
These few pieces will be sold in just a few days.

We suit all pocket-books on prices of Hollywood homes.

LOTS!

We have Hollywood vacant lots from $500 to $7500, depending on location.

ACREAGE!

When we get an inquiry on Hollywood acreage, we are usually up against it, as it is so scarce and prices seem too high for the average buyer—

BUT

Here is a snap, and close-in, that comes only once in a long time.

OVER TWO ACRES,
ONLY $2750!

With a frontage of 250 feet on Cahuenga, extending back to another street, a littl rough in places, and some prospective paving to pay, but at that, a great big snap.

Have our branch manager show you how it will cut to eight good lots and two irregular, or would be fine for one or two homesites, with magnificent view, east and south over the city.

Our manager says he will be disappointed if at least 25 people don't come out to look at this Sunday afternoon.

PROF. JAMES LYON
FULLY DEMONSTRATES THE WONDERFUL FERTILITY OF THE SOIL
—OF—

VAN NUYS
LANKERSHIM LANDS.

Six months ago Prof. Lyon planted ten acres of his fifteen-acre tract to peaches. Today the trees average from 8 feet to 9 feet in height, showing a growth of nearly a foot a month, and measuring 4 to 6½ inches in circumference at the base—all absolutely without irrigation.

Between the trees pumpkins and melons were planted. Today, with no irrigation and no care whatsoever, the crop of mammoth pumpkins and melons is conservatively estimated at 250,000 pounds, assuring splendid profits while the fruit trees are reaching maturity.

Prof. Lyon says: "A man can clear from $500 to $1000 an acre by raising garden truck for the city market or for shipment. On an orchard we plan for a yearly income of $250 an acre net profit, after deducting the interest on the money invested. On a ten-acre tract a man could clear $2500 a year. The expense is small, as there is but little cultivation and no irrigation to do."

See this "close-in" property—judge for yourself the money-making opportunity it affords—

Only 4½ miles from Los Angeles.

Come out with us today—see the hundreds of handsome homes and the splendid young peach, walnut and apricot orchards. Hundreds of men are rushing the electric road to completion.

10-acre lots, choice alfalfa or truck land, near Puente, 17 miles from city, and nearly on the valley boulevard to Los Angeles. 125 inches of water goes with the land. See the growing crops in this vicinity. Enough said. Price $375 per acre, easy terms.

INCOME-PAYING WALNUT GROVE.

We have to offer this week one of the best bearing walnut groves in the famous El Monte walnut district, consisting of 47½ acres, trees being mostly 12 years old. The trees are in fine healthy condition and the soil is good, otherwise the trees would not be thrifty. The grove is only 1½ miles from the car line and 13 miles from the city. An abundance of water piped to the land. There is a splendid crop on the trees. Price for next few days, $25,000; one-third cash; will subdivide.

FOR SALE—
LAND THAT WILL PAY FOR ITSELF.
You don't have to put up a large amount of cash to buy first-class farming land. Select ten or more acres of my Fresno Valley Tract, and get the land under cultivation. You'll find that the profits from your crops will take care of you and your family in comfort, and that there will be enough left to more than cover the deferred payments on the land itself. This isn't theory; others have done it. You could not do this on ordinary cheap land. But here you are a short distance from Fresno, in a money-making district, where the soil is rich and deep, with cheap ditch and pump water. Stations on two railways right at the tract. Good town there, also, with town advantages. Excellent oiled wagon roads to Fresno and other nearby markets. This community is well settled, and scores of nicely improved properties will show you how favorable conditions are. Many crops produce bountifully here—including alfalfa, corn, oranges, deciduous fruits, figs, walnuts and vegetables; just pick your favorite and start planting. I'm selling these lands at only $40 an acre up, and giving you four years in which to pay for them; no interest or taxes for two years. Come in and get my free booklet. Learn about the excursions.

WITH GOVERNMENT WATER,
UNDER GREAT ROOSEVELT DAM, FAMOUS CHANDLER RANCH LANDS, ON TEN YEARS' TIME.

In announcing the subdivision of this fertile ranch of 18,000 acres we wish to explain that we are doing so in accordance with a ruling of the U. S. Reclamation Service requiring large land owners to cut down to a unit of 160 acres their holdings, as the water will be served for only 160 acres to any one person; we have been farming a good portion of this land for years, and when you buy the same you know exactly what it will do by the present crops on the ground.

We have only a comparatively short time in which to dispose of this land, hence the low price of $100 per acre for land on which one good crop would more than pay this amount per acre net in production.

Everything grown in the temperate and semi-tropical zones is flourishing in this beautiful, well-established valley, where the government has just completed the greatest irrigation system ever inaugurated. Water for any land you buy is right on the ground. No matter what your branch of farming may be, you can carry it out to perfection on these lands, all of which are as level as a floor, easily worked, and so fertile, water so abundant, and climate so favorable, that bumper crops are always produced. Seasons are the very earliest, which accounts for the record prices farmers of this district get for products.

You deal direct with owners, and save thereby. This is not simply a chance to buy land, but an opportunity the like of which will never be presented to you again in the history of the Southwest. Come while the land lasts and make an early selection; tracts of from 10 acres up may be secured.

$500 CASH FOR NAMES FOR THE city, the new port, about to be established on the Pacific Coast by the Canadian Pacific Railway. Use your head and win first prize, or part of the rest of the $500. It costs nothing to enter the contest and there are no strings to this offer; everybody has an equal chance; plain workingmen and their children are as likely to win as the highest honored college graduates. Now here is information that will guide you in selecting a name: The Coquitlam Terminal Company, Ltd., capitalized at $1,000,000 sold to the Canadian Pacific Railway the land required for its Pacific freight and general operating terminus, serving for townsite purposes 1200 acres and closing the terminal properties. A name is required to distinguish this townsite from the remaining sixty-four square miles in the municipality of Coquitlam. It is planned to put the townsite on sale some time this fall, but it should be understood that no lots are offered for sale as yet. The C. P. R. will have a monthly payroll here of five hundred thousand dollars; this will attract business men, tradesmen and professional men who, together with the 5000 employees of the railway company and their families, will make at once a thriving city, about 17 miles from Vancouver, British Columbia, giving in the near future a population of 25,000 or more. This site was selected by the C. P. R. for the reason that in all Pacific America there is not another place so well situated for the purpose, as well as for the manufacturing plants that are sure to come. Write plainly the name you consider appropriate for the new city, together with your name and address, on a sheet of paper, or a post card, and mail to us to-day. Contest closes October 15th. If the committee of responsible and competent citizens decides that yours is the best (and it might be the best) we will immediately mail you our check for $100 and thank you for suggesting the name. If you come short of the best you have 20 other chances for the rest of the $500. If you do not wish to enter the contest, but only want information about the new city, simply send your name and address and we will immediately forward the fullest details. COQUITLAM TERMINAL COMPANY, LTD., 944 Bower Bldg., Vancouver, Canada.

N. B. INVESTOR, TAKE NOTICE. N. B.
Wanted, $125,000 cash to assist in the purchase of a tract of land which is well worth twice the amount of money wanted. Can be retailed for $400,000 or more. I have $20,000 of my own money to put in, and will form a trust agreement with the Title Insurance and Trust Company, on a 2, 3 or 5 years' basis, giving you a first trust deed on land for money. Also 75 per cent. interest in the equity of all contracts of sale made on this land until you are paid in full.
Will pay a good, liberal bonus and a reasonable rate of interest.
Can offer the Title Insurance and Trust Company as reference in connection with my business.
Without a question every dollar of your loan could be returned within two years or less.
It may be possible that all this money would not be required to be put up. A liberal bonus would be paid in proportion to the amount actually put in. Only $10,000 needed to be paid for ninety days. Plenty of time for investigation.

"HOME BUILDERS" GUARANTY SHARES have many privileges which distinguish them from the shares sold without the guaranty. They are convertible into cash under the written terms of the Guaranty and are assured an earning of at least 8 per cent. per annum. They may also be used in the purchase of property or other securities held by the company, and have a standing loan value of 50 per cent. of the current selling price. The Guaranty is given only to original purchasers by "HOME BUILDERS GENERAL AGENCY," who issue it. Assets amounting to over $150,000 are held to assure the fulfillment of this Guaranty.

"HOME BUILDERS" stock, whether Guaranty shares or not, is the best investment in the local market today. If you can buy "HOME BUILDERS" shares without the Guaranty for less than the price of Guaranty shares it is a fortunate purchase, and will yield you a good dividend, but when you buy Guaranty shares you have an added protection and will participate in the profits of the GENERAL AGENCY which the other shareholders do not possess. Guaranty shares are sold only by "HOME BUILDERS GENERAL AGENCY," 129 South Broadway. Correspondence and inquiry solicited. 'Phone Home 10961, Main 494.

HAS SUPERB WATER SUPPLY.

MARIAN HAS MORE THAN IS NEEDED FOR OWN USE.

Fifteen-Mile Pipe Line Now Under Construction Assures Rapid Development of San Fernando Tract. Chain of Wells Planned to Van Nuys.

The town of Marian, pride of the San Fernando Valley, which the Suburban Homes Company is developing, is rejoicing over the great success which has resulted from the well sunk there a short time ago.

Though the purpose of the shaft was primarily the creatink of a water supply for Marian, the flow has been so steady and of such splendid volume as to be fully adequate for the source of supply for a fifteen-mile pipe line which will feed less fortunate districts.

Los Angeles owns the underground water rights to a large area east of the Van Nuys-Lankershim lands, but Marian is outside the restricted territory.

The ultimate plan will be to drill additional wells as they are needed, making a water chain from Marian to Van Nuys, and this supply may be piped to Sherman.

WELCOMED BY HIS COMMERCIAL MANAGERS.

Arthur Letts Guest of Honor at Banquet Given to Signalize His Return from European Tour. Elegant Floral Decorations and Happy Speeches.

Arthur Letts, proprietor of the Broadway Department Store, was the guest of honor last night, at an elegantly appointed banquet, given at Levy's by his department managers. The occasion of the function was the return of Mr. Letts from a four months' tour of Europe, and the menu and decorations all emphasized his home-coming.

On the cover of the menu was a fine sepia print of "Holmby House," the handsome estate of Mr. Letts at Hollywood, and beneath it in gold, a picture of the Lusitania, the Atlantic liner upon which he returned home. In front of the plate of Mr. Letts a white dove, esconsed in a bank of flowers, held in its beak a card extending a welcome home to the guest of honor. Over the entire length of the table, which was ornamented with floral centerpieces and masses of carnations, was a dense canopy of asparagus plumosus, and the room was banked with many handsome ferns. The electric lights were in colors to harmonize with the floral decorations.

The ante-room in which the guests assembled contained a display of photographs incidental to the tour of Mr. Letts through Europe. He left home in the early part of May, toured England in an automobile, and attended the coronation of King George. From London he went to Paris, and motored to Germany, spending a month at Carlsbad, the famous watering place, then returned to England in an automobile, by way of Switzerland and the chateau district of France.

Following the dinner last night, the following programme was carried out, W. H. B. Kilner acting as toastmaster: W. Y. Smither, "Disproving the Proverb, 'When the Cat's Away, the Mice Will Play;'" W. W. Penry, "Daffydills;" H. S. Carroll, "The Possibilities of the Future;" J. A. Haberbosch, "Our Boss; By One Who Has Never Met Him;" Harry Philp, "Welcome." Mr. Letts responded to all the kind words, telling how glad he was to be home again, and giving some incidents of his tour.

Those present were: Arthur Letts, A. E. Amos, J. A. Aldritt, W. H. Brooks, E. G. Boyle, H. L. Brooker, A. E. Bell, J. Bernadat, H. F. Crede, H. S. Carroll, F. C. Dilberger, E. M. DeMotte, H. J. DRAWS CROWDS TO READINGS.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE ARGUMENTS GARBED DRAMATICALLY.

Hundreds of Men Wear Streamers as They Leave Operahouse. Story of Annandale Election Given to Illustrate Why Women Should Vote on Local Questions.

Sixteen hundred persons left the Mason Operahouse yesterday afternoon at 5 o'clock bearing woman suffrage streamers. They heard Mrs. Marion Craig Wentworth read woman suffrage plays, and an audience of equal magnitude heard her repeat the readings at the Mason last night.

Of the two plays read, the men in attendance most appreciated the one by Elizabeth Robbins. They rather balked at Maeterlinck. His subtleties and symbolisms proved poor as campaign explosives.

The scene from the play, "Votes for Women," which Mrs. Wentworth read, however, was applauded at the climaxes of a dozen sallies of wit. It gave the audience rapid-fire answers to the arguments against suffrage. Mrs. Robbins, in writing the play, chose the extreme in argument against suffrage and clothed each idea in picturesque language.

Besides the reading of the two plays, a speech was given on each occasion by Miss Mary Foy. She was quick to see that the men at the afternoon performance had not appreciated all that Maeterlinck meant by his soulful outpouring and last night she cheerfully separated the literary essence from the mental motif in simpler verbiage so that the men were prepared for the shock of Maeterlinck when it was finally applied.

Miss Cora Foy also spoke for a few minutes last night, giving the public the benefit of her experience at the Annandale polls Friday at the annexation election. She had gone there to find out how the men there are going to vote on the suffrage question and suffrage won the straw ballot by a handsome majority.

Sitting beside Miss Foy at the polls was a woman who owned a home in that precinct and who wanted to see annexation carry. She had no voice in saying whether or not her property should have the advantages of city government and she was compelled to sit there and watch many persons vote who did not have a dollar at stake. Annandale was one of the precincts which was lacking in a two-thirds majority and which defeated annexation. Miss Foy thought that an excellent concrete illustration of why women should vote.

On Twenty-seventh street near Figueroa, Jacob Gold will soon begin construction upon a three-story brick apartment-house to contain 230 rooms. Plans for the structure, now being drawn by Le Clair & Pitzer, call for a building of 120 feet frontage and 170 feet depth, to contain seventy-five apartments. The front will be of white pressed brick. The place will boast all the modern conveniences.

SEASON TEACHES OF NEEDS OF PITCHERS.

The present baseball season has provided some interesting pointers on the best methods of handling pitchers, and at this writing McGraw seems to have the palm, says Right Wing in the New York Post. Pitchers who made great reputations last year and the year before, notably Babe Adams and King Cole, may have fallen by the wayside, while Marquard, who had so many months of preparation, has amply justified McGraw's faith in him. Cole and Adams were worked to the limit of their ability at the very start of their diamond careers, and Alexander is having the same experience this year. Marquard, through careful handling, was better prepared to stand the pace, and I am inclined to think that despite his already remarkable record, his best days are ahead of him, and that he will be heard from next year and for many moons thereafter.

In the days of "Pop" Anson it was the custom to send a new twirler straight to work and other managers have followed the Anson recipe, but the method used in Marquard's case would seem to be the better. That he was hard hit the other day when he apparently had made sure of his game can be laid less at his own door than at the door of an always uncertain, and for that reason, fascinating game. Even a tail-end team will hit the ball at some time or other. There was a day some years ago when Yale University knocked Mathewson out of the box.

True at That.

London writers give Jack Johnson a good turning over when they say he's afraid to meet Langford and has never fought an able-bodied man for the fistic championship. There's no poetry in that, so it must be all truth.

FULLER PLANS HARD CAMPAIGN FOR NEW SEASON.

Reliance and Randolph Man Ready to Swing Into Line for a Year of the Hardest Kind of Hustling—Says Commercial Cars Should Always Be Working.

The commercial side of the motor car industry in Southern California has for more than two seasons been carefully taken care of by the Pioneer Commercial Auto Company, which so far outgrew its original location at San Pedro and Market streets, a move to the real "Gasoline Row" was necessary, and the firm is now comfortably located at Nos. 1226-1228 South Olive street.

O. R. Fuller the presiding genius who has made all these things possible is one of the most popular men in the motor car industry. The Pioneer Commercial Auto Company when it entered the retail game several years ago had to do the real fighting locally for the preference for commercial cars. They started with the two agency lines, the Reliance and Randolph trucks and light deliveries; but so great was their success that other companies importuned the firm to take over their product. The letter "R" seems to be Fuller's hobby, for of all the cars he might have had he picked the Rapid line when adding to his output, and having got that popular make of car firmly entrenched, he looked around for a line of pleasure cars, and picked the Ranier, and it will be hard for any local competitors to beat the '4' R's".

More than 200 commercial cars are in use in the city today through the selling efforts of the Pioneer Company and they are all in good working order. Fuller has established a maintenance station to take care of every owner of a car he sells. If the customer's car, through any mishap, breaks down there is another car of the same make ready to take its place until the owner's own machine is ready to be placed in commission.

Fuller says a commercial car must always be working to make its ownership pay and he carries a big assortment of parts to guard against contingencies as much as possible; and several entire sets of power plants to use if necessary. It's not a question of playing favorites, but it is an honest business policy that prompts the Pioneer Commercial Auto Company to be ready for all emergencies that may come up in the experience of its customers.

M'GRAW HARDER THAN EVER ON HIS PLAYERS.

"McGraw has enforced discipline this year more than ever," said a baseball man the other day. "Two Giants were recently suspended without pay for several days because they didn't report for morning practice at 10 o'clock sharp. McGraw insists that the men must earn their salaries and if they are unfit he makes them sit on the bench with no money. No favorites are played and there's absolutely no sentiment. He turned Bridwell and Donlin loose, regardless of past achievements, and he released Schlei after keeping him on the bench for a long time. He took Devlin off third base without turning a hair and he put the screws on Drucke so that he'll soon be pitching his head off."

SIMPLEX ON TOUR.

A letter has just been received at the agency of the Simplex Motor Car Company from a Los Angeles party touring Switzerland, in which it is stated that the Simplex touring car that the party is using had traveled nearly 2500 miles without a stop for repairs of any sort. Europe, the letter goes on to say, is becoming more and more popular as a touring field for Americans and they are taking their motor cars with them in rapidly increasing numbers each year.

Comparisons.

ST. LOUIS BROWNS HAVE MOST-FINISHED INFIELDER.

A FEW weeks ago a fan in Philadelphia wrote and asked me who I thought the mosa-finished infielder, second or third baseman or shortstop in the American League, writes W. S. Farnsworth. This fan and his friend had wagered, one selecting Collins, of the Athletics, while the other picked Lord of the White Sox. It is pretty hard to find a man who has anything on either of these two.

But on the last trip of the New York Yankees through the West I often thought of my Philadelphia baseball brothers and took especial interest in watching the infielders of the Tigers, Naps, White Sox, Browns and Yankees. And I came to the conclusion that Bobby Wallace, manager-captain-shortstop of the Browns, is without any doubt the best defensive infielder in Ban Johnson's circuit.

Here is a veteran, nearly 37 years old, who has done duty in fast company for eighteen years, but here is why he is still one of the greatest players that ever wore a glove:

He is a student; he studies every batter and is always playing in the right spot. For one man you may find him playing over near second, while for another he is almost in back of the third baseman. For some he plays deep, for others, he is way in on the grass.

He is the best man in the league taking a throw from the catcher and in getting it on the runner. It is almost impossible for a would-be pilferer to hook a slide around him, as he rides with his man.

He is the surest man on grounders, either direct at him or to either side, although he is better going after welts to his left than to his right. He digs deep into the dirt for the ball and seldom does it get away from him.

PULLS DOWN LINE DRIVE.

Line drives are his specialty. Although he is only five feet, eight and a half inches tall, he can go up in the air the proverbial mile and freeze to the pellet. He simply eats up Texas League clouts to short, left or center, and on half-deep fouls he can tear around back of third in ten-second time.

And what an arm this veteran possesses! He can peg 'em across from a deep field to first on a dead line, and it matters little what position he is inn when he makes his heave. He is lightning fast in getting the ball away from him, too.

Hal Chase, the Yankees' manager and great first baseman, says Wallace, is the best infield thrower in the league. A few weeks ago a benefit game was played in Cleveland for the benefit of Addie Joss. An all-star team played the Cleveland team. The all-star infield was made up as follows: Chase, 1b.; Collins, 2b.; Wallace, ss.; Baker, 3b.

An infield with some arms! I asked Chase which one was the best thrower. In a flash he said Wallace. "He is not only the hardest pegger, but by far the most accurate. And he throws a light ball besides. It is a pleasure to catch his heaves."

If Wallace had made good as manager of the Browns he would be the most talked of man in baseball this year. But he failed simply because he wasn't given the material to do with. No other man could have done any better with the St. Louis club. They are without any doubt the poorest aggregation of ball tossers that ever held a berth in the American League. They couldn't win an Eastern League or American Association pennant.

HAS MANAGERIAL ABILITY.

There is no reason why Wallace shouldn't

He is well acquainted with baseball—no one knows it better—and he is an excellent judge of a player. Give him the proper material and I am sure he would put St. Louis back on the American League map.

But just the same, I believe this will be his last year as manager of the Browns. On my last visit in the torrid Mound City I was given some inside information which was to the effect that Clark Griffith, ex-leader of the New York Americans, and now manager of the Cincinnati National League Club, has already accepted terms from Col. Bob Hedges to occupy the managerial berth in St. Louis next season.

It has been known for some time that this would be Griff's last year in Cincinnati, as things broke badly for him there. As for Wallace, the only quality he is lacking in to be a great manager is aggressiveness. He doesn't get out and fight enough.

Bobby, or rather Rhoderick J. Wallace—for that is his Christian name—was born in Pittsburgh, Pa., on November 4, 1874. He started playing baseball in Clarion in 1893 and the following year was with Franklin. In the fall of 1894 he was sold to Cleveland, joining that club in the fall of 1895. He played third base. He remained there throughout the seasons of 1895, 1896, 1897 and 1898, when he went to St. Louis. The Robisons owned both the Cleveland and St. Louis clubs at the time and made wholesale transfers. Bobby was with the Cardinals in 1899, 1900 and 1901, jumping to the St. Louis American League Club in 1902, with which he has played ever since.

Wallace is a crack billiard player and devotes most of his spare time, especially during the winter months, with the ivories. He is a quiet chap, but a poor mixer, although well liked by all who really know him. He was married last spring to a St. Louis belle.

GREATEST FOOTBALL SEASON COMING.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—That college gridirons this year will stage the most interesting and successful season of football in the history of the sport, was the opinion expressed by the high officials of the game here today. Nearly 150 coaches and football veterans from all parts of eastern football territory were in New York today after holding their annual conference last night for the final interpretation of the rules prior to the season's opening games.

Walter Camp, dean of football at Yale; Percy D. Haughton, the Harvard coach; Dr. Carl S. Williams of the University of Pennsylvania, and Dr. James A. Babbitt, chairman of the central board, were among those who declared that the reformed game would overwhelmingly justify itself this year.

For the first time in three seasons the coaches are not hampered by the necessity of teaching a comparatively new system of attack and defense.

There is to be no complaint of delay in naming officials at the various contests, according to Dr. Babbitt of the central board. Most of the assignments of officials, he said, will be decided and published earlier than in the previous years, and the board expects, as a result, to have its appointees

It has been the endeavor of the test Department to keep these scores absolutely correct from day to day. There are many chances for slight errors, both upon the part of the contestants and the accountants who have charge of the records. These errors, however, are only minor ones and have always been corrected within a day.

But as we approach the concluding weeks, it is wise that every score should be mutually checked over. To that end a letter from The Times has been sent to every contestant, asking that the score as given on the date upon which the letter was written be verified by the contestant. A copy of that letter is appended below.

It is of vital importance that there be no opportunity for questioning the score of any prize-winning contestant; therefore, contestants are requested to be very prompt in their replies to this letter, so that any slight differences that may exist can be equitably adjusted and the party in error set right.

After October 1, The Times will entertain no protest whatsoever, prompted by any errors claimed to be in scores previous to the date of notification as shown in this letter.

To the Contestant:

"We are now approaching the time when the closing date of this contest will be announced. It is important and vital, in order that there may be no possibility of question as to the prize winners, that every score be correctly recorded.

"There are several easy ways for discrepancies to occur in these scores. Very often a contestant will mark an incorrect number of points on a subscription slip. Coupons have been coming in from day to day in packages for many of the contestants, and in a number of instances in counting these coupons we have had to throw out some that have expired. It has frequently been the case that a subscriber and contestant both thought a subscription was new which turned out, upon investigation by The Times' agents, to be an old subscription. It has been the custom to credit full new points on all subscriptions marked new and to charge back the difference between new and old points when investigation showed that the subscription was old.

"Your score in the bulletin of September 23, shows a total of ——. As far as we know, this is absolutely correct. Should this not agree with your figures and stubs, LET US KNOW IMMEDIATELY, as NO PROTESTS MADE AFTER OCTOBER 1 on any business previous to that date will be entertained. If the score as given here does not tally with your own, it is necessary for your protection that a correction of either your figures or ours be made before October 1.

"This note is sent to every contestant and published in the Contest news in The Times, so there can be no reason for questioning scores on any business that you have gotten up to date unless you do so now."

CONTESTANTS' BULLETIN.

September 23, 1911.

NOTE: Names of contestants having been in the contest sixty days, and not having scored 2000 or more subscription points, are omitted and only those whose names appear at the finish will be eligible to prizes in the Greater Contest.

PARTY LINES ARE UNDEFINED.

"PROGRESSIVES" DON'T KNOW THEIR BOUNDARIES.

Senator La Follette and Mr. Owen Agree on Many Issues—Every Man May Be Tested by His Devotion to the Initiative and Referendum System.

[Correspondence New Orleans Times-Democrat.]

WASHINGTON, Sept. 17.—Before the ruction that has been going on in the Department of Agriculture broke out, and became a scandal, Dr. Wiley had the country interested with his query, "What is whisky?" Two organizations with headquarters in this city hope to succeed Dr. Wiley as the nation's interrogation mark with their query, "What is a progressive."

Be it understood, there are Republican progressives and likewise Democratic progressives. For short, the irreverent newspaper men in Washington refer to the progressive Republican headquarters as the "La Follette gang," and the Democratic progressives as the "Owen bunch." The name of the Oklahoma Democrat sticks to the Democratic headquarters, notwithstanding that his associates have repudiated his beloved recall of judges part of the programme announced the day after Congress adjourned.

"What is a progressive?" is going to have about as many answers as Dr. Wiley's query. Some of the progressive leaders doubtless will make as many conflicting definitions as those who do not like him or his official ways, say Dr. Wiley made with regard to his own query. It is doubtful whether Mr. Owen would care to admit that anyone denying the efficacy of the judicial recall is a progressive. Yet his colleagues are as much opposed to that part of the Swiss system.

President Taft thinks he is a progressive. Men who are trying to develop Alaska and other parts of the country, where there is public land believe him to be about as lawless a person as can be found, because, at the behest of the followers of Gifford Pinchot and other conservationists, he practically has suspended the homestead law so as to enable Congress to decide whether it will inaugurate a conservation policy such as Pinchot, Roosevelt and James R. Garfield advocate. He has withdrawn from homestead entry lands, supposed to be valuable as water-power sites, though tacitly admitting that there is little or no warrant in law for such withdrawals. He proposes to suspend the operation of the homestead law until Congress has had an opportunity to enact laws for leasing lands of that kind instead of allowing title to them to pass in fee simple to settlers.

Yet Col. Roosevelt, Mr. Pinchot and Mr. Garfield probably would rather bite out their tongues than admit that Mr. Taft is progressive in anything.

OPPOSES RECALL.

So far as the initiative, referendum and recall are concerned, he stands on the same platform as the progressive Democrats. Yet Messrs. Owen, Shively, Reed and Martine, the most vociferous, if not the most profound, of the progressive Democrats, would wear sackcloth and ashes to the end of their days were they to admit unconsciously or otherwise that the occupant of the White House is a progressive.

Of course, as to the tariff, neither brand of progressives thinks of giving Mr. Taft a medal. Instead their cry is "a bas Taft." Yet John Dalzell and the other high protectionists, as well as most of the progressive Republican Senators, denounced the President because he brought forward the Canadian reciprocity bill, which, without doubt, is a move toward lower tariff rates, at least for farm products.

Col. Roosevelt is a progressive, yet during the seven years he was in office he never said a word about the iniquities, real or fancied, of the Dingley law, which Taft said should be revised, and which was revised, upward, say the Democratic progressives; downward, say the high protectionists.

Mr. Roosevelt often was said to be on the point of demanding a revision of the tariff, but he always found a way to sidestep that politically dangerous proposition, finding it much more profitable to agitate for an inspection of the establishments of the robber beef barons than a reduction of the duty of one and a half cents per pound, on which they have grown rich, and easier to advocate more stringent regulation of the railroads than changes in the tariff that would give the water carriers control of Pacific Coast business and consequent loss to the trans-continental railroads.

AGREE ON ONE POINT.

There is just one point on which all kinds of progressives agree, that is that the initiative and the referendum constitute a panacea for all the ills, blithely ignoring the fact that New England, by its town meetings, in effect, is that scheme of government, in effect, if not in form for more than two centuries; that while New England influence has been potent in all the newer States, the New Englanders never thought enough of their form of popular form of government to impose it on the new States.

Federal judges are the ones that most need to be made to feel the weight of popular sentiment, yet by suppressing Mr. Owen the Democratic progressives rob his programme of the feature that appeals to most students of the effects of the American system. Every other official is "get-at-able," save the Federal judge alone.

The leasing system that is proposed for public lands on which there are water-power sites does not appeal to those who know about the leasing system that Russia maintains in Siberia, and which she maintained in Alaska. It may be a good thing. It may be evidence that a corporation is trying to steal something, if when offered a lease it rejects it and intimates it has no money to invest on such a basis. It may be an answer to its objections to say that most of the land in Baltimore is leased by the owners of the buildings standing thereon and that that is also true with regard to much land in New York, but opponents of the system point to the fact that when a man is leasing a piece of ground from an individual, he is dealing with some one with whom he stands on a footing of equality; that the necessities of the owner of the land induce him to make terms such as could not be forced by the necessities of the government because, most of the time, the government has no necessities and when it has, no individual is in a financial position to accept even an advantageous bargain. When the government is "hard up" as a rule everybody in the country is in the same condition.

ARE TO BE TESTED.

But apparently every man in politics is going to be tested as to whether he is a progressive or a reactionary, by the strength of his devotion to the initiative and referendum and the leasing system for public lands that are supposed to be valuable as water power sites. It will not do to say that he is a progressive who disagrees with Taft's views, because by that rule Mr. Dalzell would be a progressive as well as Messrs. Bristow, Cummins, La Follette and practically the whole of the Democratic party, regardless of the fact that the friends of Gov. Woodrow Wilson are maneuvering so as to have their man made the candidate of the progressive element and force Gov. Harmon before the public as the candidate of the reactionaries, although in Ohio he has done many radical things.

Pennsylvanians Ask Law.

Pennsylvania sportsmen hope to have a boxing commission law, patterned after that now in force in New York, passed at the next session of the Pennsylvania Legislature. Representative C. J. McInerney of Pittsburgh will introduce the bill and within a few weeks it is expected that sporting men will name a committee of representatives to visit New York City and Albany to learn in full detail everything concerning the law now in force in New York.

Don't Gouge Out Your Corns!

Try "Gets-It;" It's The New Way.

So certain, simple, painless and safe is its action that the first trial of "GETS-IT" always produces a profound surprise. It is a corn-cure on a new plan.

It shrivels up the corn, wart, callous or bunion, separates them from the true flesh, the corn comes off, and there you are, with feet that feel positively glorious; corn-free once more as they used to be in your "barefoot days."

The most remarkable feature is that "GETS-IT" does not harm or turn raw the healthy flesh as other preparations do. It is as safe as water. No more plasters, no more bandages, no more salves.

"GETS-IT" is sold at drug stores at 25c a bottle, or sent on receipt of price by E. Lawrence & Co., Chicago, Ill. Sold in Los Angeles by The Owl Drug Co.

(A SCHOOL MOTTO ANALYZED)

THE SUCCESS OF THE STUDENT

Fundamental Principles are the Most Important in the Search for Success.

To Prospective Students:

This motto is a vital element in our school's success. It is because it has VITALITY in it. It has vitality because the idea back of it is fundamental, and because the entire work of the institution is based on this fundamental idea.

Every normal person desires to be successful. YOU have a KEEN DESIRE FOR SUCCESS. Success-desire is a natural instinct. The purpose of education is to develop knowledge and wisdom. These are essential in directing success-desire into channels that will lead to true success.

The ISAACS-WOODBURY does not undertake to teach everything. As far as subjects of study are concerned, its scope is somewhat limited. But as regards effectiveness in what it does undertake to do, this school's scope is far-reaching.

To teach subjects mechanically and in a routine way is one thing. To breathe into every [illegible] taught the breath of life; to inspire every pupil with ambition and self-confidence; to make the person realize that he is a SOVEREIGN in the realm of causes and effects, and that intelligent self-confidence and proper self-appraisement are the foundation of such sovereignty—THIS is quite [illegible] from mechanical teaching. And this brings us to our oft-repeated slogan:

"ALL SCHOOLS ARE NOT ALIKE—THE ISAACS-WOODBURY IS DIFFERENT. IT NOT ONLY TEACHES, BUT INSPIRES—GIVES THE STUDENT A SUCCESS-IMPETUS THAT LASTS THROUGH LIFE, AND LEADS UNFAILINGLY TO POSITION, PRESTIGE AND PROMOTION."

It will thus be seen that the school's motto, "THE SUCCESS OF THE STUDENT," is a [illegible] pregnant with meaning. Every ISAACS-WOODBURY teacher is thoroughly imbued with the [illegible] this means that every student feels its wholesome influence. It is not unusual for parents and [illegible] tally interested in some young person's success to express their heart-felt appreciation of the educational work done by the school; and well they may, for the results obtained, and the changes wrought in the young person's life and thought and trend are often quite wonderful. Such results cannot possibly be obtained by a school basing its success on some bargain-counter offer of cheap tuition or books, or on promises to make you an expert in thirty days, or on the fostering of a merry good-time sentiment among the pupils.

ONLY A SCHOOL THAT IS STRICTLY BUSINESS—A SCHOOL OF ABILITY, STABILITY AND RELIABILITY—CAN ACCOMPLISH RESULTS WORTH WHILE.

The value of such training cannot be measured in dollars and cents—that is to say, the mere money paid cannot measure it—although the student's developed ability to earn dollars and cents in after life is an index to its value.

Cordially yours,

P. S.—Enrollment now very active. Better begin THIS WEEK if ready. At any rate, COME AND SEE US THIS WEEK. If you have not seen our school you will be surprised.

DARROW TO ASK FOR TWO WEEKS.

SAYS DEFENSE IS BEHINDHAND IN PREPARING CASE.

"Unanticipated Litigation" Given as Reason for Requested Continuance of McNamara Trial—District Attorney to Oppose Postponement as Unnecessary and Expensive.

Announcement was made by Chief Counsel Darrow of the McNamara defense yesterday, that when the dynamite case is called for trial on October 11, he will petition Judge Bordwell for a continuance of at least two weeks. The additional time, he alleges, is necessary owing to unanticipated litigation that has arisen since the original trial date was set.

When he learned of Darrow's intention yesterday Assistant District Attorney Ford declared that he will oppose it.

"I believe that the defense has had about all the time they need in this case and more than the law usually allows in the preparation for trial. To grant the defense further time would be to make a mistake. It would mean additional expense to the county and would do no good for the men in jail."

Attorney Darrow states that he will insist upon a continuance. The unanticipated litigation he refers to is the contempt proceedings instituted against Attorney Harrington of the defense, and Mrs. Emma McManigal and George Behm, two of the defense witnesses.

LOS ANGELES NEXT TIME.

Crowd of Boosters to Attend State Realty Convention in San Francisco Next Month.

The seventh annual convention of the California State Realty Federation, which will be held in San Francisco October 11, 12 and 13, is to be attended by fifty members of the Los Angeles Realty Board, and the regular delegates, who are to leave here the afternoon of October 10, aboard the Yale.

The Los Angeles Realty Board will lead in practically all the affairs of the convention, as with its membership of 266 active firms, it has the largest enrollment of any of the boards forming the federation. It will be entitled to twenty-six votes.

In a general way the programme will be arranged as follows:

Wednesday, October 11—Board of Directors meeting, Palace Hotel, 10:30 a.m. Reception to delegates, ball-room, Palace Hotel, and organization of convention, reports of officers, etc.

Thursday, October 12—Convention sessions in the morning, automobile rides about the city, and peninsula section in afternoon. Grand federation banquet at the St. Francis Hotel in the evening.

Friday morning, October 13—Bay excursion and boat landing at Venetia where bullshead breakfast will be served among the redwoods. Sessions in the afternoon. Adjournment in evening.

The ground-breaking exercises of the Panama-Pacific International Exposition will be held in the stadium at the Golden Gate Park at noon, Saturday, October 14, when President Taft will officiate in turning the first spadefull of earth in the work of building the great fair.

James G. Stafford, field and recording secretary of the State organization, has returned from a month's trip through the State, and says that sentiment exists about the bay and in most of the larger towns of the State to choose Los Angeles as the next convention place. The federation was organized here seven years ago, and no meeting has been held here since. The presidency also will be offered a Los Angeles man, if the sentiment expressed in San Francisco and Oaklands find an echo among the remainder of the membership.

Motorcycle Officer, Called to Arrest Woman Who Threw Stones at Car, Ends Trouble by Paying Fare.

The instructions recently issued by the Chief of Police that patrolmen are to exercise common sense in making arrests, was carried out in a novel manner by Motorcycle Officer Bradley of the Hollywood station yesterday afternoon. As a result an elderly Mexican woman reached her home in safety instead of going to the police station.

The woman, whose name the police did not learn, took a car on West Temple street about 4 o'clock in the afternoon, and a few minutes later discovered she had forgotten her purse.

The conductor ordered her to produce a nickel instantly or get off. She did not appear to hear him and he again demanded the fare. When it was not forthcoming he put her off.

Despite her years, which appeared to be about 60, she picked up several stones in the roadway, and with the deftness of a ball player, threw them against the end of the car as it slowly moved away.

The car was stopped again and the police called. It took Bradley but a few minutes to reach the place and he held court in the street.

"What's the trouble?" he asked of the conductor.

"She won't pay her fare and I put her off. Then she threw stones at the car," the conductor answered.

"Why didn't you pay your fare?" the officer asked of the woman.

"I couldn't. I didn't have the money," she answered.

"Why did you throw stones at the car?"

"I'm sorry I did. I just got mad because I must get home."

Bradley hesitated a moment and then, taking a dime from his pocket, handed it to the woman and told her to get on the car.

FINANCIAL.

OFFICE OF THE TIMES.
Los Angeles, Sept. 24, 1911.

BANK CLEARINGS. Bank clearings yesterday were $2,784,401.51. For the corresponding day of 1910, $2,827,990.12; for the same day of 1909, $1,610,408.

LOCAL PRODUCE MARKET.

Business was in good volume. There was a good outlet for the limited offerings of dairy products, and orchard fruits.

Apples and grapes were about the only fruits of which offerings were liberal, but no material change was noted in prices.

There was a fair call for Salway peaches and prices were well sustained on good stock.

Fancy packed Bartlett pears were in good demand, and prices were held firm around 5 cents a pound.

Nectarines were in fair supply, but there was little demand for most of the stock offered.

Quince offerings were large, but the market attracted little attention. They were quoted from $1 to $1.25 a lug box.

There was no change in the green vegetable situation. Receipts were in keeping with the demand and the market ruled firm.

The dry bean market may be characterized as firm to steady, there was a weakness in pink beans, and new Limas, while Lady Washington and small white were steady to firm. The new Lima crop this year is large and the quality good.

There was no change in market quotations on potatoes and a difference of opinion exists as to the condition of the market, but viewing the matter from all sides, it is hardly likely that any material change will result immediately. Receipts are about in keeping with the present demand. Receipts were 3365 sacks.

Egg receipts continue light. The tone of the market is firm on strictly fresh stock. Dealers assert that a further advance in prices in the near future would not be unexpected if the receipts run as light as they have been during the past week. Receipts were 123 cases.

Butter receipts were 22,612 pounds. The market ruled steady to firm. The bulk of the receipts were of inferior stock, but it was in no great demand.

Cheese receipts were 876 pounds. The market was firm under the light offerings. There was a good call for Northern fresh.

Sweet potato receipts were 70 sacks. The market was weak.

Bean receipts were 15 sacks. Apple receipts were 22,836 boxes.

There was an advance of 20 points in sugar.

SAN FRANCISCO EXCHANGE.

Mining Market Is Dull, Without Any Special Feature to Recommend It—Goldfield Con. Slips Back.

[Special Service to The Times by B. F. Taylor, 118 West Fourth street, Los Angeles.]

SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23—The market was dull today and without any special feature. Belmont was 2½ points weaker. West End was up 2. Montana was up 3.

In the Goldfield list Consolidated slipped back 5, Jumbo Ex one, Florence was unchanged. Merger was one point weaker. Stocks in the outlying camps were unchanged on a small volume of business.

Mexican was up 5 points, Sierra 6, Union 10, on short covering. Compared with last Saturday Belmont was up 57½ points due to the strike on the 1200. Tonopah Ex was up 5, Midway was off 5, Goldfield Con. shows a loss of 10, Florence was up 2½. Mexican is down 45, Conva 5, Union 30, Nevada Hills shows a 25 point gain.

Following are the closing bid and asked prices:

LOS ANGELES EXCHANGE.

This Market Has Shared in the General Slump All Over the Country—Tendency Downward.

Stock Exchanges throughout the country have had their own troubles for the past few weeks, and the local exchange has been no exception to the rule. The tendency in the main has been downward, and the bears have been in the saddle. The closing day of the week here saw Consolidated Midway make another slight gain, closing at 5¼ bid. Mexican Petroleum common again slipped back 25 cents a share, while the Union issues recovered to some extent. Union Oil closed at 90.87½, up 62½.

Taken as a whole, the past week was not very alluring to the local brokers, although the uprise of Consolidated Midway enabled some of them to get away with a good profit. The general depreciation in investment stocks throughout the country has had its effect locally, and until things look up on Wall street the local traders do not look for much activity in this city.

Yesterday there were some sales in Consolidated Mines and Searchlight Parallel at fair prices. In the other lists the activity was nil.

Scare Over the Rejection of Reciprocity by the Canadians Passes Out of the Reckoning of the Traders on the Chicago Board of Trade.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

CHICAGO, Sept. 23.—Although the wheat market today touched the highest point of the season, the scare over the rejection of reciprocity was apparently at an end. Transactions on the whole were of a humdrum sort with the close steady at a moderate advance ⅜@½ above last night. Corn finished unchanged to ⅛ lower, oats up ⅛ to ¼ and provisions dearer by 2½ to 15. It was in the last hour of the session that the top prices for wheat were scored. News of Kansas sales of the hard winter grade to California and Texas aroused a feeling that millers at Minneapolis and elsewhere might find unexpectedly sharp competition for supplies. The December option rose to within ⅛c of the dollar mark, surpassing by more than 1 cent the figures that stood last night after the excitement due to the Canadian election had been at work. Good-sized sales of flour, notwithstanding 40 cents a barrel rise in price within two days, had considerable to do also with the late rally in wheat. December ranged from 98¼ to 99⅞ with last sales ⅜@½ net higher at 99⅜@99½. Better weather, leading to a belief that receipts next week would be larger, made corn easy most of the day. December fluctuated from 64 to 64⅝ and closed steady ⅛ net lower at 64¼. Cash grades were not being offered so freely. No. 2 yellow finished at 68¼@68½. Notwithstanding a large increase of country sales early carried down oats, demand from the East was on the mend late in the day. High and low levels for December proved to be 47⅜ and 46⅞@47, with the close showing ⅛ net gain at 47⅛. Shorts were good buyers of provisions. The outcome left pork 5 cents dearer, lard more costly by 2½ to 12½ and ribs the same as last night to 15 advance.

Cash quotations were as follows: Flour, unsettled, millers asking higher prices; winter patents, 4.00@4.65; straights, 3.15@4.45; spring patents, best hard, 4.00@6.25; straights, 4.60@4.90; bakers, 3.60@4.85; No. 2 rye, 92@94; feed or mixing barley, 70@96; timothy seed, 12.50@14.75; clover, 19.00; mess pork, per barrel, 15.25@15.50; lard, per 100 pounds, 9.52½; short ribs, sides (loose,) 8.62½@9.25.

New York Cotton Market.

[Special Service to The Times by E. F. Hutton & Co., Members N. Y. Stock Exchange, 118 West Fourth street, Los Angeles.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Owing to prospects for good weather over Sunday, especially in Texas, operators were inclined to sell aggressively today. The South had selling orders here again this morning, but was sufficient support to prevent any drastic decline. If the weather conditions are favorable over Sunday, heavy receipts are expected next week, and barring a possible rally of 16 to 18 points, which may or may not occur following the opening Monday, lower prices for the general option list may be expected next week. Stocks at 33 interior towns on Friday were 217,461 bales against 199,361 last year and are expected to accumulate very rapidly from now on, due to comparatively small spot demand in consequence of hand to mouth buying policy of spinners.

Logan & Bryan's letter says:

"The market was comparatively quiet today and the violent fluctuations that have characterized the trading recently was not in evidence. Prices ranged at a slightly lower level with a moderate amount of liquidation still going on and selling continues against the heavy movement, but there is a constant absorption of contracts by spinning interests, both domestic and foreign, going on and with the decreasing weight of liquidation there is more evidence of steadiness. Dry goods trade is moving in larger volume and with more confidence than for some time and the recent decline in raw material of about one cent per pound has not disturbed the steady trade going on or reduced values in manufacturers' goods. In fact, some lines for export have been advancing during the past two weeks and the demand still comes forward for more goods. The collapse of the September deal in Liverpool by which spots are brought to a more normal basis with contracts, should result in an increased business in that market. Sentiment remains one sided, almost unanimously bearish and outstanding lines on that side are largely based on the heavy receipts, but as the season progresses the comparisons will become less glaring and the revival in demand for goods will reflect itself in the absorption of the raw materials."

BOSTON (Mass.) Sept. 23.—The local coppers are unchanged, sagging slightly of their own weight but showing no liquidation, and we do not anticipate any further trouble in the local situation.

From the complete Finlay report now in our possession we are in a position to give in detail his most important data on the mines, which were investigated by this well-known engineer in his recent examination made for the State of Michigan. It is interesting to know what the figures on present valuation amount to per share placed on the outstanding capital and we have appended to Mr. Finlay's data a column showing these results:

Beyond this amount, prospective.

In valuing the mines, Mr. Finlay has used the annuity method to arrive at the present value. That is, a sum is calculated upon which the series of dividends will pay 5 per cent. interest and also provide each year a sinking fund installment, which invested each year at 4 per cent. interest and added to prior installments similarly invested and reinvested, will equal the sum taken. This sum is the amount which an investor can afford to pay for the property.

In the above calculations the pounds of copper and the life of the mine are not at all assured as in the case of similar tables on the porphyry mines which we have issued. In the case of the above table it is simply an assumption that the mines may ultimately produce this amount of copper, in which case they would have the life shown.

One of the leading sellers of copper tells us: "Business is slow at the moment due to uncertainty and we may have a temporary slackening off, but it must not be forgotten that in this country total stocks of electrolytic copper only amount to a three weeks' supply and we need such a stock for a working balance. Therefore looking at the copper situation in a broad way I am not pessimistic. I appreciate that there is a substantial supply of new copper coming on the market next year, but we will need that copper for it will prevent prices going upon an unhealthy basis. I can foresee an enormous consumption of copper ahead a few years hence. Today I doubt if electricity has superceeded steam more than 5 per cent. Eventually it will surplant it 100 per cent., and that means copper. With production from old mines steadily declining I cannot but be optimistic of the future, though temporarily we may have a falling off in business."

J. Parke Channing estimates the production of copper in 1912 over 1911 at 200,000,000 pounds.

A total of 56,000,000 pounds of copper may be considered the "new output" for this year in the United States from the so-called porphyry mines. Of this, the Utah Copper Company will contribute 11,000,000 pounds. This will bring Utah's yield up to at least 100,000,-000 pounds, which figure, however, may be slightly exceeded. Thus far this year two new producers have entered the ranks, Ray Consolidated and Miami, both having started operations last March. Ray Consolidated, it is estimated, should record a mine production of 25,000,000 pounds by the end of December and Miami 15,000,000 pounds up to the same time. The first unit at the Chino mill has been scheduled to start September 15 and before the end of the year three of its four units should be in commission and about 5,-000,000 pounds produced by the end of December. The last or fourth unit will not be started until next year. Against 56,000,000 pounds of new copper from these four properties, there will probably be 171,000,000 pounds of new output from the same sources during 1912 of which Utah's gain should be 46,000,000 pounds (over the 1910 yield.) Ray's production 60,000,000 pounds, Chino's 35,000,000 pounds and Miami's 30,000,000 pounds. Utah Copper next year is expected to produce fully 125,000,000 pounds

BEAUTIFUL CALM IN STOCK MARKET

CRUSH ON UNITED STATES STEEL IS ENDED.

Extreme Nervousness of the Preceding Day Disappears from Wall Street and the Movement, While Uncertain, Are Not Large—Rallies and Reactions Quite Frequent.

[BY A. P. NIGHT WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—Contrasted with yesterday's tempestuous trading, the stock market today was surprisingly calm. There was no further crush of liquidation in United States Steel and the extreme nervousness of the preceding day disappeared. Movements of stocks while uncertain, were not large. Following the advance in stocks in London, the market opened with a majority of gain. United States Steel sold at 57¼, a gain of 1¼ from yesterday's close. The preferred opened at 106¾, a gain of a point. Rallies and reactions were frequent. Early in the trading the common stock fell two points but quickly recovered. At the close the preferred stock was unchanged and the common half a point higher on the day. A conspicuous feature was the strength of high-class railroad stocks, Union Pacific, Reading and Lehigh Valley advanced more than a point, although the gains were lost later. The Hill stocks were comparatively neglected and Canadian reciprocity as an issue showed to have been relegated to the realm of things forgotten. London was a persistent buyer, taking large amounts of United States Steel and the active railway issues. Acute weakness developed in the copper stocks. American Smelting and Amalgamated Copper fell to the lowest point since 1908, with no news to account for the movement, other than mere rumors of possible government investigation. The bond market was irregular. Sales, par value $1,845,000. United States bonds were unchanged on call on the week.

ROBBED IN LONDON.

Rich American Widow Loses Jewels Worth Ten Thousand Dollars to a Steamship Acquaintance.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—That she was robbed of $15,000 of jewels by a steamship acquaintance in London was the story told by Mrs. H. E. Myers, a widow, to customs inspectors on her return to New York on the steamer Celtic last night in explaining why she did not have the jewelry she had listed on her departure for Europe on the Lapland in August.

Mrs. Myers, who still had left jewelry appraised at more than $10,000, said that on the trip over she had met an ingratiating Cuban, who subsequently called upon her in London with a woman companion and persuaded her to take a ride in a cab.

While in a remote part of the city the pair attacked her and although she "fought like a tiger," they succeeded in getting away from her a $4000 diamond ring, a diamond heart worth $1000, other jewelry and $1000 in cash.

A MINISTER'S DUTY.

Twice Offered Ten Thousand Dollars Bishop Says Newport, R. I., Clergyman Rejected the Money.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

ANTIGO (Wis.) Sept. 23.—That a Methodist minister of a little church near Newport, R. I., refused $10,000 to perform the marriage ceremony of Col. Astor and Miss Madeline Force, was the announcement of Bishop John W. Hamilton of New York before the Methodist conference here today.

A wealthy layman, according to the Bishop, offered the clergyman an equal sum to recompense him for the loss, but this tender was also refused, the clergyman saying he had only done his duty.

The Rev. Frederick L. Brooks, pastor of the Methodist church at Little Compton, is believed to have been the clergyman mentioned.

FIRE ON A SHIP.

Deck Hand Drops a Cigarette and the Crew of Santa Clara Work Hard to Keep Her Afloat.

[BY A. P. DAY WIRE TO THE TIMES.]

NEW YORK, Sept. 23.—With a smouldering fire in her after hold for a week, the Santa Clara of the American and Cuba line, with a cargo of Mexican hemp, is being cared for by the experts of the New York fire boat squad at her Staten Island pier today. Large holes burned through her after hatches show how narrow was the boat's escape.

The Santa Clara steamed from Progresso, Mexico, last Saturday and in the afternoon the flames were discovered. After a desperate struggle Capt. E. Prachy and his crew drove the fire back to the hold and thereafter kept a constant stream of water going through the ventilators.

The fire was started by a careless deckhand dropping a lighted cigarette.

WALL STREET BADLY SHAKEN.

Liquidation in Steel Proves Curious Mystery.

All Other Stocks Show Remarkable Strength.

Showing Made by Los Angeles National Banks.

During the past week the market shake-up was one of the greatest that has occurred for many months. The depreciation in steel was unusual, showing a paper loss of millions. In regard to the situation, Louis N. Stott, manager of the local branch of Logan & Bryan, has this to say:

"It is doubtful if Wall street has ever had an experience like that of the last week. It has had many mysterious stock movements, but always heretofore the reason has been eventually self-evident to everyone. The cause of the severe liquidation in steel was as much of a mystery on Saturday's close as when it began. The real reasons are undoubtedly many, but the main cause was probably due to the fact that one or two important holders of these securities suddenly became convinced that the company was facing a government suit in which the government would be successful, and threw their holdings on the market. The technical condition of the market in these stocks happened to be such that this selling caused the first break.

"This break, especially in the preferred stock, frightened many other holders and the psychological condition did the rest until the market received vigorous support from the strongest interests in the street. Stories to the effect that the stock was the object of a gigantic bear raid do not seem probable. Men of sufficient financial standing who could successfully carry out such a plan, are in this day and generation decidedly opposed to such tactics.

"The remarkable strength shown in practically all other stocks on the list during this violent liquidation in steel, show that these very men were using their efforts in other directions to avoid a complete demoralization of the whole market. The large volume of transactions in stocks during the latter part of the week seem to indicate that the present decline is about over. This does not mean that stocks will not sell lower later, but that the market should have a healthy up-turn in the meantime.

"The defeat by the Canadians of the reciprocity agreement came as a complete surprise to a great majority of people in this country, and will have a further depressing effect on general business conditions. The price of wheat and oats has been materially strengthened and the prices of all cereals will undoubtedly be much higher by next spring. Few people realize the great loss shown this year in oats, corn, hay, potatoes and all vegetables in all countries in the northern hemisphere. It is primarily due to this fact that we read of food riots in some of the foreign countries. Also the Argentine has lost practically its entire corn crop, and corn is selling in Buenos Ayres at a value equivalent of $1.12 a bushel. This means we must supply Europe this year with much of this cereal."

City's National Banks.

The condition of the national banks of Los Angeles at the close of business on September 1, as reported to the Comptroller of the Currency, showed an average reserve of 28.69 per cent. as compared with 28.02 per cent. on June 7. The loans and discounts increased from $33,334,790 to $38,875,-823; gold coin from $4,976,436 to $6,-252,717; lawful money reserve from $7,791,744 to $8,403,197; individual deposits decreased from $37,625,426 to $37,056,907.

MANY JOIN THE CHAMBER.

Porterville Civic Body is Growing By Leaps and Bounds. Angeleno Organizing New Gas Company.

PORTERVILLE, Sept. 23.—More than eighty applications were filed with the directors at their meeting last night for membership in the Porterville Chamber of Commerce. When all these requests for admission had been granted the secretary, Leslie W. Laumeister, announced that the list of active members is inclusive of the names of nearly 300 business and professional men of this city and the immediately surrounding district.

It was announced at the meeting of the directors that the sumptuous new club rooms, which are now being completed for the Chamber, will be ready for occupancy by October 5. On that evening the men will have a smoker, at which the plans for the coming winter will be discussed and practical plans will be proposed for the elimination of the "knocker" and discouraging of adverse comments upon lands which are for sale in districts immediately surrounding that of Porterville.

NEW GAS COMPANY.

H. W. Ritz of Los Angeles, who is interested in various gas consolidation schemes throughout Southern California, has arrived here to take charge of the organization of the new Central Counties Gas Company, which was formed in a meeting held in Los Angeles a few weeks ago, and which is to include the gas plants of Porterville, Visalia, Lemoore and Hanford, and which is to supply with fuel and illuminating gas the cities named, as well as Exeter, Lindsay, Strathmore, Ducor, Terra Bella and Tulare.

Work is to be started on the high pressure line which will connect the towns named within the week. The central organization headquarters is to be in Porterville and the development work will be directed from the offices in this city.

LEMON PICKING.

Lemon picking started in the Zante district today, much earlier than at any previous time in the history of the industry in this district.

According to the best advices which are available this early in the season, the total production from this district this year will be about 30 per cent. in excess of that for 1910-11.

It is stated that the fruit is exceptional in quality and that it promises to color extremely well.

As various packing houses have added to their curing room equipments the fruit this year can be handled promptly and there will be no waits for curing rooms.

Porterville and Tulare are engaged in deadly combat over the location for the proposed state highway through this district, the Porterville people insisting that the terms of the law under which the $18,000,000 highway was authorized practically direct that the road shall be located through the east side and over the so-called "orange grove route" and the Tulare people being equally firm in their position that the west side should be given the road.

In the law which authorizes the road, the east siders say, it is directed that the route shall be laid through centers of population, which would exclude the west side south of Tulare, which has just started to develop, and that the commission shall also take into consideration the accessibility of road-building material.

In the latter respect Porterville is better situated than any other portion of the county. In the foothills above the proposed "orange grove route" there are thousands of acres of land underlaid with granite rock which makes the very best of material for macadam.

These things are being urged by a permanent lobby which has done good service thus far and which will submit, personally, to the commission at Sacramento, the claims of this district.

VICTIM OF GAS.

DUTCH FLAT (Cal.) Sept. 23.—Gas accumulated in an abandoned shaft of the Pioneer mine, near here, proved fatal yesterday to T. Pampare, an Austrian miner, while George Samaidkeoh, a fellow workman, is in a critical condition. The men were working in a cross-cut and broke into the old shaft. Before they could escape, the gas overcame them.

APARTMENTS INVADE ADAMS.

The building, which cost about $35,000, is of class "C" construction, with concrete foundations and brick superstructure. The front is faced with cream pressed brick. The height is three stories.

Land Near Venice Bought for Three Hundred Dollars an Acre, Sells at a Thousand.

W. O. Emerson, of the real estate firm of H. G. Holabird and Company has just concluded the purchase of forty-six and a fraction acres of land situated on Washington boulevard about one mile this side of Venice. The property is improved with a seven-room cottage and electric pumping plant, otherwise is pracically unimproved with the exception of a bean crop.

This property was formerly owned by M. A. Miller, who received $1000 an acre for his land. Mr. Miller purchased this land seven years ago at in the neighborhood of $300 an acre and in that seven years, is said to have cleared up on this and another small piece he has, $50,000 on increase of value.

Another interesting case which goes to show that Los Angtles has "the surrounding country," is illustrated on Washington boulevard. A baker purchased twenty acres of land on the boulevard about six years ago planted it to walnut trees with peach trees in between. In five years this man is said to have taken in actual cash from this place, $17,123. H. G. Holabird and Company report that they have a deal almost concluded for his twenty acres at a price of $1500 per acre.

RESALE NETS PROFIT.

Washington Boulevard Acreage Near Palms Changes Hands at Good Price.

Alexander MacKeigan reports having sold during the past week to F. B. Silverwood and associates, thirty-five acres of land located on Washington boulevard, and situated about midway between the Palms and Venice, for approximately $45,000. The property was owned by Van Winkle & Funk, who purchased it through the same agent less than sixtv days ago for a reported consideration of $40,000.

The land is unimproved and has a frontage of 1000 feet on the boulevard and 1600 feet on Alla county road. It was bought as an investment. This makes the twelfth piece of acreage which has changed hands on Washington boulevard within the past sixty days. In all 220 acres have been sold for approximately $250,000, and at prices ranging from $1000 to $1300 an acre.

CLOSE TEN-YEAR LEASES.

The lease of twenty feet frontage at No. 626 South Spring street to Jacob Rawak, a cigar dealer, is reported by W. B. Merwin & Company and Metcalf & Ryan. Through the same agencies L. H. Applegate has leased twenty feet at No. 628 South Spring street, which he will use for a restaurant business conducted something after the order of the Child's restaurants in the large eastern cities. A similar frontage at No. 640 South Spring street has been leased to the Hylo Shoe Company through W. B. Merwin & Company and Bryan & Bradford. In each instance the lease is for ten years and at an approximate total rental of $50,000. The three stores are in a one-story brick building to be erected by the Spring Street Leasehold Company, which holds a ninety-nine-year lease on the sixty feet at the three numbers named.

ASSERT ARIZONA HURT BY RATES.

SHIPPERS SAY MORE CHARGED IN MANY CASES.

Complaint Is Made to Representative of Interstate Commerce Commission that Freight Hauls Are Higher There Than to Many Points Farther East.

Franklin K. Lane, of the Interstate Commerce Commission, has gone to Houston, after closing the hearings here, one of which concerned freight rates in Arizona, and the other was an inquiry into pipeline companies. The pieline hearing will we continued in Houston Monday.

Complaints of discrimination in freight rates were made by Arizona shippers.

It was asserted that the discrimination covers a number of articles, including soap, tea, print paper, blasting powder, lumber and live stock. It was shown that there are lower rates on these staples to many points much farther removed from Los Angeles than any point in Arizona.

It was shown tha tthe rate on soap from Los Angeles to Kansas City is 80 cents per hundred pounds, as against a rate of 82 cents to Phoenix. Until recently the latter rate was $1.08. Print paper is shipped at a rate of 75 cents to Colorado and $1.08 to Phoenix. There is a ratt of $1.59 on blasting powder from San Francisco and Los Ongeles to El Paso, while the rate to Phoenix, less than half the distance, is $1.74. On lumber the rate is $8 from San Pedro and $3.60 to Red Rock, a point farther east.

Cattle men complained that they have to pay $128.60 per car to Los Angeles, while the Southern Pacific makes a rate of 108 per car from El Paso.

WALKS INTO PENSION. WATCHMAN'S LONG HIKE.

Having walked eighteen miles a day for thirty-one years through the snowsheds of the Southern Pacific at the summit of the Sierra Nevada Mountains, the name of Manuel K. Silva has been placed on the company's pension list.

Silva, describing the hardships endured in that cold and sparsely settled section said:

"I covered a beat of three miles over which I have made three round trips every night for thirty-one years. Figure it out—6570 miles in a year and 203,670 miles in thirty-one years, more than eight times around the world."

Silva, who is 61 years old, is a native of Portugal and is now on a visit to that country with his wife. He entered the Southern Pacific service as a section hand in 1879, and a year later became a shed watchman on the night shift. He has worked faithfully and steadily, having been absent from duty only twice and then because of sickness. Not a complaint has been registered against him.

Upon his return from Europe he proposes to make his home in the vicinity of the mountains which he has learned to love.

He has a record that few shed watchmen or track walkers can equal. He is one of nearly 1000 employees who are now enjoying pensions from the Southern Pacific Company. The pension system is voluntary on the part of the railroad, length of service being the only requirement.

Another Steamship Line.

Arrangements have been completed for the extension of the service of the Compania Naviera del Pacifico to Los Angeles, as told in The Times some weeks ago. It is the purpose of this, the largest and oldest steamship company operating along the coast of Mexico, to make Los Angeles a regular port of call. The company now operates between San Diego and Mazatlan, but will put on a schedule by which its boats will make six calls a month at San Pedro.

Wants a Franchise.

The Los Angeles Railway Corporation is preparing to ask for a franchise that will permit the building of an extension of its East First-street line to Eastlake Park. The company requires only permission to cross the El Monte road on an elevated structure.

FINED FOR BEING GAY.

Teamster, Who Tore Up Service Papers, Told By Court Similar Offense Might Mean Jail.

C. E. Garner, a teamster, was fined $5 yesterday by Justice Summerfield for contempt of court. He was admonished that if he was brought back on a similar charge he would be fined $100 and in default would be sent to jail.

The complaint stated that when an attachment secured by the National Adjustment Company, in favor of A. L. Sorer, for money due, was served upon Garner, he proceeded to show his opinion of the court and its processes by tearing up the document in the face of the serving officer.

UNION LEAGUE LADIES' NIGHT.

The first "ladies' night" at the Union League Club will be held Tuesday night when one of the club's famous table d'hote dinners will be served. After the dinner Prof. Baumgardt will deliver his lecture on the "Life of Napoleon," and exhibit colored photographs.

Productive
PLANADA acres

Why not own 5, 10, 20 or 40 acres in Merced, the first prize County in California? Planada is on the main line of the Santa Fe, 10 miles east of Merced, in the richest section of Merced County. Planada Acres offer every inducement to the settler—adjacent to the growing "City Beautiful" with every home comfort, churches, schools and amusements.

You can be independent on a small Planada ranch and make enough to pay for it before the final payment becomes due. All kinds of deciduous fruits, berries, melons and grain produce bumper crops at Planada—plenty of water, with a pumping lift of 25 feet—practically virgin soil.

Investigate this today. Let us show you our exhibit of Planada products and tell you how you can become independent on a small ranch.

Stop Taking Drugs!
Nature's Remedy Cures While You Sleep

If you are drugging we want you to stop it now. Drugs can't cure you. Instead of building up, drugs tear down, because they contain poison instead of nourishment. When you are ailing you need something that gives strength, new vitality to the body. Drugs lower the vitality and cause an ailment to become chronic.

The only way to cure anything is to help nature. Drugs don't do that. Nature will cure when she has the power—electricity.

Electricity is nature's medicine. It cures by giving strength, new life to the body. It removes the cause of disease by supplying to the body the force it lacks, enabling every organ to perform its work properly, and when every organ is in a healthy condition there can be no pain or disease.

Feed electricity to your nerves. They will absorb and carry it to every organ and tissue, giving health and strength to every ailing part.

Electra-Vita is an electric body battery, applied while you sleep. It infuses a stream of electric life into the body all night long. It does not shock or blister. The only sensation is a mild, soothing glow.

Electra-Vita makes its own power and is always charged, ready for use. All you have to do is adjust it correctly and turn on the current to the proper degree of strength.

People who suffer from chronic ailments, stomach and kidney troubles, weakness of any kind, dyspepsia, rheumatism, pains and aches, lumbago and similar complaints can get back their health and strength through the use of Electra-Vita. It costs less than a course of drugging.

FACT AND COMMENT.

Colegrove is almost indistinguishable in many places.

The westward trend has been marked for years and the time is not far away when Sherman, Beverly and Hollywood will be one continuous development. Probably the most striking feature of Hollywood's expansion has been the advance of the city toward the base of the foothills. There are many persons who think the foothill section of Hollywood the most beautiful and interesting of the sights of Southern California.

Hollywood's future is sure. The advent of proper crosstown facilities alone in the foothill district will mean a great progressive movement in the section. The railway through Cahuenga Pass to Lankershim and Van Nuys and through to Ventura will prove of incalculable benefit to Hollywood, which will necessarily become the first stopping point for those traveling from the San Fernando Valley to Los Angeles. Hollywood, in fact, expects to profit greatly in a business way through this significant project.

Three lines now run to Melrose avenue and these, the residents of Hollywood hope, will be extended to the foothills. Adequate transportation will insure one important consummation, the building up of Los Angeles from the south line of Colegrove to Temple street, making the western and northwestern portions of Los Angeles a compactly settled and integral part of the city. Hollywood, it must be conceded, has made surprisingly little fuss about transportation improvements, considering the certain benefits that would follow such developments.

The good roads improvements to the west of Hollywood will inevitably result in the substantial upbuilding of the entire region between Gardner Junction and the mouth of Laurel Canyon. The early carrying out of the great Sunset boulevard project in its entirety will also mean much to the Hollywood section. Sunset boulevard, as a matter of fact, should long ago have been carried on to its terminus at the Plaza and not only Hollywood but Los Angeles at large is the loser through the delay of this splendid part of the contemplated "city beautiful" programme.

The early execution of the plans for the improvement of Griffith Park is also devoutly prayed for by all the residents of Hollywood. The host of persons who visit the great park every Sunday is sufficient evidence of the popularity of this splendid municipal project, notwithstanding the poor facilities for access at present provided. The plan of condemning sufficient property to cut an entrance into the park from Western avenue is followed with interest by all the people of Hollywood.

RINCON ROAD BOOSTERS HERE.

Money Needed for Project Which Means So Much.

Fifteen Miles of Smooth Road Toward Channel City.

Dangerous Casitas Pass Soon to Be Abandoned.

Philip H. Rice, chairman of the Rincon Road Committee, and Sol N. Sheridan, secretary, were in Los Angeles yesterday feeling the pulse of this good roads situation. They learned that San Francisio has given just twice as much as Los Angeles toward the project. This was not a pleasant report, but the committeemen are not at all discouraged. They have most of the money in sight, and all that remains to make the project a grand success is for the boosters at this end of the road to get in and hustle for the Rincon highway.

This road is to be built from Ventura to Carpinteria and will cut out the twenty-four miles of Casitas Pass road, where Dr. and Mrs. Pillbury were killed so recently, and will provide a straight stretch of road of fifteen miles long.

The people of Santa Barbara are lined up for this project, says Rice, whose home is in the Channel City. Sheridan is a Ventura man, a former newspaper writer and war correspondent who knows just how to jump into the thick of a fight. It is a cinch this road will be built, but those who are looking the situation squarely in the face are willing to admit that Los Angeles should give a little more money toward the good roads scheme.

This Rincon sea-level road is a project which will appeal to all autoists. All grades are overcome. The Canejo can be used if necessary, but the dangerous Casitas will be closed. The drive to Santa Barbara or from Santa Barbara to Los Angeles would then be ideal and thousands of tourists who are now afraid to make the run, could be persuaded to make the journey over the smooth highway.

anta Monica Road Race Holds the Boards.

Bully for You, Hanshue.

ERCER IN SANTA MONICA AUTOMOBILE ROAD CLASSIC

core of Speed Marvels to Start Over Fastest Course Earth in Fight for Ten-Thousand Dollar Prize. ntry List Grows and Race Promises to Be Greatest ver Held on Pacific Coast.

BY BERT C. SMITH.

HARRIS HANSHUE, winner of the first Santa Monica automobile road race, will drive a Mercer in the fierce road battle this year. At a late hour last night F. W. Force, the local Mercer agent, re- ved a wire from Trenton saying the car is to be shipped at once from Mercer factory.

Stripped for action and with only a carburetor adjustment neces- y, the Mercer will reach here ready for Hanshue to start over the rse. The great road race driver is prepared for a dash in an effort regain the laurels he captured two years ago.

The Mercer will be entered in the medium class event. In addition this it will be started in the free-for-all. This is a duplicate of the which won its class in the Elgin road race. The entry of the Mercer ets all the dope on the big event. The Mercer will be a favorite in class.

That Hanshue is the greatest automobile road race driver in the st is the opinion of almost every motor fan. With as fast a car as Mercer, Hanshue figures to win again. He is in first-class shape and dy once more for the race of his life.

thousand dollars in prizes for nta Monica road race. This is m total to date and A. M. Young, man of the Road Race Commit- e made good his assertion that 10,000 mark would be reached orrect. The money is in sight. the free-for-all a prize of $3000 red. In addition to this a prize 00 is offered by the Remy Mag- people and a prize of $1000 by plitdorf concern. Other fat cash s are offered by the Schebler retor people, and the Stromberg uretor plant.

the stock car race a prize of is offered and in the medium event a like amount has been up. These two races will be d off at the same time. This s another prize of $3000 to be t for over that 8.3 miles course. the light event a purse of $1000 e prize. This money, like the prizes, is to be divided at a 0 and 10 per cent. rate. The rs will have something worth ng for and will be sent out to win old prize, which is the largest offered for any road race held in West.

n T. Shettler will not be the r. Instead of sending the cars he will step aside and allow Fred ner, official starter for the Automobile Association of America, to e the flags. Wagner has officiated almost every big race held in this untry and immediately after the rmont Park event Wagner will start r Los Angeles.

Fred Moskovics of the Remy Mag- o Company will also make Los ngeles his headquarters during and r a time after the big race. He wired oung yesterday that he will be here time to see the big battle of fast otor cars.

FAST CARS.

In addition to the seven classy en- ies in the free-for-all a Simplex rac- g car has been shipped here and this peedy machine will figure in the big ontest. It is the same car that was riven into honors on the Indianapolis otor Speedway in the 500-mile event.

Four Marmon racing cars will be hipped out here for the race. These ars are soon to be started and will be ere in time for the first practice, ten ays before Saturday, October 14. The urse will then be thrown open for e speedsters and the machines will e sent away at a terrific pace in reparation for the long grind.

The National racing cars are soon to e started toward the Pacific Coast. hese speedsters will be handled by eterans who know just how to grasp very advantage. Howard Wilcox will rive one and Charles Merz the other. here is a possibility that a third Na- ional will be sent out here to race.

MERCER ENTERS.

Two Cole "Thirties," one of them riven by Johnny Jenkins, will figure n the stock and light events. These wo speedsters will be hard to beat. Harris Hanenue and the Mercer will ook up in a fierce tussle with the oles. It is rather early, however, to rophesy or choose a possible winner n this event.

The Lexington is to be handled by Charles Bigelow. Here is a car that it ould be well to watch. It is a speedy achine with a motor that is snappy d particularly classy. Bigelow is [illegible] his car. When the course is should make a strong bid for first place.

There is little likelihood that an Apperson will figure in the big race. Leon T. Shettler has lost his vim when it comes to racing. He has no desire to start again over the fast course. He won the first race and showed his class. He has rested on his honors since. Last year he tried but finished in hard luck. Now Hanshue will drive a Mercer.

Silver trophies are being offered for the big event. The Dick Ferris cup, a handsome $1000 trophy, goes to the winner of the free-for-all. This cup is one of the handsomest ever offered for any racing event in the West. It was won the first year by the Apperson and last year went to the Lozier.

CUPS READY.

The Leon T. Shettler cup goes to the winner of the heavy car event. This trophy cost $500 and is a handsome silver cup worth making a fight for when in addition a prize of $1500 has been hung up. This cup with the bonuses also offered means a gold prize of great value.

The Peter Jepsen silver trophy has been offered for the medium car event and the cars will be shot away for another $1500 purse in this race. Again the bonuses apply in the two events which are to be pulled off together.

A third cup has been added to the list of prizes in the Santa Monica road race. The Chansior and Lyon Motor Supply Company has donated a perpetual challenge trophy for the light car race.

The new cup will be especially designed and will be one of the handsomest offered in competition. This is the fourth cup which the local supply house has put in competition. Two are for road records and a third was offered for the Redlands hill climb last year. The Chansior and Lion trophy for the trip to San Diego and return has been hard fought for and also the cup for the run from San Francisco to Del Monte and return.

Walter Chansior, who [illegible] the has taken an active part in events of this nature. At the first Santa Monica road race his firm put up a beautiful cup for the car making the most consistent performance. This was won by Ralph Hamlin.

Chansior looks upon the Santa Monica as one of the greatest road races in the world and he believes the small car events will arouse much enthusiasm and attract attention the country over. Phil Lyon, the other member of the firm, who has been managing the new Portland branch, will be here for the big race.

HUSTLERS.

Every member of the road race committee is working hard. Lewis Schwaebe is handling the work of putting the course into shape. He is doing wonders when it comes to hammering the roads into condition for the speed trials.

Ralph Hamlin has the financial end of the contest. There is plenty of money in sight to make certain the paying of all bills. This takes one of the worries off the shoulders of A. M. Young.

Charles Cotton is handling the grand stand work and the big wooden monument is half built. The boxes are to be rushed into place and if you want yours you had better speak quickly.

Bill Ruess has the prizes in sight. He has done remarkably well when it comes to figures. The $10,000 will be hung in the balance on Saturday.

LONG AUTO HIGHWAY.

Plan Also Approved to Hold Auto Race Meets This Coming Year in Golden Gate Park.

The Wisconsin State Automobile Association has plans under way for taking up a project with the Wisconsin State Highway Commission for establishing a trunk road from Lake Michigan across the State of Wisconsin to the Mississippi River. Letters have been addressed to the members of the highway commission asking that a hearing be granted at which facts and figures in support of the proposition will be presented.

It is said the officers of the Panama-Pacific Exposition will ask for sanctions for road races to be held on Washington's Birthday in California in 1912, 1913, 1914 and 1915. It is planned to make the last a contest with cash prizes so large that the best known drivers will compete. Golden Gate Park, with an available course of eleven miles and a straightaway of four miles on the ocean boulevard, will be the scene of the contests. Large cash prizes will be offered with bronze plaques as trophies.

Harris Hanshue, Winner of the First Santa Monica Road Race, d the Mercer he will drive. This speed marvel has been stripped for the fray and will be started in the stock event and in the free-for-all Saturday, October 14. The Mercer will be a favorite in its class.

Big Business.

MOTOR PLANT SOON READY.

Moreland Truck Factory to Have Large Capacity.

Gas Mixer May Solve Some of Fuel Problems.

Large Force of Men Soon to Be Employed.

One of the largest plants, a commercial truck factory, is now being erected by the Moreland Motor Truck Company at the intersection of Main and Wilhardt streets. This plant will be equipped with the latest type of machinery and will have a capacity of 300 completed trucks a year. This will mean the employment of a large number of skilled mechanics and workmen.

The main building, which consists of one floor and covers approximately two acres of floor space, is of the latest factory designing with saw-tooth roof construction, the sides and roof being largely constructed of prismatic glass, thus securing a perfectly lighted building. The local truck company is incorporated, is heavily financed and is composed of several of Los Angeles' representative capitalists and business men. The board of directors consists of R. H. Raphael, president; C. J. Kubach, vice-president; Sheldon Morris, secretary and treasurer; Watt L. Moreland, general manager, and S. Simmons.

This corporation will produce a line of power trucks consisting of standard trucks, dumping wagons, oil tank wagons, sprinkling wagons, fitted with a compressed aid device for forcing the water out under pressure; fire wagons, consisting of combination hose and chemical wagon and pumping engines. These different trucks will be constructed in sizes of one to six tons capacity, inclusive.

Watt L. Moreland, M.E., is the designer of the trucks. He has a wide experience in the designing and construction of power vehicles. He has perfected and patented a gasifier, an attachment which is fitted to a standard carburetor, permitting the use of distillate for fuel instead of gasoline.

GAS MIXER.

This gasifier mixes the distillate and air, and transforms the two elements into a perfect gas, which burns clean, does not leave a carbon deposit in the motor cylinders and develops a mean, effective pressure, approximately 25 per cent. greater than gasoline.

The Southern California Hardwood and Manufacturing Company has a one and one-half ton and one three-ton Moreland distillate truck in service; a perfect balance, one of the greatest achievements in power vehicle engineering, is secured by mounting the driver over the motor and the proper placing of the front axle, which gives a load or weight distribution of 40 per cent. for the front wheels and 60 per cent. for the rear wheels. The steering gear is of the compound screw type, and is exceptionally easily operated.

The smaller sizes of trucks will be fitted with a three-speed transmission-pressed steel-Jack shaft unit, three-pound suspension, mounted with front torsion spring. The larger size will be fitted with a four-speed transmission direct on third speed, the four-speed gear allowing higher speed when truck is running unloaded.

FINE PARTS.

All wheel bearings, transmission and Jack shaft bearings are the new high speed Timkin roller type. The trucks are fitted with the inclosed type of four-cycle, four-cylinder, long-stroke, heavy-duty, slow-speed motors. The horse power ranges from twenty-six in the one-ton to seventy horse power in the larger sizes.

The front springs are long, and semi-elliptic, straight type; rear springs, semi-elliptic, crucible steel. Rear springs will be mounted on hardened steel blocks. An auxiliary or over-load cross spring, bearing on the axle, will be fitted. All Moreland trucks will be guaranteed for an over-load capacity of 25 per cent. The Moreland truck frame will be constructed of alloy steel channel, heavily reinforced, hot riveted, and will be of such size as to be practically unbreakable with any load carried on the trucks. Brakes will vary from sixteen inches in diameter, with four-inch face in the smaller sizes, to twenty-two inches in diameter, six-inch face on the larger sizes.

GRAND PRIZE RACE.

That the American manufacturers will be better represented in the Grand Prize race this year than they have in any previous international event seems certain. The foreigners may expect this year to compete against cars specially built for the race, rather than against stock models adapted for racing purposes, as has been the rule heretofore. Work on the course, which is being improved at an estimated cost to the county of over $50,000, is already well toward completion.

Another Victory Proves Its Superior Stamina and Economy

Mais—Lowest Cost per Ton-Mile

THAT YOU may know the truth about motor trucks—cost per ton-mile to operate—the Chicago-Detroit Reliability tour of 756 miles was run under American Automobile Association supervision. The Mais won.

Of the 26 trucks, large and small, the big Mais 2½-ton internal gear driven cost the least per ton-mile—.0461, or a fraction over four cents. This is figured after including the driver's salary, tires, oil, gasoline, high estimate on depreciation, etc. This is another fatal blow to chains.

Honestly and briefly, here are the facts that leave no room for doubt as to the Superior Stamina and Economy of the Mais:

There was just one Mais—other makes had two or three cars, and more chances to win.
The Mais was always ahead of the schedule.
The water was still in the radiator after the Mais had been driven from Indianapolis to Chicago, then in the contest, and back home, 1,136 miles.
The Mais was not unloaded once in order to get through bad roads. It helped others out of the mud.
The Mais has a perfect road score.
The Mais cost the least to operate, although it was overloaded 20 per cent. Its specified load would have decreased even this cost.
Let us solve your hauling problems with the Mais.

Charles E. Anthony, president of the Western Motor Car Company, is the man behind the guns. He is handling affairs in the same cool, calculating manner as he did last season, but already it is almost a certainty that the good marks of last year will be eclipsed. Though the season is young as yet the sales recorded are ahead of those secured to date at this time last year.

"If I had fifty of the Chalmers "36" cars on the floor right now I could sell them this week," said Al Lusby, yesterday. "It is remarkable the demand for the cars this year. Of course it is hard to get the machines here, but we are making deliveries at the rate of from five to seven a day and we are setting up a mark that will look pretty good at the close of the season.

"Of course we are hustling our deliveries. We want more cars and we are prepared for a season that will break all records. This is to be one of the greatest years in the history of the automobile industry and we expect to get our full share of the business. I say this without boasting. I'm glad that other dealers are also doing remarkably well."

After having enjoyed the sights of New England Hunt, with his chauffeur, came back to New York, and then toured through the East, finally winding up with a mileage that breaks all records for new cars of the high grade type this season.

When speaking of his trip the Los Angeles enthusiast did not seem to think he had accomplished anything out of the ordinary. When he thought the chauffeur was not driving quite fast enough to suit him, Hunt took the wheel and bounced the Peerless into a big steam roller. This did not injure the car, however, as it could have stood even a harder smash. All it did was to make Hunt satisfied to trust himself to the chauffeur's mercy.

These two autoists covered mile after mile without an adjustment to the new car, and without seeking garages. They were many times more than 100 miles from the nearest garage, but this made no difference. The trip was enjoyable, there was much to be seen, and the Peerless covered roads which are seldom traversed by an automobile.

The Peerless which Hunt used on his long journey is the late model torpedo body of the 1912 pattern, a duplicate of which has just been received by the H. O. Harrison company. It is a handsome car, with a long wheel base, is easy riding and is ideal for such a tour as Hunt has just finished.

It will be recalled that in the case of so-called detachable rims for pneumatic tires there was for years discussion and debate by various organizations, mechanical, patent and business points being involved. In the next development of any means for attaching pneumatic tires to motor vehicle wheels—that is, demountable rims—the same situation arose (incidentally, the Society of Automobile Engineers is now working toward bringing about a standardization of the essential dimensions in this connection.)

Here's a Surprise.

APPERSON HAS FOUR MODELS.

Shettler Springs Big Surprise at Season's Opening.

Low-priced Rabbit Ready for Nineteen-twelve Market.

Has Small Car to Take Place of That Reo Line.

Here is a real sensation sprung by a lover of thrills, Leon T. Shettler. A new model to be known as the Apperson Rabbit was the surprise Shettler uncorked yesterday, when he made his 1912 Apperson announcement. The Rabbit will be offered in addition to the Baby Jack, the Little Jack and the Big Jack. These will be improved models of the Appersons of the past season.

This quartette of new Appersons are stylish in design and have that straight line, rakish appearance which means the most up to the minute style in motordom. The Appersons will also have the new curved fenders which follow the curve of the wheel. With a forty-five horse power motor, measuring 4½x5, the Baby Jack will have a powerful 4¾-5-inch motor which should develop fifty-five horse power and the others will be seven-passenger cars of fifty-five and sixty-five horse power. The machines will be offered in all the standard types and Shettler says shipments will start October 1 and he will soon be able to make deliveries on all models.

There will be four models, furnished in the standard types. The Little Jack, a seven-passenger, fifty-five-horsepower touring car and the Big Jack, a seven-passenger sixty-five-horse-power car. The new car will be the sensation and the popular Baby Jack will undoubtedly have a bigger run than ever before.

The Rabbit will be a five-passenger touring car with a powerful forty-five-horse-power motor. The straight-line effect is carried out in the body design and the equipment and finish throughout will be of the best. This is a large, roomy easy-riding car with the softest of high-grade upholstery.

The motor is of the four-cylinder T-head type with separately cast cylinders and a five-bearing crank shaft. There is a large fan fly wheel with the celebrated Apperson clutch, dual ignition and a forty-five-horse-power motor measuring 4⅛x4. Double internal brakes are used. The wheels are 34x4 and the wheel base 114 inches. The body is hung low but with plenty of clearance. The cellular type of radiator is used. This is the most serviceable type of radiator. Every motor is tested to forty-five horse power on dynamometers and pulled for several hours under full load.

The equipment consists of a high-grade mohair top, glass front, speedometer, five lamps, gas tank, horn, tools and other incidental equipment. Everything on this car is of the very latest design and for construction, workmanship, material and finish the car will be unsurpassed in the medium car class.

The Baby Jack will have numerous new features. The body is of the straight-line type with no handles or levers on the outside and curved fenders which follow the curve of the wheel.

The motor used in this car shows on test fifty-nine full horse power and is known the country over as the most powerful motor of its size. All machinery of the chassis is built in the Apperson factory and thoroughly tested. It comes with full equipment. This car is the most popular of the Apperson line and has sold in large numbers in Southern California.

Another fight against the dangerous ailroad crossing has been started in ew Jersey. William A. Lord, of ange, is the leader in the move- ent. THREE-PASSENGER OAKLAND NEXT.

NOVELTY IN MOTORDOM SPRUNG BY THIS FACTORY.

Dealers Here Soon to Receive Car With Three Seats in Line With Driver, and Roadster Promises to Be Real Thing as a Gentleman's Ideal Outing Car—Latest Out.

The Oakland "Aristocrat" is the title given to a new seven-passenger automobile just put on the market by the Oakland Auto Company of Pontiac, Mich., and handled in this city by Hawley, King & Company. The vehicle is aptly named. Its aristocratic appearance has been remarked upon by all who have seen it. The car bids fair to be among the top notch sellers with those who want a vehicle which stands out from the general run of those met on the boulevards. The new Oakland is a seven-passenger with a four-cylinder motor and a wheel base of 120 inches, slightly longer than the usual run of cars.

It has nickel trimmings, the shafts and gears being of full nickel steel, while the frame is of the double drop pattern giving the car a low center of gravity. The visitor has a square tube radiator, the type on the highest priced cars. Ignition will be of the dual system-magneto and battery-Bosch magneto being used. Refinement is apparent in every detail, nothing being over-looked to make it live up to its name of the "Aristocrat" of automobiles.

The "sociable" roadster is another car that is being received with great favor. Since the announcement that it was to be put on the market Hawley, King & Company have received many inquiries concerning this three-passenger car, but unlike others of this variety, the three passengers occupy one seat.

The body of the car is widened to permit of this. It does away with the rumble seat for three-passenger cars and although the machine is no larger than the former roadster except in width the three persons are snugly seated, hence the name.

Recent sales of Oaklands by Hawley, King & Co. are a forty-horse-power touring car to C. F. Morgan, produce dealer, the car being equipped with an Ever-Ready starter; a model "33" roadster in gray and black to John M. Hoffman of this city; a model M special forty-horse-power roadster, fully equipped, and finished in the popular golden brown to A. W. Ellington, and a model K special forty horse power five-passenger touring car to A. C. Wilson.

A carload of machines was received Monday and another—containing 1912 models, arrived Thursday.

NEW SIMPLEX ARRIVES.

Oscar Werner Ready to Make Demonstrations With His Classy Line of High-grade Beauties.

Oscar Werner, Southern California agent for the Simplex, has just received his new model "38" 1912 Simplex demonstrator. From the advance orders and the orders he has taken since showing the car, Mr. Werner thinks this "38" will prove to be one of the most popular models in town. Although a new Simplex creation, this model is by no means an experiment. All the new features have been subjected to the severest road and factory tests, covering a period of over two years. No Simplex car ever leaves the factory until it has been thoroughly demonstrated that there are no weaknesses.

This innovation in the Simplex line was completely tested before it was put on the market. The shaft-drive construction is unique and of exceptional strength and almost identical with that used by the German Mercedes.

The motor is similar in its general design to the already famous fifty, seventy and ninety models and, although rated only thirty-eight horse power, it is capable of developing eighty horse power. Its dimensions are 4⅞-inch bore, 6¼-inch stroke. The gear box has four speeds ahead and is direct on the fourth gear.

This car has been built in response to a constant demand for a Simplex model of medium horse power, suited for town and suburban use. Particular attention has been given toward the achievement of engine flexibility allowing speeds from eight miles an hour to sixty-five miles an hour on the high gear, to beauty of design, superb riding qualities and absolute noiselessness. In fact, the motor is so quiet that when taking out the clutch it is almost impossible to tell whether the motor is running or not. These cars are equipped with the latest styles in the body design, which should delight the eye of every motor enthusiast. They include the runabout, four, five or seven-passenger Coming.

STUTZ HAS PLACE AMONG NINETEEN-TWELVE CARS.

LOS ANGELES, the home of perhaps more automobiles than any city of its size in the world, is to have another car added to its number, Brown-Symonds & Company having completed negotiations with the Stutz Motor Car Company for handling its machines in this territory. This announcement is of more than usual importance in that it adds one of the best cars made for general use to the automobile world, and at the same time, gives to the West, a racing car that has proved its worth and which will be seen in all the important events on the Coast in the future.

The Stutz car made a truly remarkable entry into the automobile sphere. The first car ever turned out by the factory was entered in the 500-mile International Sweepstakes race at Indianapolis, May 30, 1911, finishing eleventh in this, the greatest automobile race in the history of motordom, pitted against the largest array of foreign and American-made machines ever seen on one track. In its trial performance to deterine its right to entry in the great event—the conditions of which were that a car could make seventy-five miles an hour—the Stutzt reeled off the distance at the rate of 82.19 miles an hour. The copy of the certificate testifying to this time and signed by the officials of the big race is in the hands of the local agents to "show" any doubting Thomas.

This car, which made the 500-mile grind in 442 minutes, was not a specially-built model for the event, but is the same as the stock cars handled by the agents in this city. This first model of an American designer was matched against the latest creations of the world's best automobile engineers, who have been trying out and testing their product for many years.

Out of forty cars, which started in the great 500-mile race, twenty-five were still running when the race was called, after twelve cars had finished. The Stutz, unknown and unsupported by "wise" ones, upset all calculations by finishing eleventh without a single mechanical adjustment and without the services of a relief driver, Gilbert Anderson, being able to drive the entire distance without any undue strain, owing to the ease in operation and the easy-riding qualities of the car.

ENGINEERS TO CROSS WATER.

Long Trip Over the Pond to Visit English Motor Factories Now in Operation.

Preparations have been completed by the members of the Society of Automobile Engineers for the trip which they have planned and which is expected to be of benefit to the different members both materially and scientifically. They will leave for England about November 1, and will be entertained by the Incorporated Institution of Automobile Engineers, which is the English society corresponding to the Society of Automobile Engineers.

The first few days abroad will be spent in examining the exhibits of the automobile show which will then be in progress at Olympia, Eng. A trip will be made to Birmingham to see the factories of the Austin Motor Company and the Wolesley Motor Car Company, as well as to Coventry to go through the plant of the Daimler Motor Company.

As it is the idea to visit only the best factories and to see them thoroughly there will be a number of places they will not see. They will make a run through the Warwickshire district, Stratford-on-Avon and will probably go to Newcastle-on-Tyne to see the Armstrong Whitworth factory. They will visit the Humber Automobile factory, one of the largest in that country, and will also be shown around the garages of one of the big London cab companies, and perhaps the plant of the London General Omnibus Company.

It has been planned to devote an entire evening to joint technical discussion by members of both societies. The automobile engineers will make a short trip into France to see some automobile plants there before they return to their own country.

LARGER WHEELS ON CARS.

Tire Troubles May Banish When Machines Are Equipped With the Oversize Casings.

R. R. Drake, manager of the service department of the United States Tire Company, believes that the outgrowth of the tendency of automobile manufacturers to increase the size of the wheels, will mean greater freedom from tire trouble and tire economy. Drake's business for some years has been to study the tire troubles and the conditions which bring them, and he says that overloading is one of the chief causes of tire trouble. This is why the increase of wheel diamater noticed in the 1912 specifications of some of the best-known cars is considered by him as a good thing for the purchaser.

"There is no surer way to lay the foundation for unsatisfactory tire service than to start out with a car on which the tires are undersized," says Drake, in speaking of this subject. "The trouble has been that while the original tires might be of sufficient size to sustain the weight of the car with its specified allotment of passengers, the fact was not taken into consideration that many additional equipments would immediately be added by the purchaser, who, unwittingly, overloaded his car from the first day it was in his possession.

"There is absolutely no economy in buying tires of small size for a car expected to carry a heavy load. Motorists are gradually awakening to the fact that a little extra money spent for larger size tires proves a mighty good investment in the long

Good News.

CALIFORNIA SOON TO LEAD WORLD.

GREAT OUTPUT OF MOTOR CARS SURPRISES THE EAST.

New York Now Leads All States in Union in Number of Machines In Use, but Oldsmobile Man Predicts that Second State Will Soon Be in Front Rank.

"Jack" Eagal, general manager of the Oldsmobile in Southern California, one of the best known automobile men of the Pacific Coast, is back in Los Angeles, after having spent several weeks in the East visiting the various automobile factories. Eagal says the automobile market is in a healthier condition at the present time than it has ever been in the history of the industry, and that the conditions at the various factories are astonishing.

"Everywhere big preparations are under way for the handling of the present year's business," says Eagal, "and the part California plays in the problem—the question of getting enough cars to supply this territory—is the talk of the factories. The consensus of opinion at the leading automobile manufacturing concerns is that California, which is the second State in the Union at the present time as regards the number of machines in use, will jump into first place this year and get such a lead over New York, which heads the list now, that it will be impossible for the Knickerbocker State to ever again hold the distinction."

While in the East Eagal succeeded in persuading W. J. Mead, general manager of the Olds Motor Works and acting president of the General Motors Company, to promise to visit the Pacific Coast. Mead will arrive on the Coast soon after the first of October. While here he will tour the Coast in an Oldsmobile "Limited," visiting all points of interest in order to thoroughly familiarize himself with conditions.

At the Olds factory a new addition is being built in order to increase the manufacturing facilities. The new addition when completed will be four stories and 70x200 feet, with a floor space of 560,000 square feet. The most up-to-date machinery will be installed and the pay rolls will be considerably increased with the most skilled workmen it is possible to obtain.

For the past year the demand for the Oldsmobile has far exceeded the supply, but with three models this year and with its increased manufacturing facilities, the Oldsmobile company hopes to be able to better meet the conditions.

Eagal also brings the interesting news with him that Ad Wolgast, champion lightweight of the world, is now the owner of a new six-cylinder Oldsmobile Limited tourabout, which is capable of making a speed of eighty-seven miles per hour. Wolgast will drive his car to the Coast and then make a tour of California, accompanied by Mrs. Wolgast and his manager, Tom Jones.

As a result of a war between rival oil companies a number of New Jersey motorists were able recently to lay in supplies of gasoline at low rates.

Though he was reluctant to state just where he enjoyed the pleasant hunting trip Hemenway has consented to make a chart of the entire route. He will do this, however, after the dove season is over and when there is no opportunity for a band of sharpshooters to go into the woods and drive all the birds away.

NO BABY DOVES.

He says he found the doves young but not too young to be shot. He saw and heard nothing of birds still in the nest and says the present game laws of Southern California satisfy him. He is an expert shot with the rifle and shotgun and has been out each year but he is heartily in favor of protecting the game.

"If I had my way," said the Stoddard driver, "I would close the deer law for five years. Then I would go after the mountain lions in dead earnest. Bounty or no bounty we would shoot them as I believe the lions kill more than twice as many deer as the hunters. The sooner we do this the better for the game prospects for these coming years."

With regard to the quail law Hemenway was not so outspoken as he stated that in his opinion the farmers should have some say before the season is closed. He says he found quail plentiful in the vicinity of Cuyamaca and he predicts an excellent month this year. He expects to drive the Stoddard down into San Diego county again the minute the quail season opens.

The performance of the Stoddard-Dayton on this trip may cause some comment among the automobile men but Hemenway is prepared to make affidavit that he covered 102 miles with the four and a half gallons of gas. He has nothing to do with any automobile agency and is proprietor of the Hemenway studio. He is an enthusiastic autoist however and takes a keen delight in the work of his car.

During the two years he has owned the Stoddard Hemenway has done almost all the repairs on the car himself. He says there is no need of spending money for anything but tires. When he prepares for a hunting trip the mighty Nimrod of the woods does the preparing himself. Then he starts, gets the limit, or near limit, has a fine time and brings the car back in as good shape as when it started.

MADISON SQUARE GARDEN.

It is said there is a possibility that Madison Square Garden, in New York, may not be rased, after the motor show in February, as scheduled. According to the promoters of a recent prize fight held in the Garden, they have a lease on the building running from July 1, 1911, to July 12, 1913. If this assertion should prove true, there is a possibility of two more motor shows, instead of one, being held there.

MARRIED IN MITCHELL CAR.

Pretty Texas Widow Finds the Man of Her Choice and Is Wooed and Won in a Motor.

Paris, Tex., was the scene of a pretty automobile wedding a few days ago when a wealthy Texas widow became the bride of a mechanic named Thomas, employed by Miller & Jordan, Paris agents for the Mitchell-Lewis Motor Car Company of Racine, Wis.

This interesting romance began shortly after Thomas was employed by the Mitchell agents, his first duty having been to explain the wonders of the motor car to the attractive widow. She not only fell in love with the car, but the driver also.

The service was read by a local minister in the tonneau of a model T Mitchell, under a large oak tree in the suburbs of the city. A unique feature was six large Mitchell touring cars which conveyed the bridal party to the outdoor wedding. Thomas was formerly in the service of the Mitchell company of Milwaukee, Wis. He is an able man in that line of work and at the conclusion of a honeymoon trip, Thomas will return to Paris, where he will take up his duties as a member of the firm by which he was formerly employed, his bride having purchased the Jordan interest of the Mitchell garage.

MAMMOTH OVERLAND PLANT.

Work Moves With Clock-like Precision in Big Willys' Plant at Toledo—Latch String Out.

"Standardization and interchangeability are probably more strongly exemplified in the mammoth plant of the Willys Overland Company at Toledo than in any other motor car organization," says General Sales Manager George W. Bennett.

"In the Overland plant the work in the assembly department moves with clock-like precision. Every part fits every other part. All that any one needs to do to see standardization and interchangeability exemplified in its highest degree is to watch the assembly of an Overland car. The public is always welcome to go through the Overland plant and will find the latch string always hanging out. We have nothing to conceal in our product.

"Watch one of the assemblers grab a steering gear from a rack of a hundred, walk over to any chassis at random and put it in place with as much ease as he would screw a nut ont a bolt. This is true with every part and every car assembled. All parts are sent into the assembly room in racks. They are taken off regardless of what frame they mount and put into place with never a thought of anything but a perfect fit."

Only $1500 has been raised by the Automobile Club of Southern California toward the Rincon road project, but the matter has been left in the hands of Miss Sybel Geary, secretary of the club, who expects to hustle her cohorts of workers into line. More money must be raised and more work must be done. The Santa Barbara and Ventura men will visit us again and will tell us more about this good roads plan.

A. McAndrew of Nordhoff took the Ventura County Board of Supervisors to Santa Barbara yesterday by way of the Rincon ebach road, negotiating the distance in exactly one hour and a half. This is the route over which it is proposed to build the new road and the Board of Supervisors is desirous of traveling over the route in order to have a look at it, preparatory to beginning work. Of course a time for the run had to be made when the beach portion would be reached at low tide. The route is nine miles shorter than by way of the Casitas and is gradeless. Much of the way there is already a pretty good road and the party had little trouble and made a number of stops for the purpose of observation.

This beach road is the old stage road between Santa Barbara and Ventura—the genuine Camino Real traveled by the padres between the missions. When the new road is pushed through that way and it is made possible to have no detention from high tides and the river here is properly bridged, it will be a fast thoroughfare along the coast.

READY TO MAP TOURS.

Bureau of Touring Information Plans to Route Roads All Over United States.

According to the Touring Information Board of the American Automobile Association in supplying touring information the great demand has been for transcontinental material. On an estimate taken there has been not less than one party a day crossing the continent since the early part of June. One of the most noted of these cross-country tourists was William M. Garland, of the Automobile Club of Southern California. Garland drove from his home in Los Angeles, to Moosehead Lake, Me., in 180 running hours.

A. L. Westgard, who is the touring expert, is the only motorist who has crossed the continent twice within the year. In order to meet the increasing demand for touring in this direction, Westgard is now making sixty-four strip maps that will contain all the detail from Chicago to Los Angeles and will also show detail in going through towns, and give all essential information for making this trip.

The plan of developing the small scale map is under the direction of Howard Longstreth, chairman of the Touring Information Board. It is now being worked out by Robert Bruce, the touring bureau's manager. Seven of these maps have already been issued. Those of New York State, New Jersey, New England, Lower New England, Maritime Provinces, New York-Chicago-Mississippi River lines, and transcontinental routes, with Long Island, routes between North and South, and Virginia now under way.

The Raymond and Whitcomb "Trail to Sunset" tour will leave New York for Los Angeles October 2. The tour will be piloted by Westgard. There has been enough bookings received at the present time to insure the start of a good number of cars and to make the trip one of interest to motorists in all parts of the country.

MILLION A DAY.

e United States spends $1,000,000 y on its roads, and most of the ey is literally sunk in the mud," Logan Waller Page, director of office of public roads at Wash- on.

r. Page has evolved many schemes carrying practical instruction and to the country districts in the in- t of better road building; but e in which he has greater hope of returns than the programme for "good roads specials."

he Southern Railroad was the first undertake co-operation with the ernment in running a three-car n over its lines for instruction to local communities in road build- ; and the plan has been so success- and promises such important re- ts in the improvement of country ds, that important railroad lines all r the country are now asking for privilege of joining the campaign.

The good roads special is the out- wth of the exhibition of road work de by the government at the Seattle position, the National Corn Show at aha, the Southern Appalachian Ex- ition at Knoxville, and the National d Show at Chicago.

The models shown there were gath- ed in a special car and sent first on sixty day tour of Pennsylvania, with arked success. Out of that trip grew e co-operative plan that is now to pushed into every part of the coun- y as rapidly as the government can rnish exhibits and lecturers to ac- mpany the special train.

Three sets of the road models are w being completed in Washington, supply the trains that will start out is fall. The government is unable furnish the lecturers and construc- on superintendents for more trains the present time, or to equip the ains with sets of models and lanterns d picture machines.

The trains are furnished by the rail- ads, and hauled without expense, the vernment paying for the transporta- on of the two experts with each train, eir salaries, and the expenses of quipping the trains with models.

DEMAND IN ROADS.

"Since we began making exhibitions the large fairs, like the Seattle Ex- osition, there has been a demand for good roads exhibit at every State and cal fair," says Director Page of the ffice of public roads. "It is a sort of onnybrook fair for us all the time. e cannot furnish separate exhibits ough to meet the demand; but the aveling exhibits are being made as plete as the government can make and they are expected to accom-

To teach correct road-building methods to the country districts, where money is not to be had either for expensive types of road or for the employment of skilled engineers, is the primary purpose of the good roads trains.

The government office of public roads has developed its field of activity greatly in the last few years; it is sending expert road supervisors into hundreds of communities to teach proper methods to the local road builders; and through the device of the special good roads trains it expects to teach road building in hundreds of sections that can not be easily reached by other means.

"Where the States handle appropriations, or directly supervise the work, careful and competent engineering methods are followed," says Mr. Page, "and excellent roads are built as a part of a comprehensive scheme of highways.

"But throughout the districts where engineers cannot be employed, and where untrained men are forced to spend their own time and their own and their neighbors' money in the effort to keep the country roads passable and in good condition, there is a great need for instruction and help."

The good roads train reaches the people directly interested, many of whom would not otherwise come in contact with the government's good roads bureau, and who would not have the chance to inspect an exhibit at a fair or exposition. The farmer is the man who needs good roads, declares Mr. Page, and the man for whose benefit the government is striving to perfect simple but effective methods of keeping country roads in condition.

The cost of hauling a load of wheat from the farm to the shipping point is often more than the cost of transporting that wheat from the shipping point to Liverpool. Mr. Page declares efficiency of the farm team can be increased anywhere from 20 to 50 per cent. if the road repair and the road building work in the country is properly done.

SAVE MONEY.

"Between $500,000,000 and $1,000,000,000 would be saved annually in the United States if every State would improve its main highways to the highest point of efficiency," is one of the striking statements made by Mr. Page.

The improvement of the road increases the efficiency of the farmer's transportation method, opens up new country for local trade, widens the farmer's horizon, brings general prosperity to the local communities, and automatically raises the price of land, he adds.

The road models that form a chief part of the exhibits in the three good-roads trains are interesting reproductions of highways in course of construction. They are all made in the top story of the building occupied by the office of public roads in Washington; and the real materials used for different kinds of road building and finishing are used in the models. Everything is on the scale of one-twelfth, so that an inch of the model represents a foot of road.

The road models consist of wide foundations of lumber, properly arched to conform to the curve of a road and its ditches. On this foundation the road building material is laid, beginning with the first preparation of the road-bed for the foundation material.

A single model will show a stretch of road in each stage of its preparation, from the foundation to the completed traffic surface. The binding material used for the actual road building is used in making the model, and the lecturer who demonstrates from the latter is able to give his visitors an accurate idea of how the work should be done.

MODELS GALORE.

Other, models show scrapers and drags at work on the roads, giving illustrations of how road machinery should be used, and the condition the surface should be in when the work is completed. The handling of dirt highways is the subject of several models, as proficiency in keeping these in condition is most to be desired in the country.

One car of the train is devoted exclusively to the models. A passageway at the side permits of their examination at close range. There are models also of road machinery, stone crushers, concrete mixers, steam rollers, scrapers, split-log drags and other machinery needed for extensive road building. Models of concrete bridges and culverts show how the molds are made and how the work may be done by inexperienced hands.

The gospel of the split-log drag is the gospel of good roads in the country district, and this the Federal experts preach with enthusiasm wherever the special trains go. The country dirt road is the farmer's transportation line, and to keep it in condition without the expense of new surfaces or costly repairs is the great problem of the country community.

The split-log drag, hauled over the surfaces after a rain, at a cost often as low as 50 cents per mile, has solved the problem in many sections of the country, and is keeping thousands of miles of dirt road free from ruts; level, and conducive to easy travel.

The second car of the special is the lecture car, fitted up with lanterns and moving picture machines, and with seats for a large audience. The office of public roads has a collection of pictures that would stir the conscience of any one guilty of neglect of the country doctor stuck in the mud on his way to the farmer's house.

MOVING PICTURES.

There are cleverly-posed pictures of automobile accidents, where washed-out roads or broken bridges have upset an automobile and thrown its maimed occupants about. More important than these are the pictures showing actual comparisons of the loads of cotton, corn, wheat and the like that can be hauled over good roads and bad.

"We give these people just as good a lantern show as they could see in Madison Square Garden," says Mr. Page, "and it serves the purpose of bringing them to a realization of the full opportunities of country road improvement. There are pictures of the actual work of construction, of the cheaper as well as the more expensive types of road. There are such graphic pictures of bridge and culvert building that anyone could learn from them. We show them stretches of the finest roads in the world; we show them how to make a split-log drag, and how to carry out all the operations of road building and maintenance."

The government furnishes two experts for each train. These are men trained in road construction, and known in the government service as "superintendents of road construction."

Their work during the summer is that of assisting and instructing local communities engaged in road building and their services are in such demand that it has been necessary to delay the start of the good roads trains until fall, when the actual work of road building ceases, and the supervisors become available for lecture and demonstration work.

Wherever the aid of an experienced road builder is necessary to overcome local problems, the government furnishes a man if he can be spared. The United States has no authority or control over State or local expenditures for road building; but hundreds of communities are taking advantage of the assistance offered from Washington, and are adopting the methods approved for uniform road construction.

LOAN MEN.

Each community has its separate problems. Differing soils, drainage, quality of rock and road-building materials, and character of traffic moving over the road, make necessary many different methods of treatment. The government supervisors have studied these problems, and the government laboratories have made tests of the different soils and materials, and the best treatment for each condition has been decided upon after careful study. These methods are demonstrated from the special trains.

Where conditions warrant, and the local authorities make the request, arrangements are made to have a government supervisor take a hand in the actual work of road building in the community.

In the South and in all States where swampy conditions are at all prevalent, the country road builders confront big problems. The government has solved many of these in the South and has shown the local authorities how to build roads that will not be washed away by the floods, and that will gather strength rather than lose it from the washing of the soil incident to the rainy season.

"At certain seasons of the year in some localities," says D. H. Winslow, superintendent of road construction, who accompanies one of the special trains, "there are roads that are entirely covered with water from one to ten feet deep, and for a distance varying from a few hundred feet to more than a mile. At such times travel is practically cut off, or confined to horse-back riding, with a heavy loss to the community.

BELIEVE HARDSHIP.

"Education is at a standstill; medical service is limited and irregular; church attendance becomes impossible; the mails are delayed, if not entirely abandoned; fire protection is cut off; and life on the farm becomes one of isolation and hardship. This is one of the conditions that it is sought to relieve, by making the roads passable twelve months in the year, and at a nominal cost."

The United States is spending an unprecendented amount for road building now. The estimate by Mr. Page of $1,000,000 a day for the working part of the year is based on the fact that $149,000,000 has been authorized for expenditure during 1911. In 1904, the whole expenditure for roads was only $80,000,000. It is to save this great amount of money from being "sunk in the mud" or washed out when bad seasons strike the country road, that the government is carrying its road building instruction out through the country districts in the "good roads specials."

A Book That Clearly Explains Why We Can Build a Big 30 H. P. Touring Car for $900

MOST people who want a car of the 30 horsepower five-passenger type go out in the open market with the fixed idea that it will cost them somewhere around $1250. In their mind a car at less than that must be a little, insignificant, low-powered machine. They picture everything that has heretofore been offered around the one thousand dollar mark, and they see exactly what the country has been flooded with—a nice lot of little toy cars.

But here is a new step. Here you find a big fine touring car and it costs only $900, a car with ample room for five passengers. It has a powerful 30 horsepower motor giving you more speed and power than you will ever care to use, for it can be driven between 40 and 50 miles an hour. It has the selective transmission fitted with F. & S. annular bearings—the finest made. A staunch pressed steel frame. A big wheel base—center control—and the fashionable fore doors. Good leather upholstering stuffed with fine hair. Handsome and striking body design with graceful lines. And the body work is beautiful. Twenty-two painting operations are made on each individual body. This car could be made more elaborately but it could not be made better or finer.

It still seems difficult for some people to understand why we can manufacture and sell cars for less money than any other manufacturer in the business. Yet if your business is shirts, and your plant produces 1000 dozen a day of a certain grade, you know that your production costs are less than the factory turning out but 100 dozen a day. Or, if you manufacture bath tubs, or deal in apples, or cigars, you know that either of these handled in enormous quantities cost less per a certain unit than if handled in much smaller lots. This condition does not vary a particle in the production of automobiles.

So we have published a very thorough and interesting book that shows you the difference in automobile plants. And it clearly proves the ability of the plant producing 20,000 cars to make and sell its product at prices from 20% to 40% lower than any similar line of cars on the market.

This book takes you through the entire Willys-Overland plant—80 acres of it. You can sit in your own living room and go through the greatest automobile plant in the world. It gives you a clear idea of the economical manufacturing strength of the Overland organization. It shows you why the factory making 20,000 cars can make them better and at less cost than the factory making but 5000 cars. It shows you where you can get the most for your money. It shows you how we receive the raw materials and gradually convert them into the finished car. It shows you every step—every move. It takes you through the four months' process of making each single car. And it shows you exactly where and how we can manufacture more economically than a smaller plant and how you get the benefit of this. It shows you exactly how our cars are made—how our great automatic mechanical equipment does the work more rapidly and at less cost than the hand labor found in smaller plants. It shows you shops and departments not found in other plants, such as our great drop forge plant and aluminum casting shop. It is written in a readable style, not technical or dry, but clear, concise and interesting. It is the most thorough book of its kind ever published. To read it is an education. It is free and we want everyone to have a copy.

This, better than anything (outside of a trip to the factory itself) will give you a good idea of the real worth of this $900 car. Take a stroll down automobile row in your city. Look over all the popular priced cars. See if you can find the equal of this $900 car for less than $1250. The book referred to above can be had from our dealer (address below) or direct from the factory. Write or phone him, or us, and you will get one by return mail. This also shows you our complete 1912 line, with prices, specifications and complete descriptions as well as handsomely colored plates of each model. Better get a copy at once.

QUEENSBERRY SCORES MOTOR MANIACS.

BY THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY.

[Copyright, 1911, by the Marquis of Queensberry.]

NO good sportsman would ever drive his motor car in such a way as to endanger the life of any human being, let alone even a dog, which might possibly be the one and only friend of the person owning it, all his other friends having passed to the great beyond. But I see every day in the journals stories of terrible catastrophies brought about solely by the insane and unsportsmanlike conduct of the owners of cars. I say owners, for even if the chauffeur is driving, it is the owner who is responsible for his decency in driving, all chauffeurs taking their cue from their masters.

Some six years ago in the neighborhood of London there were some terribly sad cases of little children being killed—shall I say murdered? So strongly did I feel on the subject that the letter here reproduced was penned to the press association. The letter appeared in most of the principal British daily papers and was commented on the next day in nearly all of their leading articles. I of course came in for a considerable amount of abuse from the unsportsmanlike—but happily a very small section—of motor car owners. But abuse to me is like water to a thirsty man, and I would much rather have brickbats thrown at me in a good cause than applause in some cheap, popular sensation.

JOY RIDING SPELLS DISASTER.

No literary merit is claimed for the letter. It is merely the outburst of a man whose better feelings were deeply hurt by the cruel conducts of these joy riders, whose very joy spells death and mutilation to others.

Two little children, Ellen Broad and Thomas Snapes, were killed on January 30, 1905, and it was apropos of their sad deaths that the letter was written. I am asking the editor of The Times to keep this in the sporting section, as I consider that motoring is a sport when properly conducted, and the old-fashioned courtesies of the road observed, and, what's more, it is the real sporting motorist and the rest of us sportsmen who intend to teach these fiends better manners. Appended is the letter:

"To the Editor of the Yorkshire Post—Sir: In a halfpenny morning paper of today, anent the deaths of Ellen Broad and Thomas Snapes, I find it under the following heading: 'Child Runs Into a Motor,' and we are told of Ellen Broad, who, going home from school, 'ran heedlessly in front of the car,' and was killed, and of Thomas Snapes, 7 years of age, who, playing marbles, and 'running before the motor car of the Hon. H. L. Bruce, sustained fatal injuries.'

"While winter was on us and the roads were bad, where was the gentle motorist? We looked and longed again for the pleasant dust, and sniffed the air vainly for the spicy breezes and listened hopefully for the cheerful grunt. Alas! he was at Monte Carlo taking his well-earned rest, or perhaps strengthening his nerves for the coming fray on his yacht in the Mediterranean, varied by an occasional dash ashore to sharpen up the wits of the very young and very old Continentals, or perhaps in some savage land showing to the astounded heathen [save the word] the latest game of 'hog-amok.'

SHOWS MOCKERY OF CASE.

"But now, thank goodness, winter is waning. Once more the roads are drying up; spring is knocking at the door, and all is bright and joyous, and to crown all the jaded motorist is back with ruddy cheeks and iron nerves and funny oaths from foreign parts.

"But there is one thing mars the joyous season, and that is those abominable British children who will play marbles like we all used to in the good old days, and will go to school by the roads as we used to in the good old days, instead of by the only safe modern way over hedges and ditches, in fact, any d——d old way except the right one, and who will insist, as his halfpenny daily tells us, on running into poor innocent motors.

"And so the motor season commences.

"Good-bye, little Nellie Broad. Good-by, little Tommy Snapes. Sleep well; you have earned better than most of us who are older than you, your rest. Some words of that beautiful hymn, 'We Are But Little Children Weak,' should be your epitaph. And as sure as the sun rises some members of the new government of which I am an ardent, though voteless supporter, will be your remaining little brother's and sisters' champion. It was impossible to hope much from the last, as a search of the police courts will easily explain. Yours, etc.

One of the New Mitchell Fire-Fighters Which Will Run to Blazes in Ontario.

P. H. Greer, who sold the chemical six-cylinder, is at the wheel of the truck which was delivered last week. It is equipped with all the latest fire apparatus.

Lands Another Truck.

MITCHELL FIRE-FIGHTER READY FOR ONTARIO'S FIRES

AUTOMOBILE fire-fighting apparatus is gaining a hold in almost every city of Southern California. The Greer-Robbins Company sold a six-cylinder chemical truck to the City Trustees of Ontario. This stylish motor blaze subduer was delivered on Wednesday after having undergone a most severe test.

The specially built body is mounted on a regular Mitchell fifty-horsepower, six-cylinder chassis, having 130-inch wheelbase and special tread of sixty inches instead of fifty-six. It is fitted with 36x4½ inches tires and will develop more speed than can be used at any time.

The chemical apparatus consists of a thirty-five-gallon Holloway tank, specially made, and carries 200 feet of one-inch chemical hose. The rear portion of the body is so constructed that three or four men can ride upon it in a standing position and additional men can be carried on the side running boards. In addition to the large chemical tank, two three-gallon Babcock extinguishers are also carried. The water hose capacity is 500 feet of 2½-inch standard water hose. The machine is fitted with a ten-inch continuous-ringing gong, which can be heard for blocks ahead.

A ten-inch Rushmore searchlight on the dash, in addition to two regular headlights, will supply sufficient light to make fast running at night both possible and safe.

This is the second chemical wagon delivered by the Greer-Robbins Company in Southern California, the first having been in use as a chief's wagon in Long Beach for the past year, and according to the fire chief, it has never yet failed to be at every fire first.

The Mitchell chassis is specially adapted to work of this kind on account of its long wheel base, large tires and its exceptionally strong axles and frame, and being fitted with a six-cylinder motor is entirely free from vibration. Its moderate price is another great advantage and as the Mitchell machines are known to be thoroughly reliable and specially adapted to all kinds of hard work, it is being sought after by a great many fire departments in this section of the State. Greer-Robbins Company anticipate a great many future orders for apparatus of this kind. The price at which this machine was sold to the city of Ontario is $3150.

A number of New York motorists are taking out licenses to carry revolvers. Under the new law any one found with a weapon in his possession without a permit to carry it, is liable to fine or jail. The danger from highwaymen in rural districts naturally tends to cause motorists to carry a light firearm.

The projected revival of automobile racing at Atlanta during the stay of the Glidden tour contestants has served to put fresh enthusiasm into the latter event. As planned the races will be held on the Atlanta Speedway on October 21.

In attaching a speed-indicating instrument to a car it is quite necessary to have the driving gears, which are mounted on one of the road wheels, exactly centered on the latter, otherwise the gears will wear quickly and will also be noisy.

From present indications the annual reliability run of the Chicago Motor Club, which is scheduled for October 6-13, will be a greater success than its four predecessors. The route of this year's affair will take the participants through five States.

Complaint has been made to the Interstate Commerce Commission by an automobile company of Portland, Or., that the rates charged by railroads for transporting cars from New York to Portland are unreasonable and excessive. It is charged that the railroads charge $7 per 100 pounds in less than carload lots, whereas the rate should not be more than $4.50.

As before, the reliability run will be grade No. 1 event, with technical penalties and technical examination to determine the winners. There will be two divisions, one for touring cars and the other for runabouts, while in addition there will be a team trophy and a fuel economy prize. The total distance will be 1400 miles.

The St. Louis Automobile Manufacturers' and Dealers' Association have made plans for holding an open-air show in St. Louis from October 2 to 7, at Forest Park Highlands, an amusement place, where there is available 60,000 square feet under roof. By a system of waterproof curtains all of the space under roof will be arranged so that it can be closed in if there is bad weather.

There is sure to be unusual activity displayed on the part of automobilists and their representatives at the next session of the New Jersey Legislature at Trenton. While there is still some friction between the clubs, the motorists are determined to fight vigorously for reciprocity for out of the State automobilists. The Newark Motor Club has announced its intention of taking an active interest.

CHARLES KNIGHT COMING.

Inventor of Silent Motor Now on His Way to This Country Where He Will Talk to Us.

Charles Y. Knight, inventor of the sleeve valve motor, sailed on September 16 on the Campania for this country. Owen Thomas, consulting engineer for the licenses of the Knight engine, is also coming. During his stay abroad he spent much of his time in studying the operations of the plants of the Daimler Company, at Coventry, England, the Panhard, Mercedes and Minerva factories on the continent, all having adopted the Knight engine for their product.

The American licenses for the Knight motor include the Stearns, Columbia, Stoddard-Dayton, and the ronto-Canadian license. One of Thomas's first missions after his careful study in the big plants of the Eastern hemisphere of the making of the valveless Knight motor under Knight licenses will be to visit these plants that turn out the cars of these names where the engineers will be permitted to learn by his personal experience much of the advance manu-

the United States he will deliver lectures on the development of the Knight type of motor and its revolutionary effect upon the great plants of Europe. New York, Detroit and Chicago are on his route and requests for technical addresses have been filed with the inventor at Coventry, from motor men in each of these cities. Knight will remain here only a short struggle between the polo ex- of the two countries has resolved in a measure, into a struggle be- two enormously wealthy men, he Duke of Westminster against Payne Whitney—the enormous ir rent roll of the greatest of on's landlords, the richest aristo- in England, pitted against the n millions of the New Yorker. Just as Whitney has financed merican team in the past two the youthful Duke of West- er has decided to supply the sovereigns of the British team e next attempt on the cup.

Duke has gone further than The expenses of the team that the United States this year to be paid out of a fund raised g wealthy lovers of the sport in and. The Duke was a generous ributor, but the amount raised ever sufficient to pay all the ex- . This was the situation when Duke decided to do the whole "on his own," taking a leaf from ook of Harry Payne Whitney.

riting a check for the amount ributed by others, the Duke took the whole Polo Cup Recovery , returned the money to those had made up the fund, put the een polo ponies that had been ht into his own stable, and ed to supply the money, without of any kind, to send a team next year.

e Duke is the keenest polo player ngland. So determined is he upon ging the polo cup back to Eng- that he is said to have remarked s private secretary, Col. Wilford d:

STAKES FORTUNE.

Wilford, old boy, we'll bring this back if we have to sell the whole Mayfair. If it's ponies they need, buy every pony in England, if mary."

n addition to the fourteen ponies of fund which he has taken over, the e has one of the finest stables of ponies in the world. At Eaton his enormous Chester seat, he polo grounds and stables that are re elaborate than George Gould's blishment at Lakewood. The ke is a great "polo host," and is the best of terms with every player note in the country.

During the season he frequently en- tains large house parties made up ost exclusively of players and their es, and this bringing together of best players in England gives him rivaled facilities for trying-out rious combinations.

The position of the Duke and his versal popularity makes him the al man to act as peacemaker be- een the two factions among the yers and followers of the sport in gland.

The two camps are made up, on the e hand, of the Old Guard, rallying und Buckmaster, the Millers, Gren- l and others identified with the de- se of the cup on this side of the ter, and on the other of those who lieve in the infusion of newer, unger and more enterprising blood, exemplified by the team which de such a good showing this year. The Duke of Westminster will have e entire responsibility of the selec- n of the team next year. Undoubt- y he leans towards the Old Guard, members of which have been his dest friends for years. But he is atly impressed by the success of e new team and I have it on the t authority that his mind is quite n on the matter.

It is his intention to go to unlimited pense to try every conceivable com- nation which sound judgment would ggest, and he has already made me experiments along these lines private matches at Eaton Hall.

Recently he had a house party hich included the following great ayers: Capt. E. D. Miller, C. D. ller, Capt. H. Wilson, Walter Buck- aster, P. Nickalls, M. Nickalls, Fran- s Grenfell, Captain Haseltine, Lord ocksavage, the Earl of Shrewsbury d Lord Castlereagh.

These men were on the polo field most daily, and as most of them ave an intimate knowledge, not only American methods, but of the per- onal style of each of the American am that will probably take the field gainst the British invaders next year, his conference and practice at Eaton all should prove an invaluable aid to uture teams.

VISIT IRELAND.

Before the season closes the Duke ill take a large party of players to reland where they will be put hrough the hardest and stiffest of limination tests. With a team se- ected upon the basis of the showing ade there, the Duke will start early ractice next spring, pitting against em the best of the other players in ngland.

Although it is premature to fore- the possible composition of the team to say that it will be made up of two of the Old Guard, probably Buckmaster and Captain Miller, and two of this year's team, with a third in reserve. However, it depends largely upon whether the Duke will be able to bring the two camps together.

Some foxy schemes for outgeneraling the Americans are running in the heads of those upon whom rests the responsibility of selecting the British Olympic team. Possibly what I am about to foreshadow will take definite shape early in October when the Amateur Athletic Association of England, of which Lord Alverstone, the Lord Chief Justice, is president, which comes together every four months, goes into session.

At this meeting plans will be made for getting the British team together, and it is the intention of some influential members of the body to urge that the British Council of the International Olympic Games Committee be asked to press for an amendment of the regulations which will permit the Australian, Canadian and South African competitors to be classed as British in the scoring.

OLYMPIC PUZZLE.

The effect of this would be to swell enormously the British figures and give old John Bull a fighting chance against Cousin Jonathan. If such a rule had been in practice at the last meet, the points scored by Walker, Kerr and Hefferon would have been added to the English total.

At the present time Australia, Canada and South Africa are classed as seperate countries, and are allowed to enter the same number of contestants for each event as any other country.

What they would think of a proposition to place them in a minor position remains to be seen, but it is quite easy to imagine a howl of indignation from all three quarters at the mere suggestion. Those who have evolved this beautiful scheme say that the colonial authorities could hold preliminary trials and send the winners to England to participate in the final elimination tests.

As a sop to the colonials it is suggested that there should be a system of scores within scores—that while the total points at Stockholm be credited to Great Britain, the British figures could be detailed so as to show the part played by each colony in the gaining of the total.

But even if the English enthusiasts succeeded in "chloroforming" the colonials, they would have the other nations to deal with. It is doubtful if many of them would consent to such a drastic change in the regulations for no other purpose but the satisfying of the British desire to "down the Americans." "These athletes across the Atlantic are full of tricks," say the English followers of sport, "Why not give them some of their own medicine?"

The activity of the English athletes is remarkable in that it will be the first time that Great Britain has crawled out of her shell of self-sufficiency and consented to participate in the Olympic games with the other nations of the world.

I am excepting the London meet of three years ago, as that was held on her own ground and she could not help participating.

At Athens, Lieut. Halswells and a few other British athletes entered, but their action was taken "off their own bats" and did not receive the official support of the athletic authorities in England. At St. Louis there was no official British representation and British athletes were as scarce as babies in the homes and haunts of the "Four Hundred."

It is the general opinion among judges in this country that the stock of British athletes has slightly improved since the London Olympic meet. The improvement is most noticeable in the sprints, and up to the mile. That might spell trouble for the American athletes who journey to Stockholm next year, but on the other hand it is obvious that England will not be able to muster the big team that represented her in the London meet.

It will not be as numerous and she is sure to run up against disappointments in the shape of the inability of some of her good men to take the trip. All signs at the present moment, however, point to the probability of a strong British team taking the field next year.

At any rate the A. A. A. officials are going to leave no stone unturned that will contribute to that end. Nothing will be done this year but early next spring preliminary trials will be held all over the United Kingdom and in Ireland. The final elimination trials will be held in May and upon the results of these a full team will be nominated for the Olympic games. That is to say, the English authorities will take full advantage of their privilege of nominating twelve contestants in each event.

Of course, in some events that will be impossible. For instance, I don't suppose there are twelve good pole jumpers in the length and breadth of Great Britain and Ireland. But wherever possible the officials will leave themselves as much leeway as is necessary to the selection of the best team at the last moment.

PLAN COUP.

Then will occur what British followers of sports seem to think is a coup of rare quality. At any rate, I hear it discussed in whispers all over town, as if it were the greatest of secrets. The British championships are usually held in the first week in July. If held as usual next year they would interfere with the Olympic meet, which is billed to begin at the same time.

It is almost certain that the October meeting of the A.A.A. will decide not only to hold the British championships earlier than usual next year, but to hold them early enough to allow the selection committee to use the form shown in the meet as the basis of the choice for the team that will actually travel to Stocholm.

There is some talk in athletic circles of putting the British team under a trainer and forcing the men to adhere to a sensible routine and diet. But the mere suggestion has been met by indignant protests from that great mass of the British sporting public which sees bogeys of professionalism and commercialism in the wake of the paid trainer.

There are other athletic trophies and honors which now reside in the United States and which England would give her House of Lords to recapture.

For instance, there is the America Cup. Also there is the tennis championship which young Jay Gould won from Eustice Miles. But in these two instances England seems to be temporarily disheartened.

Sir Thomas Lipton tells me that so far as he is concerned there is no change in the situation; he is still waiting for the New York Yacht Club to alter its determination to stick to the rules which have always governed the races for the America Cup.

"Until the club agrees to race under the rules that govern all other yacht races in the United States,' he said, "I do not intend to challenge again. The next move is up to the New York Yacht Club."

Eustace Miles is too busy with vegetarianism and food reform to think of crossing the Atlantic to measure tennis bats with young Gould, and as Miles has no difficulty in disposing of the best of the native British talent, it is the Gould millions against a Portuguese reis that the world's tennis

Baum was at his worst yesterday and the Tigers got to him so hard in the first inning that the game was practically over before it began as the Irishman said as he walked out of the front gate. This goes with the reverse english for Castleton because he was so good that but one of the Senators got to third base. There was no beating him yesterday.

The game was all one way and that was the Tigers's way for there never was a time that the Senators had any chance. They hit Castleton for six swats but these were scattered in as many different innings and although two of these were doubles they did no good. The principal feature about the game was that it was short and sweet and no one had to worry about it.

Baum started out wrong in the first inning. He made Carlisle fly to center but Kane, playing second, hit a hot grounder to Lerchen, which was thrown wildly to first base. Kane ran to third on Patterson's bouncing infield single and a moment later Patterson got to second on a wild pitch. Ross bunted a safe hit in front of the plate which was intended to be a sacrifice but he reached first before Baum could handle the ball. Kane scored on this and Patterson ran in after the catch of Stinson's fly to right field.

In the third Carlisle's infield single, Kane's double to left, and Ross's fielder's choice which Danzig threw to the plate and which Kern muffed, scored two more runs. The fifth and final run in the fourth inning was due to successive singles by Brown, Castleton and Carlisle.

Castleton's heaving was so good that the only Senator to reach third base was Madden in the first inning and he arrived there on his own single, Shinn's sacrifice and a passed ball. Four others got as far as second base but died there, two doubles, a single and steal and an error and an out, being responsible for the advancements.

The Senators did all the fielding stunts worth mentioning. In the fifth inning Van Buren made a beautiful running catch of Stinson's long fly to center and in the sixth he backed up against the center fence to catch Carlisle's fly with his left hand high above his head. Patterson led in the hitting with two singles and a double and Danzig had a single and a double. Brashear was out of the game on account of a temporary illness and Kane played second base for eight innings. Brown was back in the game as a catcher, after the report had gone abroad that he could not catch since Bean Ball Seaton of the Beavers broke his finger with a pitched ball.

SOCIAL STAGS BY HIGHS AND Y. M. C. A.

The past week has been high school week at the Los Angeles Y.M.C.A. Three big "stags" have been pulled off, and the men of the three leading schools have been entertained in great style by the triangle division of the association.

Last Thursday evening the fifty of the leading men of Polytechnic were entertained at a banquet. Speeches were given by several of the students and by Mr. Dunn, principal of Polytechnic. After the banquet, the entire school was entertained with a vaudeville show, boxing contest, hot hand fest, serpentine, and a big swim in the beautiful tile, plunge of the association. About three hundred boys were in this plunge at the same time, and there was something doing that resembled a big splash. After the swim, "Big Eats" were handed out and the fellows held a rally in the auditorium.

On Friday night the entire Rugby squad of Los Angeles High, were entertained at dinner and speeches were made by Coach Noble, Mr. Housh and Mr. Petty. The Los Angeles stags were then taken through the same line of stunts handed out the Polyites the night before and they knocked several tiles off the roof when they turned loose to root for the football men, and for the Coast championship, which they are confident of taking into their camp this year.

Last night Manual Arts were handed the same kind of a package and seemed to enjoy it with the same amount of "pepp."

This series of meetings is held in pursuance with a new policy that has been adopted by the association, ing of the high school men in its various activities. A similar event will be pulled off for all the local colleges in the near future.

OXY'S CAPTAIN HAS ACCIDENT.

"YAHOO" JIM SMART WRENCHED HIS ANKLE.

Was Running to the Garage to Go to a Fire and Stepped on Something that Turned Over in the Dark—Extent of Injuries Not Yet Known.

Occidental's hopes for a championship football team this year received a severe setback yesterday morning when a telephone message was received at the college saying that "Yahoo" Jim Smart, captain of the 'varsity team, had seriously injured his foot Friday night at his home at Santa Ana.

It seems that Smart, who is six feet four inches in his stocking feet and weighs 190 pounds, was running out to the garage in his back yard to go to a fire. He stepped on something and fell, severely wrenching his ankle. It is not known exactly what damage has been done, as his foot was so swollen this morning that it was impossible to make an examination.

The loss of Smart, if he is forced to be out of the game the whole season, will be a serious blow to the team. Not only was he needed for his weight, but his experience would be an invaluable asset to the teamwork. This was his fourth consecutive year at his position as right tackle, where his aggressiveness has made him one of the best line-men on the Coast. He has been already selected twice for the all-southern team and expected to make it again this year. He came very near going to California this year. His parents wished him to go North and his credentials had already been accepted at the northern school when the intercession on the part of some of the members of the faculty caused him to change his mind and return to the Highland Park institution.

Jim is one of the most popular men at Occidental. He is an all-round man, having been president of one of the debating societies, president of his class, an officer of the Y.M.C.A., a football and track athlete. He enjoyed the reputation of being the strongest man in the southern colleges and would, in all probability, be a world-beater with the weights if properly coached. As it was, he came out in the conference track meet last year and took second place by three inches to Carver of Pomona in the discus throw after only two days' practice.

When Coach Pipal was approached after football practice Saturday morning he would not make any statement until he learned the exact extent of Smart's injury, other than that he would certainly be a great loss to the team if his injuries turned out to be serious.

"However," he said, "we will turn out a winning team, anyway, as the fellows have the right spirit." Practice went on as usual under the direction of the coach, Paul Lane, a husky weighing 179 pounds, being used in the place of Capt. Smart at right tackle. President Baer, on hearing the report of Smart's injury, said that if the report turned out to be true, it was too bad that the "jinx" should start in on the captain.

BADGER FOOTBALL MEN BEGIN TO REPORT.

MADISON (Wis.) Sept. 19.—With the arrival of Branstad, Neprud and Mackmiller yesterday, the first contingent of the Badger football squad reported for duty for the 1911 season. Coach "Big John" Richards said today that thirty men, to his certain knowledge, will be on hand when the practice begins. He said he has purchased the suits and that all the equipment is ready.

The best of last season's squad are eligible to play with the exception of Simmons, sub-tackle on the 1910 freshman team. The men are returning early in order to adjust their curriculum, to register and to make up any deficiencies that may bother them. Coaches Richards and Driver are in daily conferences on plans for the season.

Getting Busy.

COLLEGE FOOTBALL IS WELL UNDER WAY.

BY OWEN R. BIRD.

THE Southern California Intercollegiate football season is now well underway, as all the colleges, with the exception of Pomona, have opened, and had about a week's practice on the gridiron.

Pomona starts tomorrow, and, if the present indications in the registrar's office can be taken as any criterion, the "Sage Hens" will be going a hundred strong when the first call for football men is sounded over the wilds of the washes out in the Claremont Hills.

There are a hundred and thirty-seven freshmen registered at the present writing, and more to come. In fact, there are so many in the "pea green" class on the campus now that Manager Jones had to make a trip into Los Angeles last week to get a half-dozen tents to allow them sleeping quarters until the regular dormatories can be enlarged. Most all of these young men who are entering their college career are good enough for the football field, and Coach Stanton will have a wealth of material to pick from when it comes to choosing the 'varsity team.

Pomona at the present time holds the southern intercollegiate football championship, having tied U.S.C. last season, while they, Pomona, were still the champs. Now with U.S.C. out of the running it looks like fairly easy sailing for the Blue and White warriors to come home in front of the procession this fall.

The only serious contenders for the conference title this season will be Occidental and Whittier, with the odds in favor of the first named school. The Tigers have a team of veterans for the season this year and look as though they would be able to put up a good fight before counted out by the Sage Hen.

Whittier is something of an unknown quantity this season. Last year the Quakers came to the front with a team which had the forward pass and the open style of play down to a fine point. They had some of the best men in the South on their squad, but lacked in numbers and the necessary weight to carry through a winning year.

The question this season is how much better are these football men down in the poet's village? Coach White has a team of veterans to work with, that is, if we count the men who played on the team last fall as such, and I can't see how we can do anything else, and along with this item the fact remains that the squad this fall is nearly three times as large as it was last year at the same time. Coach White has not been saying much up to date, but already the "Friends" are going in scrimmage practice and the squad looks fine and fit, as the proverbial fiddle. Therefore the Quakers are the dark horse of the conference.

While we are speaking of these Friends, we may as well mention the new member of the conference, the University of Redlands. This college is surely an unknown quantity. They put up a fairly good game last year against the rest of the southern college teams, but were outclassed owing to lack of weight and numbers, but this season they say that the "Citrus Growers" have a bunch of farm hands who are the goods when it comes to a matter of pounds. Until they get out for the first game it will be a hard matter to tell what they really are and how much they are good for.

Now for the other branch of Southern footbool. U.S.C., has started on its new course of Rugby. The first games have met with but indifferent success, though Coach Tom Higgins is well satisfied with the showing of the green squad. The main trouble with Cards at the present reading of the archives lies in the fact that, outside of the law school members of the squad, who have had one year's experience in the new game, all the players have been brought up on a diet of the old game, and it takes some time to get this out of their many systems.

Higgins has one of the largest squads in the history of the south to pick from but is handicapped by the reason mentioned in the previous sentence. It will undoubtedly take the Cards a season to find their stride and the local fans must not criticise their efforts this fall with too keen an eye.

The games with Berkeley and Stanford will try the nerve and mettle of the men in the south. Not only will they be going up against a big proposition in both cases but they will be bucking teams which are starting on their fourth year of Rugby and this is a mighty item on the credit side of the ledger.

Now in Use in the U. S. Army Grouped in Front of Commissary Tents.

AT STANFORD AND CALIFORNIA

STANFORD seniors won the interclass Rugby championship Wednesday by defeating the sophomores, 8 to 0. Tom Sanborn, of Redlands, scored the first try for the seniors, after making a 40-yard sprint. The second try, converted by Capt. Erb, was made by "Auggie" Sanborn of Redlands, after his brother had made another long sprint and passed the ball to him.

The teams lined up as follows: Seniors—Corbet, A. Sanborn, Skinner, Partridge, Dole, Woodcock, Schaupp, W. L. Smith, forwards; Carson, half; Noble, T. Sanborn, fives; Brown, center; H. J. Smith, Kennedy, wings; Erb, fullback.

Sophomores—Franchesci, Dimon, Hall, Clover, Darsie, Watkins, Blass, Boulware, forwards; Tilton, half; Roberts, Gard, fives; Standish, center; Geissler, McCrary, wings; Kauffman, fullback.

Eighty men have signed up for wrestling at California. Another intercollegiate tourney is to be held this year.

An impromptu rally was started on the California campus after the last senior singing. In response to the first "oskis" men gathered from all qaurters, swelling the crowd to several hundred. President Wheeler addressed the rooters as they paused in their serpentine about the campus and through Berkeley.

Graduate Manager Burbank of Stanford instituted the students' season ticket system at Stanford this year. The price was set at $3, which includes student body dues for the first semester. The tickets will be honored at all games on the campus during the first semester, except interstate games and the California game. Tickets for the second semester will cost $2. Nearly 1000 tickets already have been sold.

Stanford freshmen have scored two Rugby victories thus far this season. Berkeley High was defeated, 3 to 0, and Palo Alto High was beaten, 8 to 0. Edwin Clark and Dutton, of Los Angeles, are showing up well with the "babies."

Benneson, who won the mile race at the P.A.A. track meet at Astoria, last month, has registered at Santa Clara College.

The underclass clash at the University of Nevada last week was a cane rush in which eighteen men from each class competed. The sophomores won.

The University of Nevada alumni Rugby team defeated the 'varsity, 13 to 11, last week.

Twenty-one men signed up for debating at the rally held at Stanford Wednesday night. The rally was the first of its kind ever held at Stanford.

"World and His Wife" is to be presented by Sword and Sandals, the dramatic society at Stanford, Friday night. The leading roles will be assumed by Miss Gertrude Workman, '12, and R. H. Seward, '12, of Los Angeles. Eugene Kern, '13, of Pasadena, and J. B. Beman, '12, of Los Angeles, also have important parts in the cast.

UNCLE JOE AGIN IT.

"I do not see my way clear to advo- the improvement of highways by ing the Treasury of the United tes. As you are aware, all public ds, streets and alleys in the United tes are post roads and I take it that gress has the power to improve a tion or all of them and to maintain same. In Illinois we have 60,000 les of black dirt roads. We are be- ning to improve them, and I trust ll improve them at the expense of rious townships, counties and with ch aid as the State may give from State Treasury. enators Reed Smoot of Utah and enry Cabot Lodge of Massachusetts rite expressing great interest in the roject as does Senator Perkins of California.

A MOTORIST'S VIEWS.

Representative Stephen B. Ayres of ew York writes from the standpoint a motorist:

"I have just returned from a motor trip of 1850 miles and realize more keenly than ever before how much good roads mean to residents of the rural localities. In our State of New York we have proposed a very extensive system of good roads and some of them are already built, others are building and many others are yet to be constructed.

"The difference in the general thriftiness of the people who live along the State highways and those who live on the little ill-kept roads, five or ten miles distant from the State highways, is very noticeable."

Senator Warren of Wyoming writes that, being keenly interested in all good roads movements, this proposition appeals to him directly and he will do anything possible to push it.

Representative Greene of Massachusetts expresses the opinion that Senator Cullom's bill does not allow enough money for so extensive an undertaking.

Driscoll of New York sees nothing in it but is willing to be convinced.

Representative Davenport of Oklahoma believes we ought to spend the money now spent on warships on this road.

Representatives Foster of Vermont, Rees of Kansas, Fuller of Illinois, John W. Weeks of Massachusetts, John J. Escle of Wisconsin, James T. Lloyd of Missouri, Edward W. Saunders of Virginia, J. Hampton Moore of Pennsylvania, John H. Small of North Carolina, Frank Plumley of Vermont, H. H. Whigham of Pennsylvania, William C. Adamson of Georgia are all represented by their signatures on this page. Most of them are in favor of a national highway. Mr. Weeks is one of those most strenuously opposed.

Big Squad at Yale.

NEW HAVEN (Conn.) Sept. 23.—Yale's big football squad of seventy candidates put in five hours in two hard workouts today. The practice consisted of running down punts, falling on the ball and passing. Candidates for the various positions were given individual attention by a small army of coaches. No signal work or scrimmaging was indulged in. Walter Camp, head of Yale football, and Bert Chamberlain, an addition to the coaching staff, were on the field. Hope to task as team captain for having let the bad play occur.

I asked Hap if this was true, but he only laughed and told me some one was stringing me. However, I have my own opinion.

HOW HAP BOSSES.

"You have to take each man on the team in a different way," he continued. "What makes one man play would be murder to another.

"When we are on the bench waiting to bat, I keep talking to them. I never roast a man for an error. A man can't help booting a ball sometimes. That's purely physical, and the mere matter of catching and throwing baseballs is the least important feature of baseball. The important part is the brain part.

"I never let a man go unrebuked for an error of judgment."

"Well, for instance——" I suggested.

"Well, for instance," he said, "a play that was made the other day in our first game with Sacramento.

"There was a man on third and a man on first. There was one out and the score was 3 to 2 in our favor.

"The next Sacramento batter hit a short fly into the field; the fielder caught it and threw to second, thus preventing one man running to second and holding the man on third."

"Well, gee whiz," I expostulated, "What better could he have done?"

"It was a bad play," said Hap.

"He should have thrown the ball home to me from the field. When he started to throw, the man on third would surely have come in; and the man on first would have started to second. The man on third would have scored, but I would have thrown the man out at second."

"Great," I said sarcastically, "and it would have cost you a run."

INSIDE BASEBALL.

"Why, don't you see," said Hap pityingly, "that when your team is far ahead you should always let in a run in order to get an out. That man on third could only have made one run and one run was nothing to us. On the other hand, putting that man out at second might have been of the utmost importance. That man on first was a potentiality. He might have caused a regular stampede of runs. The bases might have been filled and one out might have meant everything to us."

"I didn't think of that," I said.

"Of course you didn't," said Hap. "Neither did the fielder. Most baseball players spend most of their time not thinking. That's where inside baseball comes in."

"How can you expect them to think this all out in a flash?"

"Study," said Hap. "That's one reason why I am strong for college players. They are more apt at study.

"I never learned so much inside baseball in my life," he continued, "as one winter when I coached the college baseball team at Santa Clara.

"I taught myself while teaching those boys.

"Every rainy day I had them assemble in a classroom, seated at desks just as for an ordinary recitation.

"After they were seated and at attention, I would suddenly hit the desk a crack with a ruler and call out:

"'Score 10 to 2 in our favor; one man on first; man on third. Short fly knocked to right field.'

"Then I would point my finger suddenly at one of the boys.

"'Quick, what are you going to do?'

"When I first began, the boy I pointed at would get rattled and begin to sputter and stammer. But after a little while the answer would come back at me like a flash.

"I have always kept up that school idea with my team.

"When one of the men is about to bat, and they are all sitting along the bench, I say, 'Now you are going to bat; what are you going to do?' Often his confusion reminds me of the boys at Santa Clara.

"I even ask myself the same question out loud in front of all the players. As I pick u pthe bat, I will sometimes say, 'Now, Mr. Hogan you are going to bat, what are you going to do?'

"I think I had better bunt," I will answer.

"'Very well Mr. Hogan; you are right; go and bunt.'"

NO BIG LEAGUE FOR HAP.

"Hap," I said in a burst of admiration, "you are a wonder. Why don't you go to the big leagues. I understand some of the losing teams are anxious to get you put pep into them."

"Not for me," said Hap. "Vernon is my team. I like California, and I like the team. I am going to stay right here."

"But suppose," I persisted, "that you were called to a team like Cincinnati. How would you handle such a team?"

"The first thing," replied Hap. "I would contrive to be the room mate for a while of every man on the team until I thoroughly studied his character. Then I would appoint a good team captain to serve under me."

"But they tell me the main difficulty is with the hostile Cincinnati fans."

"I think the fans could be handled. The great mistake some managers make is to play to the grand stand; others err in playing without regard to the fans. I don't do either. I have never made a grand stand in my life. If my own wife were in the audience I wouldn't know it. On the other hand, I do try to make our games picturesque, and interesting from a spectator's standpoint."

"Hap," I said. "You're an old fraud. I can tell you when you pulled a bit of pure stage business."

STAGE BUSINESS.

I recalled to his memory the time when Gipe was batted out of the box one day. Instead of immediately putting in another pitcher, Hap ordered out the whole pitching staff to warm up.

He stood in his catcher's armor with folded arms watching the whole field full of gyrating, winding-up pitchers. Finally he gave a signal to Brackenridge, who came out and fanned one batter; then he retired and Stewart came to the mound.

"Hap, honestly, didn't you intend to put in Stewart all the time."

"Yes, I did," answered Hap, grinning, "but my object in ordering out all the pitchers was not a grand stand play as you supposed. Gipe suddenly blew up before I had a pitcher warmed up. I arranged all that show of warming up the whole pitching staff for the simple purpose

Prof. Hap.

WHEN I WENT TO COLLEGE WITH HAPPY HAP HOGAN.

He Was the Star Catcher for U.S.C. and, With Dr. Hiram Tibbetts as Pitcher, Lowered the Proud Colors of Pomona's Championship Team—Eddie Maier Was Pitcher for Rival High School Team.

BY A CO-ED.

When I was a scrub in the academy of the University of Southern California, Happy Hogan played ball for U.S.C. He was not the hope of the white race, but of the co-eds of U.S.C. He won the first game of baseball for us and was our real hero.

When he came, they told us he was the champion baseball catcher of Southern California. If they had said of the world we would have believed them.

I can well remember the first game in which he played. We were all so anxious to see him. He tramped out to the diamond in his funny baseball clothes and I remember one girl said: "Oh, dear; he's good-looking." That settled it. He was our champion from that time on.

Alas, Happy Hogan, or Wallace Bray, did not win his first game, nor the second, nor the third; but he showed our boys how to play. He had the habit of never giving up. Why, he played just as hard in the last innings when the game seemed to be over as he did in the first few sets.

We had been beaten in baseball so many times that we were getting disgusted. When Mr. Hogan came on the scene, registered, I think, in the freshman class, and donned his baseball togs, we took courage. His name was Irish. That meant a fighter. Well, he won us all the first time he played.

HAP THRILLED CO-EDS.

That was a funny game. It was against the Los Angeles High School. Oh, yes, we were a college, but, then, even the High School boys could beat us. Well, though High School won, Happy Hogan sent such thrills of terror into the hearts of those red schoolhouse boys that we knew just what would happen the next time—and it did—we won.

Well, now for the funny part. They tell me Eddie Maier is one of the directors or something else of the Vernon team. Well, Eddie Maier pitched for L. A. High and Happy Hogan caught for us. "Doc" Hiram Tibbets was in the box for us and no catcher had been able to hold his funny curves until Mr. Hogan came.

Eddie whirled in the curves in grand style, but I think he was much more proud of the work of our catcher, Happy Hogan, than he was of the man behind the bat for the hilltoppers.

That was a great game. Of course, the hilltop boys went away ahead of us at first. I think it was about the seventh inning when Mr. Bray (that's his real name) got into action. We were beaten, but that made no difference to our catcher. He laughed long and loud. He was the happiest man on the team. That was something new for us.

Well, we were beaten in that game, but it made no difference to Happy Hogan. He had that name out there, you know. He smiled so much that we thought him one of the best-looking boys on the team.

HAP WAS HAPPY.

You know I was only a scrub then and, of course, did not cut much figure, even among the co-eds. But we girls did admire the man who could play without worrying. Well, in that eighth inning, Happy Hogan just kept our team from going to pieces and we almost won. It was as good as a victory for us, because we scared those fellows good and plenty.

Then the crowd became interested in the U.S.C. team. We had a pitcher in "Doc" Tibbets and we had a talked about that battery in the papers and that made us so happy. Then we began to win.

Well it was not a case of U.S.C. not coming back, because we had never arrived. The Methodists did not have to come back, we just went ahead and think of it. We defeated Pomona.

That was a happy day. Of course, Happy Hogan did the work. We trembled in our shoes at the thought of the intercollegiate game. Pomona was good and we had been beaten so many times. But, oh my! Happy started to holler in the midst of that game when Pomona was ahead. That almost seemed sacrilegious.

Then the fireworks began. We made two tallies and were ahead and then something that had never happened before in college baseball was dished up for the bleachers at Pomona. The Sagebrushers were given goose eggs. It was a shut out in every inning. The way "Doc" Tibbets and Hogan pitched and caught was a marvel in amateur ball playing.

BEAT COLLEGE CHAMPS.

Perhaps, this sounds tame to the baseball fan, but it was anything but tame to the Claremonters. Tibbets whirled those outshoots over the plate. Hap Hogan, the only man who had ever been able to hold "Doc," caught the pitched balls, one after another.

Those Sagebrushers swung away at empty space and Hogan grinned. What did we do? Why we shouted our lungs out. What happened? U.S.C. won her first baseball victory.

That was a happy day and we gave a banquet and, of course, Hogan was the guest of honor. Now what do you think? Well, he was bashful as a Scrub. He blushed and tried to make a speech and then sputtered and quit.

HAPPY'S SPEECH.

Why we thought that Mr. Bray would make a grand talk. We had seen him on the diamond doing all the talking and we had seen him catch every pitched ball. We had seen and heard him jollying the other fellows, but he was fanned out when it came to making a speech. But then what did that matter. He was not a U.S.C. orator. He was a baseballist.

Now, if you ask me what sort of an undergraduate Wallace Bray was, I'm sure I can't tell you. They said, of course, in a joking way, that Mr. Bray took music and gym work. Well, all I know, he was a baseball player. No, I was never in any of his classes because, as I told you, I was an academy scrub. But he was popular even with the seniors in college and he pulled U.S.C. out of many a hole.

Seems funny to me now to read about Eddie Maier and his Vernon team and then to think that Mr. Bray, our Happy Hogan, is about to win that pennant for the man he almost defeated in that U.S.C.-High School baseball game.

VERNONS ARE NOT CAST-OFFS.

BY HAP HOGAN.

Vernon is the baby club of e league and generally re-rred to as the "Cast-offs," n injustice to our club. The ajority of players in the oast League are "Cast-offs." r. Maier, president of our ub, has supported us in every anner. His motto, "get a ood man at any cost."

I am indeed grateful to the ans of Los Angeles and Ver-on, for the interest they have hown in our club. The play-rs also appreciate the loyal upport, and no doubt it is a ig factor in our fine showing.

HAP HOGAN.

aining a few minutes for Stewart et limbered up."

I suppose in handling a team of -offs,"—I began.

Who said they were cast-offs?" de-nded Hap bristling up instantly.

Everybody," I retorted.

These stories about my cast-off ers are like my glass eye," sniffed , still indignant.

What about your glass eye," I , hastily. To tell the truth, I e always longed to ask Hap about glass eye.

Hap laughed.

My glass eye is one of the queer-baseball incidents I ever heard of.

HAP'S GLASS EYE.

My eyes are both real, genuine est-to-goodness eyes. Of course, one could possibly play with one

For some reason that I can't ex-plain, myself, I always turn my head away when I throw to second base.

"One time when I was coaching a college baseball nine I threw to first, trying to catch the runner off; and the ball hit the first baseman in the neck. He went down like a log.

"Why don't you stay awake?" I yelled.

"Why don't you throw the same way you are looking?" he retorted.

"Well, my habit of turning my head this way started the report that I had only one eye. Every time a new player reports to me for duty, it amuses me to see him take a peek, first at one eye and then the other, trying to decide which one is glass.

"Jim Jeffries always insists to this day that I have a glass eye.

"One day we were playing hand ball and he was joshing me about it.

"'If you haven't got a glass eye, let's see you turn your head; close one eye and catch this ball.'

"I shut one eye and held out my hands. But say, did you ever try to shut one eye and catch a ball? No? Well, you can't do it. I suppose it's on account of the blind spot in every eye that was told of in that novel, 'The Martian,' that the author of 'Trilby' wrote. You see the ball coming; then it disappears.

"Well, of course I missed the ball.

"'There,' said Jeff, triumphantly, 'I told you you had a glass eye; you can't fool me.' And to this day I have never been able to change his opinion."

As long as we were on forbidden personalities, I decided to get rid of one more question about Hap that has been festering in my soul.

"Hap," I said, candidly, "you are the rottenest batter in the world, yet you seem to be the surest pinch hitter on the team."

"It's the signals," said Hap, confidentially.

"I nearly always bring a man in from third when I go to bat because he knows the exact second when he should start running.

"I am a great believer in signals," said Hap, as we got up to go. "I signal every member of the team as well as the pitchers when I call for a ball.

"For this reason, the first quality I look for in a pitcher is perfect control. If I call for one ball and the pitcher serves another, it not only throws me off, but the whole team, as well."

Something of Tiiem.

Terrible Confession.

HAP HOGAN REEKS OF YELLOW BLOOD.

"DO YOU know why this fellow Hap Hogan is called Hogan?" said one of the ball players the other day. "Well, if you never heard his own story of it, here is the best explanation.

"A year or so ago when the once Sacramento pitcher Nourse was green at the baseball business, he heard one of the players whisper darkly one day that Hogan wasn't that fellow's name and that his real one was Bray.

"Why didn't Nourse, who looked like a smart fellow, go and ask Hogan why he had two names, for no one had been able to find out. So Nourse braced Hap one day, and got the truth, according to Hap's confession.

"'Say, kid,' he told Nourse, 'it is this way. I was playin' ball down in Arizona one winter, and after a rather poor season, I was coming back to California. I was a feelin' kind of grouchy on that trip back, and went out on the platform of a car one night to cool off, and change my thoughts by lookin' at the worse than nothing landscape.

"'A Chinaman gets on at some flag station and as I walked back into the car he stepped on my heels. That didn't make me feel very good and when I went to sit down in a seat he stumbled over one of my feet stickin' out in the aisle.

That made me real hot and I jawed him some and he talked back pretty sassy. We kept chewin' the rag and finally he said me likee fight. That made me strong for it, too, and we went out on the platform.

"'We had a terrific battle while the train was flying along, and he scratched me and kicked me to beat the band. It was a fight for life and I finally knocked him off the car. As luck would have it we were goin' across a bridge at the time and he fell down into the dry bed of the creek on to the rocks.

"'I don't know whether it killed him or not, and I didn't care at the time. The train didn't stop, and I didn't try to make it. Maybe he was dead. I never heard from Arizona about it, but I thought it best to change my name when I got back here. Now, kid, don't you ever tell this, for you are the only one I ever breathed it to.'"

And the funny part of it was that Nourse DID believe it, but none of the other players did, for they had heard the same pipe dream a number of times.

SIZZLING SCRAPS FROM RUGBY GRID

Pat Higgins feels that things are expected considering the difficulties encountered in the change from American to Rugby. While the men have been at work faithfully for the most part, none of them have had enough practice this year to show up all of their good points.

Those who have had some experience at the game in other schools are naturally the present stars, if there are any deserving of the name. The older U.S.C. men are only just beginning to get acquainted with the new game, and to find in what respects it differs from the American which they are accustomed to playing.

It is the policy of the manager to the men possible out on the field for practice, instead of eliminating all but a couple of dozen of the most proficent of the candidates as is the usual custom. It is thought that this system will not only create more interest in the sport, but will be the best way of teaching the school the finer points of the new game.

S. E. Meserve is a new man who is out for Rugby, coming from the law department of the university. He attended California for several years and played on the freshman team. Meserve may not be able to do much active work himself on account of an injured knee, but will be of value on account of his knowledge and experience at the game.

The layer of shavings has not made Bovard Field as "slow" as it was thought that it would. There is a good firm foundation under it, and the players speak very favorably of the shaving idea. It certainly saves the knees. The athletic managers say that the field will be harrowed before the season's big events come off.

The cinder track which surrounds the field has been the cause of a large number of skinned knees. The field is of ample size, but the men simply won't stay on it, and a small slide means a big raw spot.

Eddie Hummel always was a pretty good man at the pass and is still there with the sweetly-tinkling gongs. He is making a hard try for a back field position on the 'varsity.

THE GENTLE ART OF PUTTING.

BY ALMA WHITAKER.

To putt or not to putt, that is the question.

And it takes some of them a dickens of a time to settle it. The beautiful and solemn game of golf goes with a subdued and mellow swing until one gets to the green.

And then. . . . . A long-hushed pause, and the air is all becalmed.

A young cherub, known to fame as the caddie, strikes an interesting pose in the center of the green, with one hand poised gracefully on the flag stick. Another solemnly lays down his caddie bag, possesses himself of the carpet broom and, with a slow and gentle rythm, sweeps the sand to immaculate smoothness.

Then golfer A looks at his ball critically. He clasps the putter with both hands, arranges himself in position, sees that his feet point in the right direction, that his back shows the necessary curve, that his tummy is becomingly retiring, and proceeds to address the ball. During this performance his air is one of conscious dignity, and he wears a thoughtful frown upon his brow.

Once again he addresses the ball. Then he draws himself up with a gesture of annoyance. A small particle of dry leaf has fluttered within the line of putt! The carpet broom appears again, the while A looks on with a manner that distinctly says, "Supposing I had taken that stroke!"

For the second time his anatomy is arranged for the great putt, and once again he addresses the ball. His eye surveys the distance between his sphere and the ever diminishing hole. And then. . . .

He has struck the ball.

There is an expectant hush as it wends its way towards the flag stick, which the Cherub removes with tasteful grace. Will it? Can it? Has it? But no, it hesitates on the very brink. Can we bear the awful suspense?

Ah! oh, dear! It has stayed its course within an inch of the hole. A regards it with venom and disgust and turns his back.

Then B steps up with a brisk air of confidence. He looks right down the hole to make sure no fiend lurks there to thrust his ball back again. Then he takes the broom from the caddie and with a quiet, precise hand he sweeps his ground himself.

He returns the broom to the caddie with a delicious insouciance, and arms himself with the fateful putter.

Expanding his chest with conscious pride, planting one leg slightly forward and seeing that it forms an accurate angle of forty-five degrees, he bends his person slowly to the required position, in order presumably that nothing shall become unhitched. Then he looks at the ball. Then he looks at the hole. This he repeats indefinitely for five minutes, while his engineering brain works out the millimeters.

Then he straightens out and takes a look at the ball from a different angle. Shuts one eye, then the other. Looks down his putter and feels it carefully up its entire length. Then he addresses the ball, first of course, having once more arranged his person in all the proper bends and angles.

Now arrives the great moment. Lifting his putter with calm deliberation he gives it the half restrained stroke of the expert, and the deceitful sphere proceeds upon its way. A tense moment follows. It reaches the hole, quivers in the balance, turns aside, completely encircles the rim and then . . . oh, horrows, it knocks the other fellow's ball into the hole and itself gaily wanders off for a merry constitutional.

A smiles sardonically and B remarks something about the greens being in a disgusting condition.

There are eighteen greens and eighteen touching performances of this nature. It is beautiful to see the great brains at work, to see the splendid and noble bearing of mankind in adversity, and to see with what dignified modesty success is born.

Putting is the gentle side of golf. Gentle but intricate, calling for the clear eye, the calm nerve, the alert brain, the steady hand, and patience beyond all understanding.

The figure may be long and narrow like Mr. Norman Macbeth, or not long and narrow like Mr. Edward Tufts. The hair may be luxuriant and glossy like Mr. H. M. H. Woodcock, or not luxuriant and glossy like Senator Buella. You can wear what clothes you like, and any kind of breakfast food is permissible; these are not the essential qualities in the art of putting.

Putting is a very serious matter. You have only to watch Mrs. J. V. Eliot putt to know this. She will diligently do her own sweeping, take stock of her ball and its exact geographical position from a hundred points of vantage, scan the green for minute particles of invisible atoms, and pat it gently with her own fair hand.

Poised gracefully, ready for the stroke, her eagle eye spies a waft of angel's breath crossing the line of putt and she waits respectfully till it has passed. Then she goes and peeps down the hole, and gives a few more loving little pats to the surrounding sand. Then satisfied that all is as it should be, the great moment is at last reached and we hold our very breaths as the putter is gently raised.

The silent thrill of anxiety that holds us as that inspired ball makes its way straight and undeviating to its destination is a moment to have lived through and the happy sigh that escapes us as it drops coyly from sight betokens exaltation unknown in other walks of life.

The golfer's greatest joy, the consummation most devoutly to be wished, is to make a long putt—and his greatest shame is to miss a short one. More souls are jeopardized over this latter misfortune than is ever dreamed of in heaven or earth!

Of the most thorough description is invited in regard to the mechanical construction as well as the superficial appearance of the BUICK.

As to the appearance you can't help but be charmed with the beauty and grace of BUICK body lines.

As to the mechanical construction the stanch, sturdy frame and axles, the long resilient springs, the painstaking machine work on motor and transmission and differential, and above all, the actual performance of the car, prove the unassailable superiority of BUICK efficiency.

Profit by Experience and Avoid Loss

SINCE Howard E. Coffin established a new automobile standard with the HUDSO "33," it is not safe to choose any car selling under $2500 except by the standa fixed.

STRONG claim, you say! But ask among those whom you know. Inquire on street even of children. Everyone nowadays knows what cars are giving best service. People invariably refer to the HUDSON "33" when they speak of value. That is a certain indication of quality. The thousands of cars used by every type of driver, on every possible kind of road, are proving that the engineers and other did not exaggerate when they said "the HUDSON '33' was Howard E. Coffin's Masterpiece."

THAT is the reason why you should see the HUDSON "33." The 1912 show an event greater value than those of 1911. There is a wider range of designs, as beautiful in line and finish as it is possible to make automobiles. The complete and of highest quality. Many extra features have been added for the comfort venience of driver and passengers. Changes have been effected that assure longer wear less maintenance cost, although in these items the HUDSON "33" has been notably The 1912 car is larger, roomier, and, impossible as it may seem, it even quieter than original "33."

The HUDSON "33" is furnished in four models: A Touring Car, a Torpedo, a Torpedo Roadster and the Mile-a-Minute Roadster. The price of each is $1750 f.o.b. Los Angeles. All models except the last named have closed bodies, genuine mohair top and wind shield. Demountable rims, tire irons, 34x4-inch tires, highest grade black enameled lamps, Bosch magneto, tools, etc. The Mile-a-Minute car has storm apron and 100-mile-an-hour Warner Roadsters have luggage box on rear, around which extra inflated tire can be carried.

THE WIDOW WISE

Verses by Paul West ▾ Drawings by W. H. Loomis

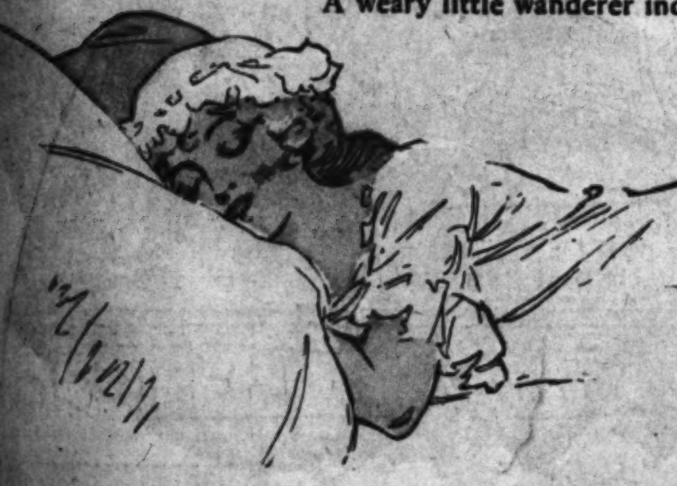
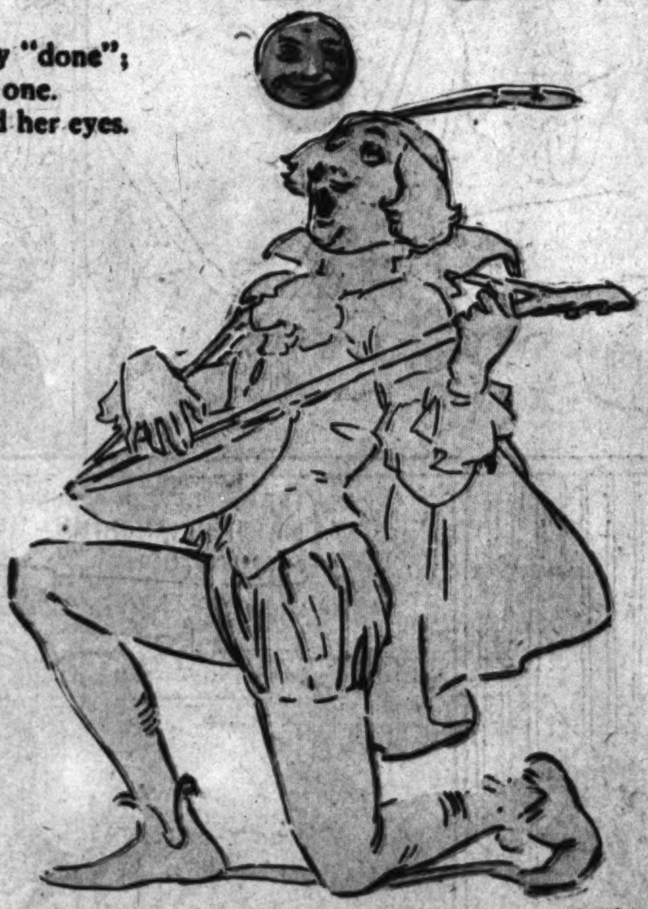
1--In famed Milan the Widow Wise the sights had fairly "done";
To every wondrous spot she'd been, nor slighted any one.
So, one night, truly "tuckered out," she gladly closed her eyes.
A weary little wanderer indeed was Widow Wise!



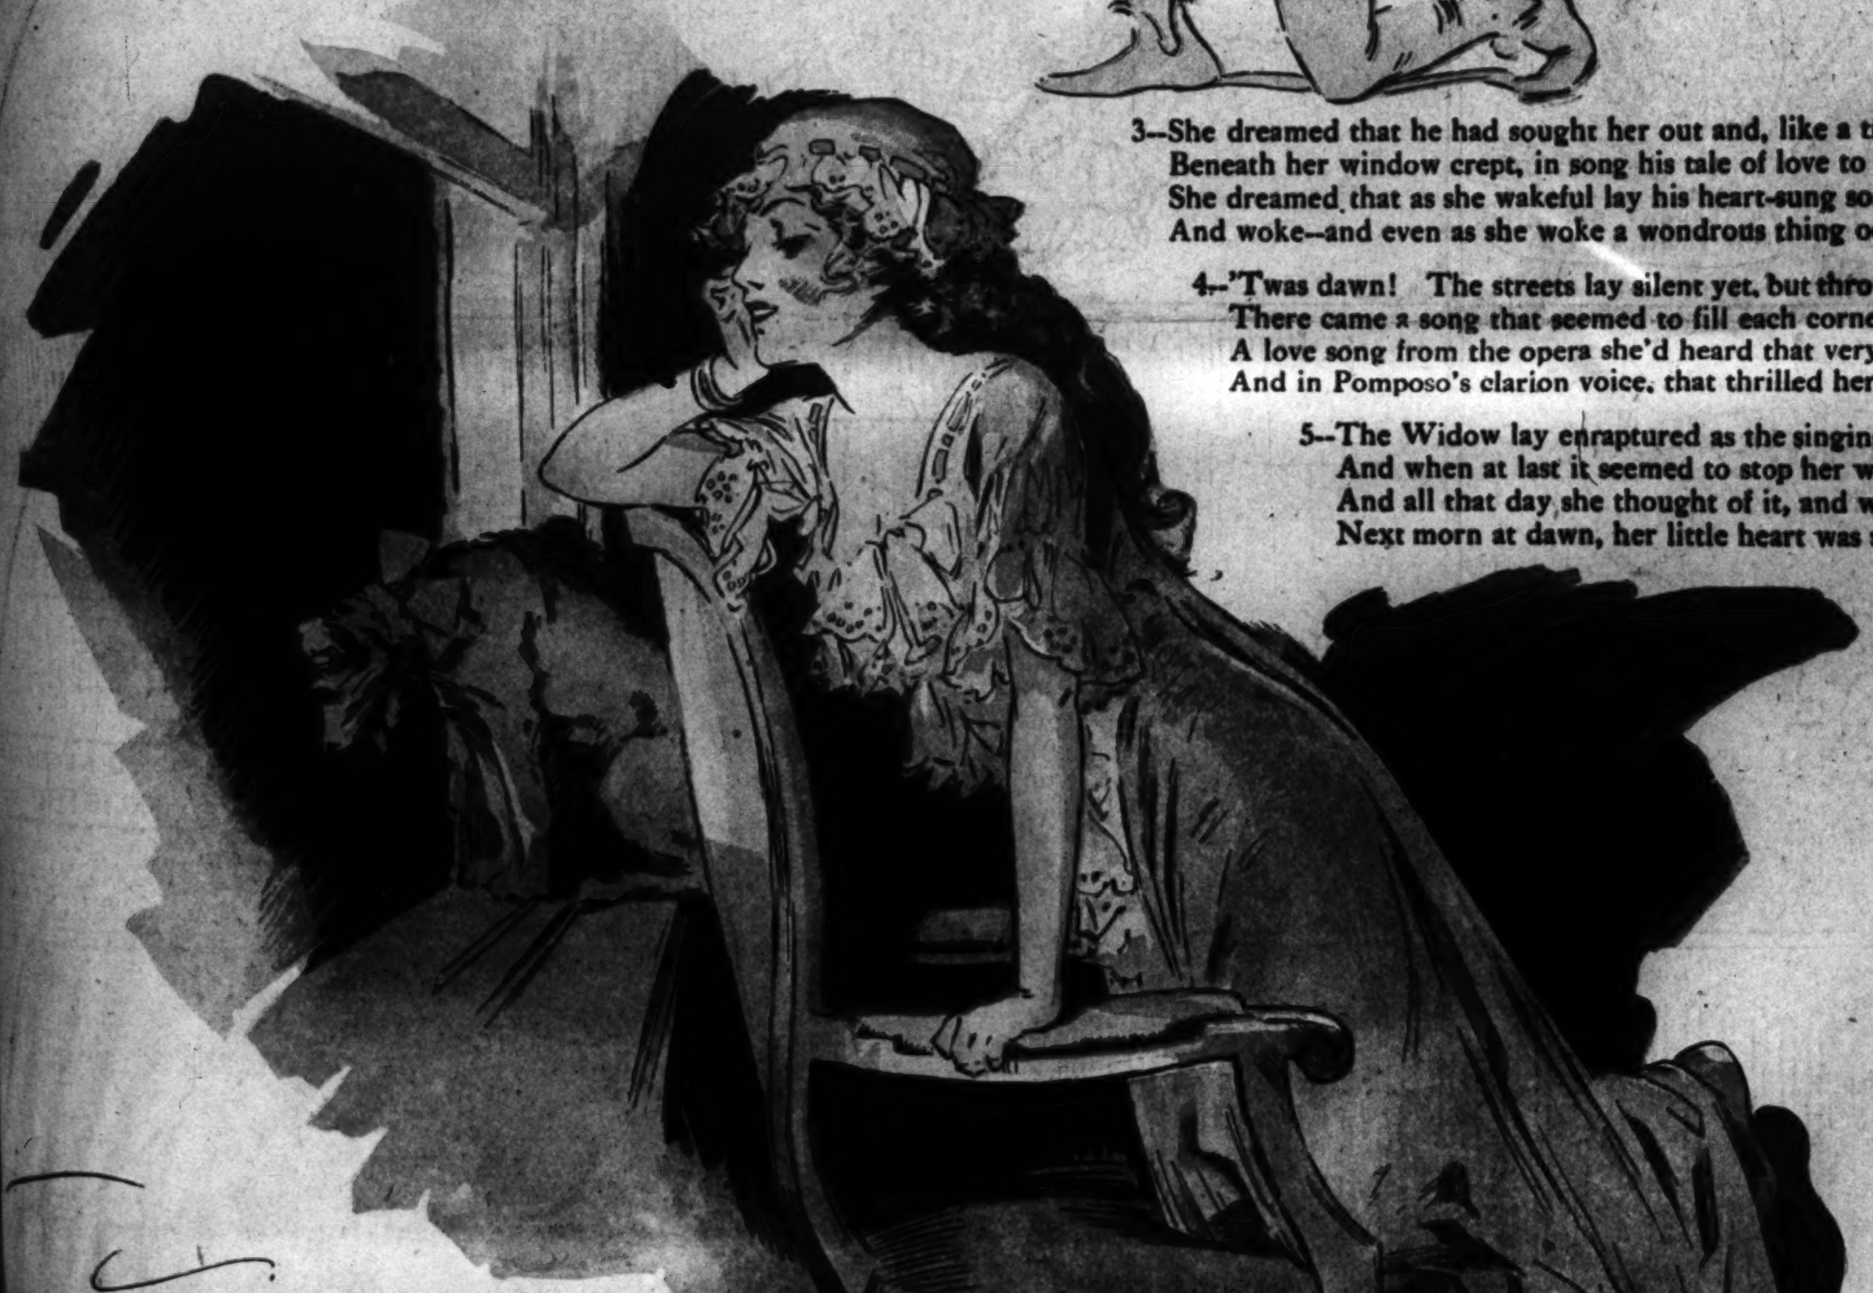


2--But sleep was scarce her portion, for she'd been to hear, that night,
The opera at La Scala, and had shivered with delight
At the tenor of Pomposo, who had sung with wondrous vim;
And, charmed by his appearance, too, the Widow dreamed of him.

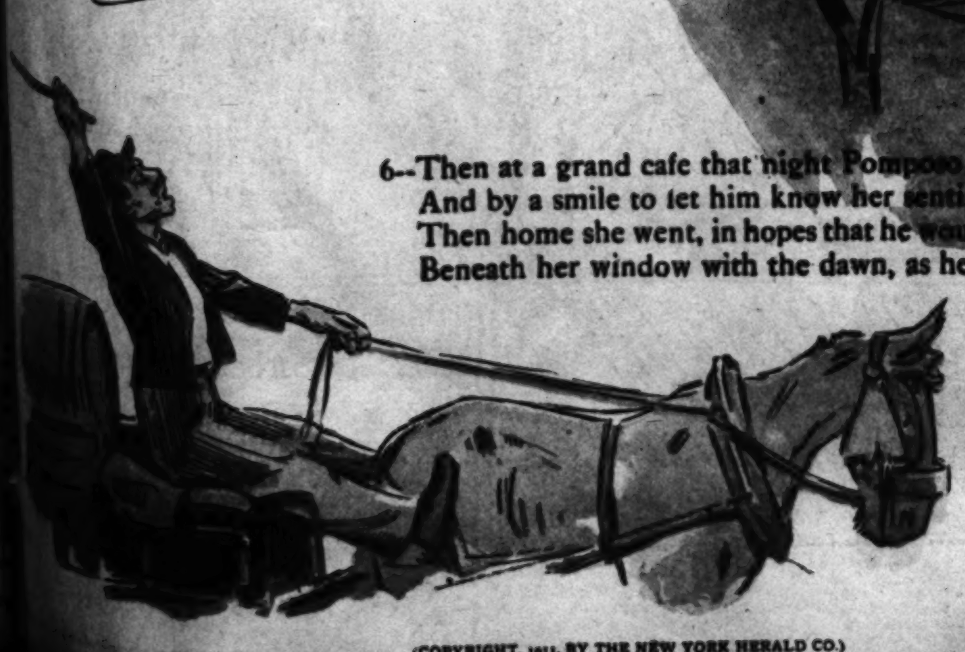
3--She dreamed that he had sought her out and, like a troubadour,
Beneath her window crept, in song his tale of love to pour.
She dreamed that as she wakeful lay his heart-sung song she heard,
And woke--and even as she woke a wondrous thing occurred!

4--'Twas dawn! The streets lay silent yet, but through the early gloom
There came a song that seemed to fill each corner of her room--
A love song from the opera she'd heard that very night--
And in Pomposo's clarion voice, that thrilled her with delight!

5--The Widow lay enraptured as the singing rose and fell,
And when at last it seemed to stop her woe she scarce could tell,
And all that day she thought of it, and when again it came,
Next morn at dawn, her little heart was all one raging flame!



6--Then at a grand cafe that night Pomposo she espied
And by a smile to let him know her sentiments she tried.
Then home she went, in hopes that he would come and sing once more
Beneath her window with the dawn, as he had sung before.



7--With day's first blush again the song aroused her as she slept.
The Widow slipped a peignoir on and to the window crept.
She saw--Pomposo? No, indeed! A teamster short and swart,
Who sang, the while he roundly beat the horses of his cart!

8--"You sing to me?" the Widow asked. Said he, "No, not to you;
But just to make my horses go--as all we teamsters do!"
She slammed her window. "Next," she thought, with angry flashing eyes,
"I'LL FALL IN LOVE WITH A SONG MACHINE!" exclaimed the Widow Wise.

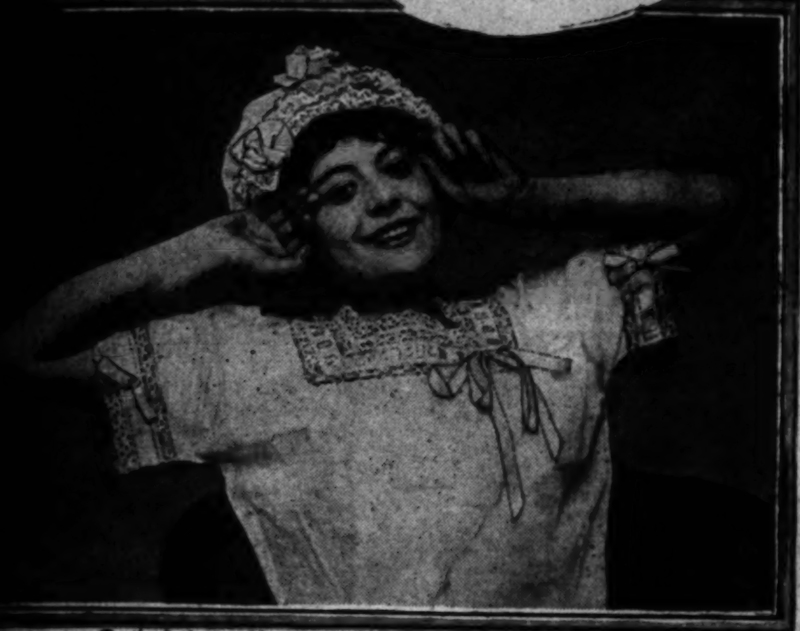
THE NEWEST IN NIGHTGOWNS



Quite Like a Chemise

WHEN the poet wrote that

> Beauties, when disposed to sleep,
> Should from the eye of keen inspector keep,

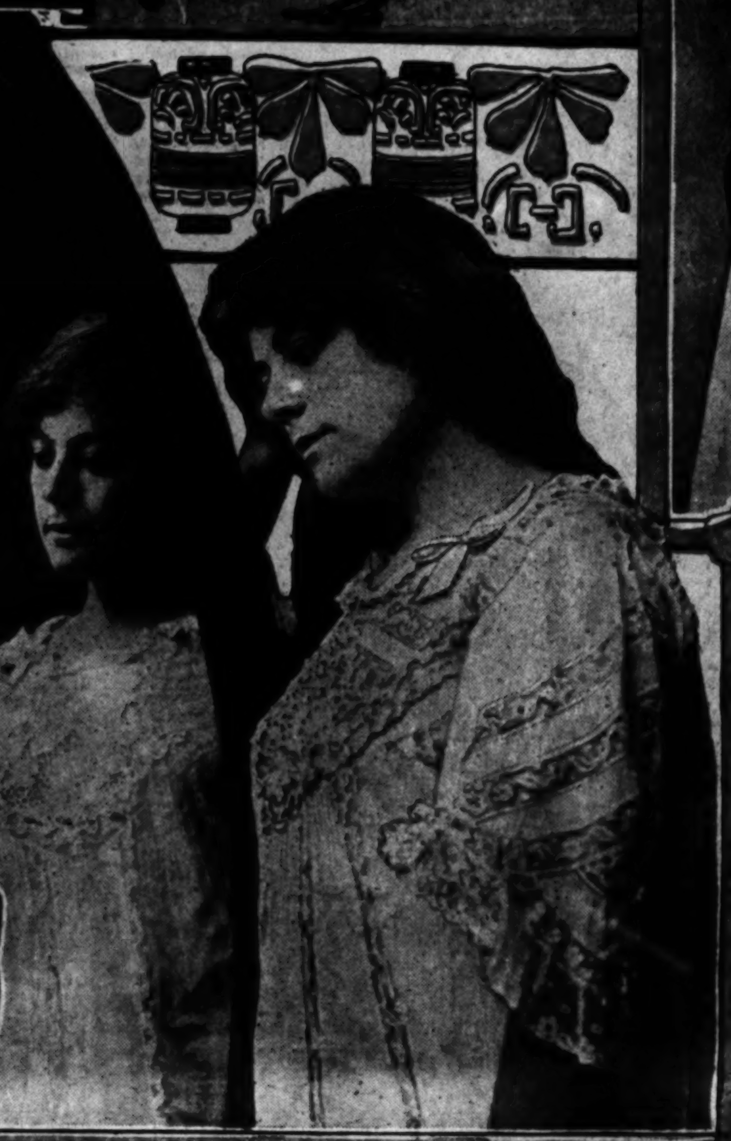
he had not seen the attractive models of nightgowns that have come to us in newest form. The question of undergarments is one of personal interest to womankind. What feminine heart and eyes do not respond to the offering of the latest in lingerie? What mother and daughter do not wander into the "little shop" and enjoy its newest suggestions?

Here are some nightgowns, each one of which has an attractive feature. Whether you are interested in the elaborate, lace-trimmed gown or in Spartan simplicity, your glance over this page will be profitable.

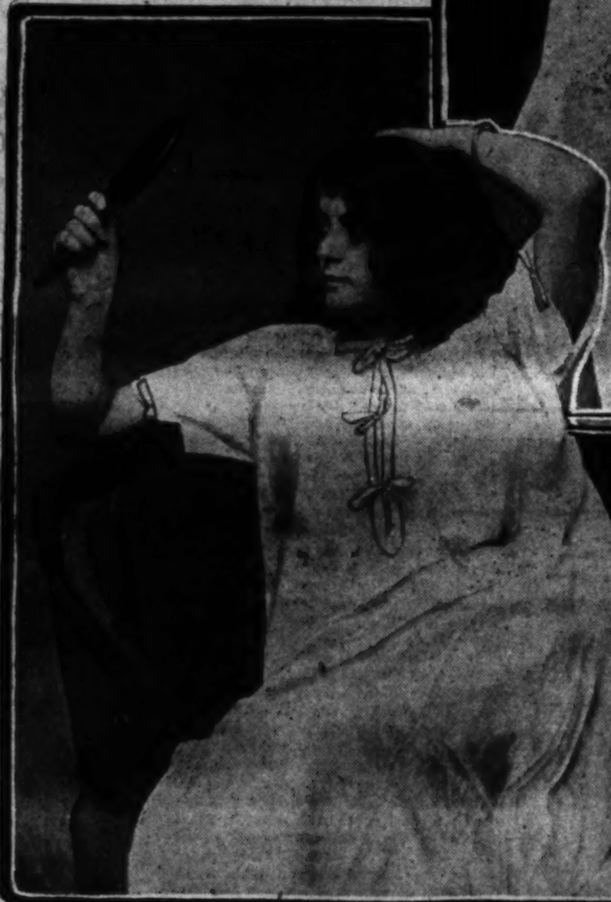
In one lovely model wide embroidery is used to form the straight yoke and the short sleeves. A width of lace woven in the batiste embroidery gives the gown a sheer, cool effect. Beading marks the upper or lower line of the yoke and covers the line of attachment at the armhole. Valenciennes lace edges the sleeve and the band and bows of wide ribbon add a touch of color to the whole. Hand-run tucks give fullness below the yoke.

An elaborate model, fresh from a French shop, shows the use of narrow insertion applied in bands on the bell-shaped sleeves, which are edged with deep lace. There is a motif of lace at the front, forming the nucleus of a pointed yoke. Fine valenciennes lace fills out the rest of the top. Tucks give fullness and strips of lace are inset from yoke to hem.

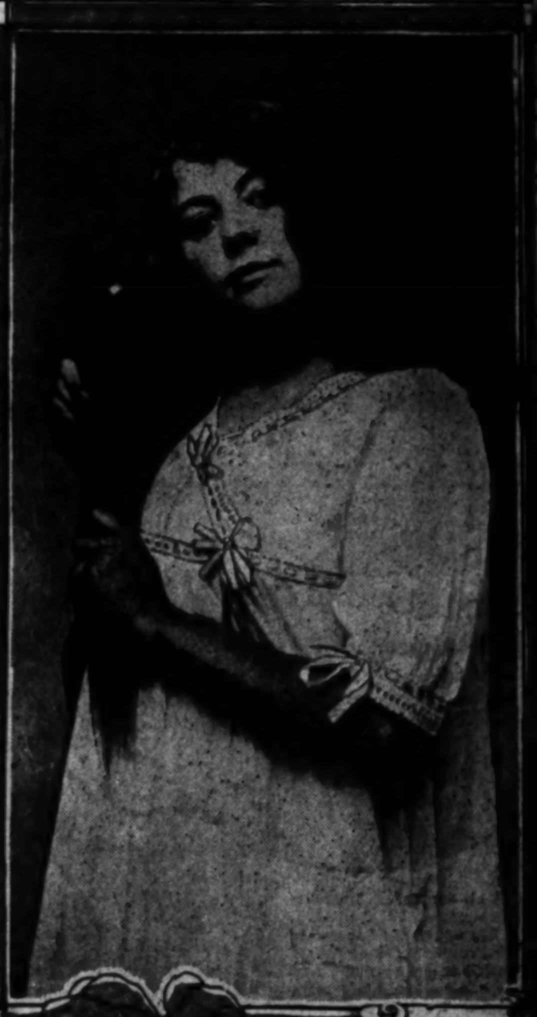
The vogue for heavy Turkish lace is shown in another kimono model. It heads the top of the gown and is continued in a line on each sleeve. A crossed band is inserted on the sleeve above hand-run tucks, and the elbow-length sleeve is edged with insertion and a bow. A group of fine tucks at the front and back finish this easily constructed gown.



An Elaborate, Lace Trimmed Model.



A Russian Smock



The Simple Surplice Style

Quite like a chemise is the simple little robe with a yoke of beading and cluny lace. A square effect is given, and the cool, short sleeves are trimmed with beading and lace at the edge. Ribbon is run through the beading.

The "Russian smock" is something new, isn't it? It is extremely simple, with a binding or facing of sheer linen through which ribbon is run. At the front there is an opening extending down to the waist line. It is bound, and the two sides are held together by ribbon tied in bows.

A simple surplice style comes into our notice. The yoke is formed of crossed cambric outlined with fine beading. The top is pointed and the sleeves are bishop and half-length, ending in a simple embroidered edge. Ribbon adds the feminine touch of color.

Irish lace has invaded the field of lingerie and forms entire yokes of nightgowns. It is shown in the last model heading the top of the gown. Its points extend down into the material, which is hand-tucked between each two.

Lace beading and edging finish the top. The short sleeves are plain and comfortably full, ending in lace cuffs. Ribbon is again used for the finish.

If you can wear one of these you will be happy—even in your sleep. The outfit for the year needs your attention. Why not copy the newest and the prettiest?

"The BLESSED SUNSHINE"—A MODERN IMPROVEMENT

"What would they think of their granddaughters on tennis court and golf links?"

ITH all the Modern Improvements."

We are so used to seeing the formula tacked on to rtisements issued by real estate hat we do not enumerate them ourselves. We take as a mat- ourse that the phrase includes cold water in kitchen and bath- ationary tubs; gas and perhaps lights; telephone service; gas city property; thorough drain- uburban districts, and plenty of om.

"best room" in the old home- has been written up, or down, haustively as to need no de- ion from me. I have remarked here that it was rarely opened , when the minister took tea his parishioners, or when sum- had gone through the country-side that funeral services would be held in the farmstead. I added that the ghost of dead comfort lay in state in the stuffy "parlor" from one New Year's day to the next. I speak within bounds in declaring that it did not have a good "sunning" in ten years and more. Sunshine would fade the thrifty woman's carpet. When her daughter married a man of means and removed to the city, she draped her windows with crimson or scarlet brocatelle and hung lace or muslin curtains next to the windows. I can recall when that style of drapery was the height of fashion and elegance. Likewise, that the sun was jealously shut out, lest the glowing reds might be embrowned by his kisses. Beds were festooned with chintz or silk and not only set in the shadiest corner of the chamber, but not a blind was unclosed which could admit far-reaching rays. Reception rooms were kept so dark that the visitor staggered blindly to a seat, and could not recognize her hostess until her eyes had accommodated themselves to the gloom.

Tourists in the mother country account for the scarcity of windows and the meager dimensions of these by recollections of the "window-tax" abolished within a century. Had window glass been free, the sunlight would have been shut out all the same. It was a foe, not a friend and ally. Our grandmothers wore veils of silken tissue, and even of woolen stuffs so thick that their own children could not have descried feature or color through the folds had they met upon the street. The oriental woman shrouds her head with "mendeel" and "izzar" in obedience to ancient prejudice against the exposure of the face of a virtuous woman to the gaze of any man not her relative or husband. Her occidental sister shunned the sunshine because it tanned and freckled.

"The custom of taking breakfast on the veranda is gaining favor."

I laugh aloud sometimes, and oftener am secretly diverted by the idea of what those ancient dames of high degree, who rated complexion as hardly secondary to moral graces, could they behold the bared heads and bronzed visages of their granddaughters on tennis court and golf links.

Yes, sunshine, as a constant visitant to our homes and persons, is, beyond question, a "modern improvement." We have learned the lesson so gradually that we do not yet comprehend the tremendous revolution which severs our principles and habits from those of a foregone generation. I have been trying, with but partial success, to determine when and where the reform began. I might better term it the great awakening to what nature and Revelations had been saying through the centuries to blind and stupid mortals. Scripture abounds with recommendations of the sun as a beneficent agent. Nature preaches of the life-giving properties of sunshine in every opening bud and greening leaf. Every shade-bleached foot of turf and every dwarfed fruit is an object lesson as to the perils of darkness and gloom.

It must have been forty years ago that a certain "eccentric" doctor startled the country by prescribing sunbaths to anemic patients, and constructed sun-parlors upon the roof of his sanatorium. Next, we began to hear talk of the expediency of sleeping in chambers on the sunny side of the house. If there were an invalid or old person in the family, the attendant physician began to inquire as to the "exposure" of the room in which he or she slept. In selecting apartments in a hotel, the enlightened traveler stipulated that there should be no dark room in the suite.

"For all the world as if they was cucumbers!" snapped the proprietor of a mountain resort, after a would-be guest had explained that the "highly desirable" rooms facing upon a courtyard twelve feet wide, would not suit his ideas of healthful comfort. "Talked a lot of stuff about coming to the country for plenty of sunshine and fresh air. I said he could get both into the hayfield, if that was what he was after."

At length gentlemen's sons did go into the hayfield in good earnest, and paid for the privilege. Pallid collegians, schoolboys threatened with the great white plague their forefathers had been sedulously inviting for five generations, hired themselves to farmers and wrought like yokels under summer suns to exorcise the lurking evil and coax back red blood to their veins and brawn to wasted limbs. Girls who had studied physiology and hygiene in colleges that maintained gymnasiums brought home notions and practices that horrified conservative mothers.

"I have been used all my life to making my bed as soon as I get up in the morning," said one sweet-faced woman to me in the early fifties. "So it seems odd to me that Mary throws all her windows open and lets in the sunshine, then hangs her bedclothes in the broadest glare she can find for a good two hours before she puts them back on the bed. She has been reading some books upon ventilation and fresh-air cure and all that, you know."

The Mary of today shudders in listening to the "barbarities" that went under the name of "good housekeeping" in that benighted age. She has big windows and many of them in her house, and sees to it that all stand open night and day, like the "golden gates of gospel grace" our forbears sang of, without catching a glimpse of any everyday practical hint to be gleaned therefrom. Her educated senses actually "taste" the air of each room. A suspicion of stuffiness means slovenliness and a menace to health. Fling wide doors and windows and leave them open until the blessed sunshine has purified every corner and cranny! Not to admit it freely to each room and to hold it there long enough to chase out malevolent germs every day in the year when sunshine is to be had is nothing short of sin. She is the woman who burns the contents of her dustpan and has the cellar whitewashed every spring; who provides a tent-cot for her tall yet puny boy who coughs after running uphill and sleeps badly. The cot is put up every night upon the veranda all winter long; and you may be sure that the coverings are sunned for hours after he leaves it in the morning. Her sewing room, where the younger children learn their lessons for next day's recitations, is flooded with sunshine. She has a fancy that it sweetens her temper, steadies her nerves and clears the children's brains, and I think she is not far wrong.

In writing this I am dimly conscious of an undercurrent of disapprobation in the mind of the reader with whom I have held weekly converse upon themes pertaining to the welfare of house and home for lo! these many years. She recalls—and not more distinctly than I—bits of counsel relative to darkness and coolness during the dog days. She knows—and no better than I—what a great plague of flies attends upon light rooms in midsummer. How to keep rooms bright yet cool is a problem not to be overlooked.

I have nowhere said that the sun is to beat furiously into the interior of any abode all day long in this (alleged) temperate zone, and in midsummer. I admit without a quibble that light and heat are inseparable. A clever neighbor of mine tells me she "keeps her sunshine in cold storage" in the hottest of dog days. I do the same without being witty enough to define the process after her style.

"Hangs the bedclothes in the glare of the sun."

Have your windows opened just before sunset, and leave them open all night. In the morning fling wide every shutter and raise all the shades to allow free occupation of the premises to the sunshine. Lay the bedclothing where it will strike full upon them, turning now and then to lay all parts in the genial warmth. Shake them hard to dislodge lurking exudations from heated human bodies, and lay back in the sun. Have all the sweeping and dusting done while the windows are agape and the sun getting its innings. By 9 o'clock close the windows and doors and imprison the sun-steeped air of morning. You have stored enough for the day's use. The sweet, cool twilight of the unoccupied bedrooms, and of the larger apartment in which you live and work, is a totally different element from the lifeless, must-laden chill that struck to the heart and bone when one entered the "best room" of that dead-and-gone time.

"Gentlemen's sons paid for the privilege of working in hayfields."

The modern veranda is a visible proof of the awakening we were speaking of just now. The custom of taking breakfast and supper, or dinner—whatever the evening meal may be called—in a corner of the veranda is rapidly gaining favor. For security from flies, butterfly moths and mosquitoes, screens of rustless netting inclose the summer dining parlor. If the meal be prolonged beyond sunsetting, candles shed sufficient light upon the table to make the conclusion of the feast comfortable. If mosquitoes are prevalent in the region, the evening al fresco sitting room is surrounded by gauze netting. And here the household gathers and lingers until bedtime. The air is so fully saturated by the blessed sunshine that flavor and benign influence are not dissipated by the fall of darkness. The fountain is perennial and abundant.

One word as to sunbaths. They are no longer regarded as the fad of a dreaming radical. In every sanatorium they are part of the daily regimen. One of my childish recollections is of a paralytic, who insisted upon being wheeled in his chair across the room to the sunny window every morning. He would go through the form of washing his shaking hands in the golden rays, and lay for hours in the stream of sunlight, stretching arms and legs with the gesture of a bather in sun-warmed water.

"It sets the blood a-going again!" he would say.

I was sorry for him that his blood was so thin and sluggish he never got heated all through, however warm the day. I can see now that he sought, by blind instinct, what science has pronounced to be the elixir of life.

The Housemother's Exchange

IMPORTANT NOTICE

BECAUSE of the enormous number of letters sent to the Exchange, I must ask ontributors to limit their com unications to 200 words, except n cases of formulas or recipes hich require greater space. I ount all my correspondents to ave a showing in the Corner, nd if my request in this respect s complied with it will be possi le to print many more letters.

Attention is called to the fact hat Marion Harland cannot re ceive money for patterns, as she as no connection with any de artment that sells them.

"Freezing Without Ice"

TO ERR is human." I may add, inevitable. When the mistake has been made, there is but one st thing to do, and that is to con to it and to repair the mischief e so far as lies within the power of blunderer.

is formidable preamble may remind reader of the immortal fable of the ntain and the mouse, when the rest the story is told. To the editor of Exchange it is not a small matter. article referred to in the following munication from the editor of one of most respectable and popular papers sent in by a correspondent in whose gment we had good reason to con . The formula was tested by three sewives and pronounced satisfactory to result. Then began a flood of trary evidence. We published some this, appending a warning against g what had wrought disaster in e kitchens. At a later date we re liated all responsibility for the fur r use of the prescription.

ow let the latest protestant have floor:

he inclosed clipping, "Freezing With Ice," published in Housemothers' Ex nge, undoubtedly refers to the article ed, "Ice Cream in Five Minutes," and ming that a bottle of cream immersed solution of sulphuric acid, water and would freeze in a few minutes. This by several people here without chemistry department at the university, and he reports that it would be impossible for sulphuric acid to have the effect which the recipe claims, and he asserts that the effect would be to make the cream hot, as the people claim who have tried it. INFORMATION BUREAU, St. Paul Dispatch (St. Paul, Minn.).

The fault lies, then, between the housemother who vouched for the correctness of the formula, the trio of correspondents who claimed to have made trial of it and the editor, who, with the best intentions toward her constituents, believed that out of the mouths of four—witnesses the truth must be established, and acted upon that persuasion.

Will those who have burned fingers and spoiled kitchen utensils in unsuccessful attempts to freeze cream without ice accept the apology and let the whole matter lapse into oblivion?

Real Ginger Ale

A member has asked for a "real ginger ale recipe." The following is believed to be trustworthy and cheap:

Five quarts of boiling water, 1 pound of sugar, 1 ounce of whole ginger root (bruised), juice and thin yellow rind of 2 lemons, ¼ of an ounce of cream-of-tartar, ½ of a yeast cake.

Put sugar, ginger, lemon and cream-of-tartar into a crock, add boiling water and allow the mixture to stand until it is lukewarm. Dissolve the yeast in a little warm water; add to the other ingredients; cover and set in a warm place for twenty-four hours. Strain and bottle. It will be fit for use in two days.

Cost—12 cents.

Some hours of waiting may be saved if only half the water be added—boiling—and after this has stood half an hour the rest be added cold. I find it just as good made in this way.

J. B. (Woodroffe, near Ottawa, Can.).

Your recipe is simpler than any other we have had, and calling, as it does, for a smaller quantity of the beverage, is more convenient for the ordinary housekeeper.

Does it keep well for, say, a month or more?

Nesselrode Pudding

I wish some one would let me have a good recipe for nesselrode pudding.

G. M. C. (Perris, Cal.).

Make a custard of 8 eggs and a quart of milk. Heat the milk, first dropping in a bit of soda as large as a green pea. When the milk is scalding hot, stir in the eggs, beaten smooth, throughout. Let it get cold before stirring in a quart of rich cream—"double cream," if you can get it. Turn into the freezer and grind until it is congealed but not stiff. Open the freezer and beat into the contents a pound of chopped marrons glacés. Shut the freezer and grind swiftly five minutes to insure thorough mixing. Pack down, then, in rock salt and cracked ice; cover with a thick cloth and leave for three or four hours. Wipe off the outside of the freezer; wrap about it a cloth wrung out in boiling water; invert the opened freezer over a chilled platter and let the column of frozen sweetness slide out. Heap whipped cream about the base and serve immediately.

This is the best recipe for the delicacy of which I have any knowledge.

Rose Beads

The correspondent to whom we are indebted for directions for making rose beads offers hints that will come in well with the late-blooming roses:

1. When thoroughly dry put the finished beads into a small bag and rub between the hands to polish them.

2. Put 5 or 10 cents' worth of rose extract in ½ cupful of olive oil for the oil bath of the beads. It takes off the crude oil odor. It likewise cuts the oil and keeps it from becoming gummy.

H. E. G. (Anaheim, Cal.).

Removing Stains

Kindly let me know what will take mildew out of white goods and grease spots out of black broadcloth.

I made some blackberry jelly and it did not form. Please print a good recipe for making it. E. P. G. (Kentucky).

Soak the white articles in sour milk or in buttermilk all night. Rinse in the morning and sun all day, wetting hourly with cream-of-tartar water. Rinse again in the evening and repeat the soaking. If one trial does not wholly remove the mildew, repeat the process.

Sponge the cloth with alcohol to take out the dirt. Then cover the spots with a paste of powdered French chalk and ammonia and leave it on for a day. There should be no trace of the grease when the powder is brushed off.

Blackberry Jelly

Wash the berries and drain. Put without water into a large crock and until the fruit is broken to pieces. Strain and measure the juice. Return to the fire in a preserving kettle and heat again. Meanwhile spread upon shallow pans as many pounds of sugar as you have pints of juice, and set in the oven. Stir often to prevent burning. Let the juice boil hard twenty minutes after the bubbling boil begins again and dump in the heated sugar. It should be hot enough to sizzle as it touches the liquid. Boil one minute after it is dissolved and fill your jelly glasses, which should be rolled in hot water, leaving the inside wet.

Should the jelly fail to "firm" as you would have it, set the glasses in the sun all day, covering with glass to keep out dust and flies. The jelly will shrink daily. Fill one glass from another as the shrinkage goes on. When it is firm, cover with melted paraffine and fit on metal tops.

Blackberry jelly is often slow in jellying, owing to the dead sweetness of the fruit. That prepared in obedience to the rules here given will be delicious in flavor and of a rich crimson in color.

I have made it thus for fifty years, trusting the sun to bring it to perfection.

Lemon and Phosphate Pies

For the lemon: One lemon, or 2 tablespoonfuls of the juice; 1 cup of sugar; a cupful of hot water; 2 tablespoonfuls of flour; 1 tablespoonful of butter; 1 egg. If the lemon be small, press it in the hot water after squeezing it through the strainer, to get the full flavor.

In the cherry phosphate pie, omit the lemon from the foregoing recipe. Substitute a cupful of chopped nut meats—hickory nuts if you can get them. Or use 1 cupful of mashed cranberries or other berries, or a cupful of chopped peaches.

Pour the custard over it as a meringue.

A GIRL WIFE (Minnesota).

But where does the cherry phosphate come in?

Write to us again and explain the significance of the title.

Beer Seed

This is for the member who asked for California beer seed.

Long years ago, when I lived away down in Muskingum county, Ohio, as a child, I knew an old lady who had the beer seed in a large glass jar in her cupboard. She told me exactly how it was made. She also gave me some to drink. It was delicious. In taste it was somewhat like rootbeer—only better.

I have often wished I knew what the "seed" was.

While the querist and I are waiting to learn all about it, will you accept this recipe for baked liver?

Baked Liver

Wash and trim a calf's liver or a very young beef's liver to the required size. Make holes through it with a narrow, sharp knife. Into each hole insert a very thin shaving of garlic (one clove of garlic is enough for the whole liver). Pepper and salt the liver to taste and lay within your roaster. Cover the liver with a large bacon rind, the skin side uppermost. Pour into the pan enough water to fill it halfway to the top. Lay upon the rind a stone cover or a large plate with a weight on top to keep the bacon from curling or slipping off. Cook as long as you would a roast of beef, or until it is done all through. Transfer the liver to a hot dish and keep hot over boiling water while you thicken the gravy left in the pan with browned flour.

In serving, slice the liver thin, and pour gravy over the slices.

N. B.—Those who dislike garlic may substitute onion, sliced and spread over the surface of the liver under the bacon.

G. M. O. M. (Perris, Cal.).

The recipe is tempting. We shall use it in our menu column. If you will read on you will find recipes for "beer seed" that may gratify your curiosity. I published one a while ago, but you may have overlooked it.

(Louisville, Ky.) for a supply of California beer seed, I feel that I can keep silent no longer, since I can inform the querist how she may obtain the much-coveted article.

The "seed" is simply pearl barley, and the process of making "starters" is as follows:

Allow ½ cupful of pearl barley and the same quantity of molasses or brown sugar to each quart of water. Put the ingredients into a jar or bottle and cork tightly. Let the jar stand in a warm place for twenty-four hours and the starter will be ready for use.

The barley may be used three or four times, but the sugar, or molasses, and the water must be renewed every time you draw off the liquid.

This formula was taken from the Woman's National Weekly, published by E. J. Lewis, University City, Mo.

If this is not too long, I may come again with my recipe for buttermilk pop.

Substitutes for Meats

Answering "Mrs. L. F. B." (Los Angeles, Cal.) concerning substitutes for meat, many consider eggs more nourishing than meat, one egg containing as much nourishment as a pound of meat.

Write to the secretary of agriculture, Washington, D. C., asking for Farmer's Bulletin No. [illegible]. This gives food values of meat; also many ways of preparing cheap meats, making them as nutritious as more expensive cuts.

Other bulletins giving values of different foods are Nos. 34, [illegible] and [illegible]. They are all free.

A list of other helpful bulletins will be sent in upon request. (Marinette, Wis.).

If you had added your address and name to the helpful letter, we might have referred inquiries for the lists directly to you. Will you supply the deficiency?

Professors of dietetics differ with regard to the quantity of nourishment contained in a fresh egg. Some rate it as the equivalent of half a pound of meat. Others place it lower than this, and you say one egg equals in nutritive properties a pound of meat. Who is

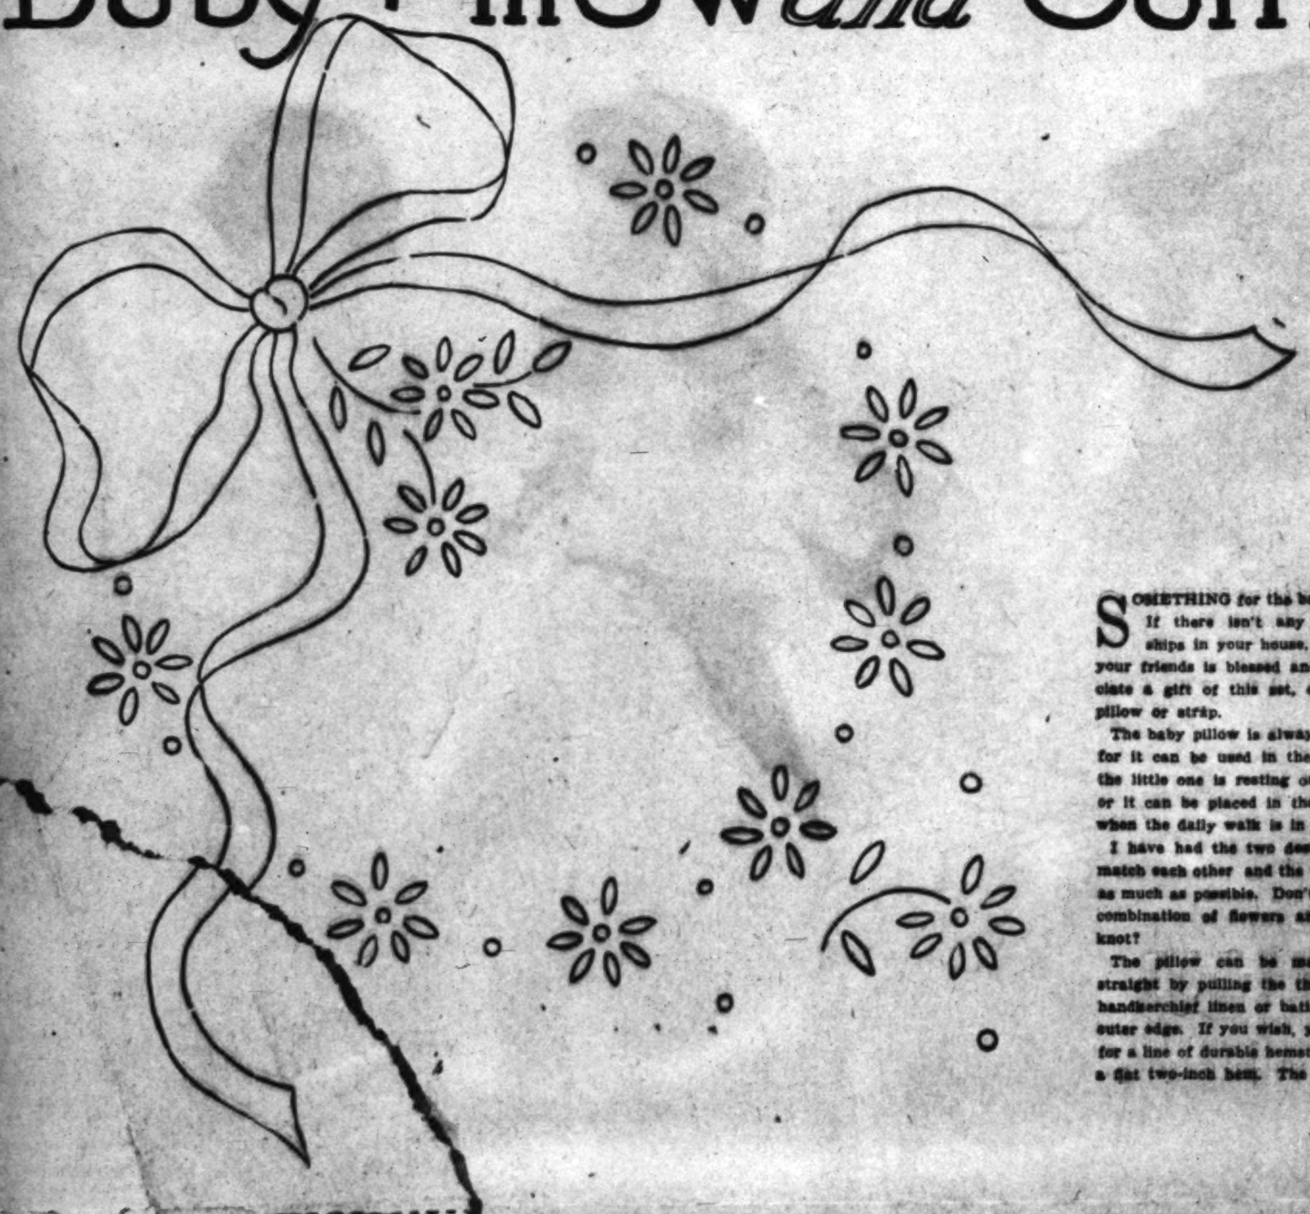
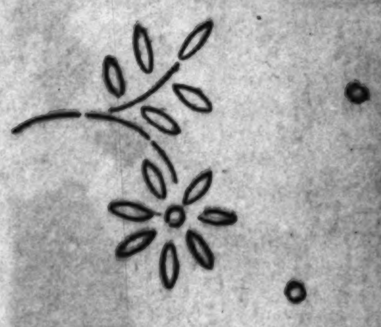
Baby Pillow and Carriage Strap





The pillow

SOMETHING for the baby this time. If there isn't any royal babyships in your house, some one of your friends is blessed and will appreciate a gift of this set, or either the pillow or strap.

The baby pillow is always acceptable, for it can be used in the house when the little one is resting or "on show," or it can be placed in the baby coach when the daily walk is in progress.

I have had the two designs made to match each other and the work reduced as much as possible. Don't you like the combination of flowers and the bowknot?

The pillow can be made perfectly straight by pulling the threads of fine handkerchief linen or batiste along the outer edge. If you wish, you can allow for a line of durable hemstitching above a flat two-inch hem. The back will be the same size as that of the front, and it, of course, will be plain. The flaps can be buttoned together with tiny pearl or washable buttons and buttonholes. Otherwise you can make it a regular pillowcase, open at one end. A pretty plain hemstitched ruffle is a good finish for the pillow.

When working the flowers pad the petals lengthwise and work solid in the opposite direction. If you will alternate solid work with eyelet work in the little circle of flowers around the bowknot, you will find that there is a charming result. The eyelets can again be used on the dots on the pillow, and the leaves you will work solid.

I have had shown three bows with different ways of filling in the ribbon. First, there is the solid work, which is put on over padding in darning cotton. Another is an outline of the loops and ends, whipped into a heavy cord after outline stitches are used. Fill in the bow in either of the two ways shown—the French knots or the seed stitches, which are tiny back stitches. Both of these methods are easy and quick and extremely effective.

The cover for the carriage strap should be worked on linen of medium weight, and should have a back also. These two should be sewed together after completion. Work the flowers in the same way that you did those on the pillow and pad the scallops on the edge; then work in buttonhole stitches. Buttonhole the vertical slits at each end and pass the strap through these openings.

The pillow and the strap cover make a charming gift, and you will never regret spending a little time and a very little money on such a satisfactory piece of needlework.

THE BABY'S WARDROBE

[illegible] INFANT'S wardrobe should be [illegible], but at the same time as [illegible] as possible, first on the [illegible], and then for the sake [illegible]. The first outfit [illegible] should include six fine French [illegible], with the edges pinked. Trim with a [illegible] and [illegible] fine tucking [illegible] much work [illegible] provided, if desired. Make them of very fine cambric or nainsook and trim with fine lace insertion, feather-stitching or hand embroidery. Hand-run tucks can trim the skirts above the deep hem.

Three flannel petticoats will be plenty at first, for, with the best of care, they shrink when washed; besides, baby grows fast, and will soon have to have new ones.

A pretty, long wrapper is a necessity.

This can be made of fine nun's veiling, flannel or china silk, interlined with wadding.

Cream, pale pink and pale blue are suitable colors. This must be ample in size, with loose-fitting sleeves and wide at the waistbands. This rule should apply to all of baby's frocks, for tiny hands grow quickly, and fingers get tangled in wristbands that are too tight.

Trim the wrapper with fine embroidery. A lace frill can edge a flat, round collar and also the sleeves.

Four dozen diapers will not be too many, and four to six pairs of bootees must be provided.

The christening robe may be as elaborate as the mother pleases, but it must be dainty as well.

The shortening of all long dresses can be made when the baby is 6 months old if the weather is mild and there is no danger of the child taking cold.

Run the hems in by hand; then, if it be necessary to lengthen them, it [illegible]

A coat of the finest French flannel is the most approved outer garment. Trim in the simplest possible way, with silk braid or fine lace. A shoulder cape is usually desirable; this can be trimmed with rows of silk braid or ribbon.

Line the coat with china silk or soft messaline.

Make it with a little square yoke on which the body is pleated and the sleeves attached. Feather-stitch the cuffbands, and finish the neck without a collar, simply using the shoulder cape. Blind embroidery is one of the prettiest ways of trimming a coat, and a dainty finish is a hemstitched frill of the finest lawn.

Baby's first cap is usually of silk, but a cobwebby handkerchief, shaped to cover the cap lining of thin china silk, is exceedingly pretty.

Once the little silk cap is made, the mother's taste and ingenuity will suggest the application of the handkerchief. The turned-back Dutch flap is always attractive, and is becoming to most baby faces.

These little bonnets are no trouble to arrange, and a fresh one is possible at all times. It can be tacked in several places to the lining with just a few stitches, so that it is easily detached when it is necessary to wash.

A little sacque of flannel is also a necessity.

It can be made over a loose kimono pattern and trimmed with feather-[illegible]

THREE WAYS TO TRANSFER

HERE are suggestions for transferring the pattern before you to any material before working.

Perhaps the easiest way is the "window-pane" method. This is successful when the material is thin, like linen, batiste, etc. Pin the sheet of paper and the material together and hold them up against the glass of a window. With a sharp pencil draw on the material the design, which can be easily seen through the goods. If one-half of the design only be given, unpin the paper and turn the other side to the fabric. The strong light behind will make it plain.

If you have carbon paper, you should place the sheet between your fabric and the newspaper. This latter is on top. With a sharp pencil go over the outline of the design. The impression will be left in fine lines and will last until worked. This method is successful on heavy material.

The last way is also easy. On wax paper or ordinary tissue paper trace the pattern before you. When the design is completed, turn over the paper and outline the pattern with a heavy lead pencil. Then place the design down on the fabric and redraw the outline, pressing hard with the pencil. The pattern will be transferred without diffi-[illegible]

HANDKERCHIEF NOVELTIES

HAVE you ever tried to see what can be done with a handkerchief? These little squares of linen, hemstitched, embroidered or lace edged, can with a little ingenuity be made up into many beautiful and useful things.

First there is the dainty sachet that is made of a bit of delicate-colored satin covering several layers of cotton wadding and scented with rose or violet. Ascertain the size of the handkerchief when folded twice to form a square, and cut the satin in an oblong double that size or two squares the exact size. Turn in the edges, line with the cotton and sachet powder and whip the edges over with fine silk.

Fold the handkerchief so the corners will meet in the center, lay the satin square inside and tack the corners of the handkerchief together, running the thread all the way through, and at this joining point sew on a pretty bow of ribbon matching the satin.

Another attractive way is to fold a lace-edged handkerchief over straight on itself, so it will lap three-quarters of its size, and sew the lapped edges together. Make a satin or silk covered pad, lined with cotton and thickly sprinkled with sachet powder, the size of the pocket formed and slip it in. Now fold over the loose portion as you would the flap of an oblong envelope and fasten it down by tying inch-wide ribbon around each end.

Such a pocket sachet can be used for a handkerchief or glove case. [illegible] monogram or initial on the overlapping edge and fasten with small pearl buttons or flat glove clasps under a bow of ribbon.

A pretty pad and sachet to slip inside the front of the corset can be made by folding an eight-inch square handkerchief over so it will form a triangle.

Make a pad of silk or linen a trifle smaller than this triangle and cover it with the handkerchief, catching the edges together in several places. If the handkerchief is lace edged, run a little frill of the same lace across the top of the pad. An advantage in one of these pads is that as soon as it becomes soiled you can take the handkerchief off and have it laundered, using another one to cover the pad in the meanwhile.

All embroidered and lace-trimmed handkerchiefs (man's size) together and cushion top. This can be put on with pins and easily taken off to launder.

To make a fancy workbag, lay two handkerchiefs (man's size) together and sew two joining edges together and four inches of the other two edges, folding back the two loose corners and fastening them down with ribbon bows, embroidered coinspots or an initial on one corner and a dainty blossom or bowknot on the other.

Buttonhole around four small brass rings with white linen thread and attach one to each corner of the opening of the bag and one midway between on both sides. Run ribbon through the rings and draw the bag up with this. [illegible] pleats, bringing it into a [illegible] inches long, and attach [illegible] side with which to tie it [illegible] waist.

Another way is to cut off and [illegible] hem the edge or bind it with [illegible] that is long enough for strings [illegible] the triangular corner for a pocket [illegible]

Workbags of bandana handkerchiefs are also pretty.

Dustcaps are made from large [illegible] handkerchiefs by gathering up each corner into a little twist or padded [illegible] Another way is to fold back each [illegible] and tack it tight. Now run a casing the way around one inch from the [illegible] and put a fine elastic or narrow [illegible] ribbon through this and draw it [illegible] fit the head.

If the bandana is a large size, [illegible] them sewed together make [illegible] sofa cushion covers.

Safe Beanbags

MOTHERS who make their [illegible] beanbags—small, square [illegible] filled with beans or [illegible] find them dangerous if they [illegible] break while being thrown about [illegible] and the corn or beans fly in the [illegible] dren's faces, sometimes injuring [illegible] tle ones' eyes.

A safe bag can be made [illegible] cretonne or flowered chintz, [illegible] oatmeal, cornmeal or [illegible] would not harm any one if [illegible] break.

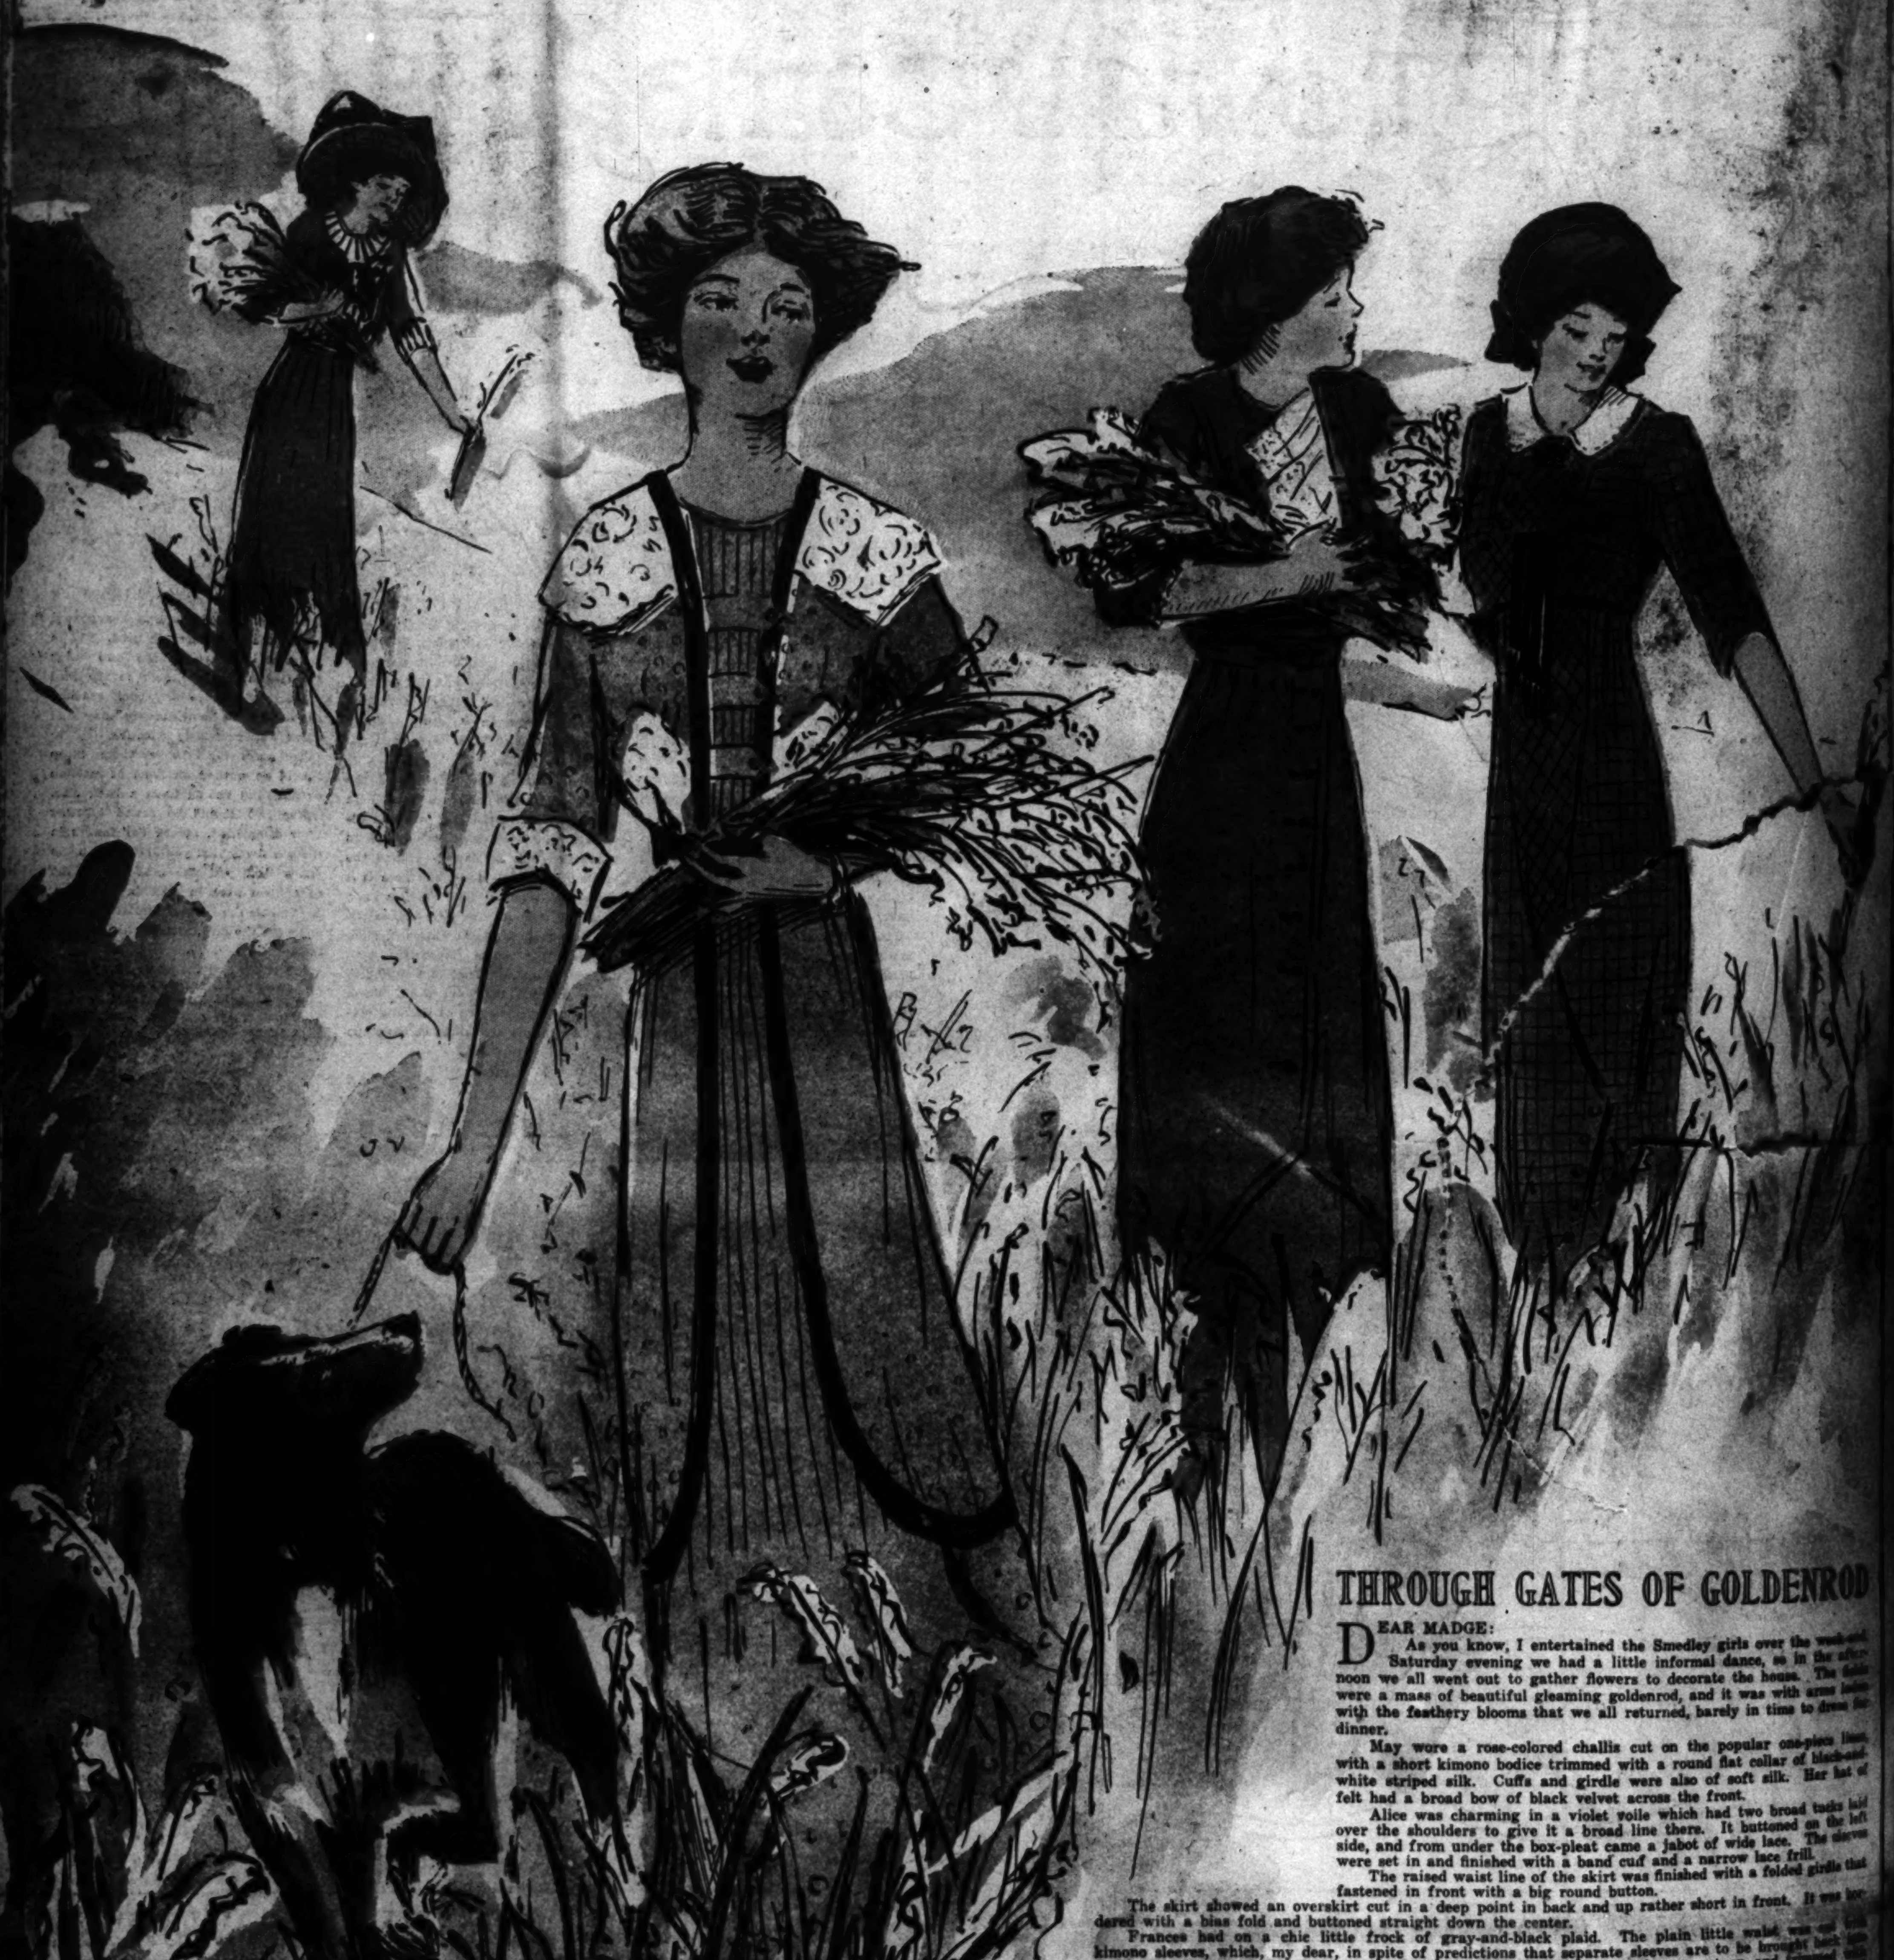
THE SMARTEST FASHIONS of WELL-DRESSED FOLK



THROUGH GATES OF GOLDENROD

DEAR MADGE:

As you know, I entertained the Smedley girls over the week-end. Saturday evening we had a little informal dance, so in the afternoon we all went out to gather flowers to decorate the house. The fields were a mass of beautiful gleaming goldenrod, and it was with arms laden with the feathery blooms that we all returned, barely in time to dress for dinner.

May wore a rose-colored challis cut on the popular one-piece lines, with a short kimono bodice trimmed with a round flat collar of black-and-white striped silk. Cuffs and girdle were also of soft silk. Her hat of felt had a broad bow of black velvet across the front.

Alice was charming in a violet voile which had two broad tucks laid over the shoulders to give it a broad line there. It buttoned on the left side, and from under the box-pleat came a jabot of wide lace. The sleeves were set in and finished with a band cuff and a narrow lace frill.

The raised waist line of the skirt was finished with a folded girdle that fastened in front with a big round button.

The skirt showed an overskirt cut in a deep point in back and up rather short in front. It was bordered with a bias fold and buttoned straight down the center.

Frances had on a chic little frock of gray-and-black plaid. The plain little waist was cut with kimono sleeves, which, my dear, in spite of predictions that separate sleeves are to be brought back into fashion, are seen on nearly all of the fall styles. Cuffs of bias material were set on and trimmed with buttons. A bias piece formed a bib front and extended in a high circular-girdle effect all the way around the waist.

Three satin-covered buttons trimmed each side of the bib, which was slashed in two places and run through with a black silk cravat with fringed ends that finished the flat linen collar.

The skirt showed the slightest bit of fullness over the hips and was fitted with an overskirt that lapped over in front and was held in place with several satin-covered buttons.

I wore my blue foulard that has a border of black rings of graduated size. The skirt is made with a double tunic effect, bordered with three-inch bias bands of black satin. Fine thread tucks are run from the waist line to a quarter of a yard above the hem and fall from that point in a scant flounce. These tucks also form a vest on the bodice, which is held down by three straps which button over to the left side. The bodice's front is of the bordered material and has shoulder capes of heavy white lace, which is also used as cuffs and applied on the front of each side of the bodice just above the satin girdle.

It was a beautiful walk and every one of us enjoyed it to the fullest extent.

Have you seen any new frocks recently?

Devotedly yours,

ELEANOR.

the choir singing Charles Wesley's of My Soul?" It is full of plaintive you know how the Methodist apostle came to write so melancholy a psalm of death? It was not a vague cry for some future day. It was a loud, imperative call for immediate relief. Nor was it the spiritual enemy of man in the spiritual form that he feared. It was instant bodily harm that threatened him. Wesley had been preaching in the open air. The man was as gentle of spirit as a girl. Nothing harsh could come from his mouth, for his heart was full of tenderness for all his brethren. But the coarse mob took offense at his appeals to forsake sin and live a pure, noble life. They attempted to stone him as the mob at Jerusalem had done to Stephen. John Wesley had something leonine in his character. Had he been in the place of his gentle brother it is quite possible that he would have smitten hip and thigh the toughs that threatened him. Charles took refuge in an old loft, and as the mob surged around on the outside he sang the improvised prayer for deliverance.

That was a bad day for the preacher of righteousness. It is not long ago as history measures time. But no such violence could take place today in England (unless it were at the hand of a suffragette) against preacher or political speaker. And at the worst the violence of the advocate for votes for women would not go so far as to threaten life. She might scratch as a cat or smash in a tall hat, and even she will have to learn that the spirit of the time is one of tolerance, not of persecution for opinion's sake.

Go back a few years to the days of the Inquisition. One sees in museums in Europe the instruments of torture these over-zealous servants of God used to induce men to be orthodox. There is not a "holy office" left in Europe. Even the bitterness of denominational controversy which used for the most part Samson's weapon in ecclesiastical warfare is a thing of a past day. Men of all views in religion as well as in politics have learned to tolerate and for the most part to respect those who differ from them.

Is not this a better day than the days when gentle Charles Wesley was obliged to feel the anger of the mob?

Look at life from another angle. Books are fairly good records of the past. Most of our knowledge of other days comes from the written page. The past had no such chronicle as we have in the daily newspaper. A century hence the writer of history will have in the journals of our time the "picture and the story of each day" so graphically set before him that he will almost relive our lives. But the past has a few pages of history even truer and more graphic than even the best newspaper affords. One awful night about 2000 years ago a great city was in the full tide of life. Men slept in assured repose (as they thought.) Men and women feasted and reveled. The mother bent in sympathy over her sick babe or in joy over a well one. Man and maid held tryst and pledged their troth. The baths (bagnios, they called them,) burned and reeked with feverish heat, and in them men and women made worse than beasts of themselves in degrading debauches. And all at once, without warning or premonition, the top flew off of a mountain above and belched forth sulphurous fumes in a thick cloud that like a knife piercing the heart stopped every throb of life in an instant. Every creature in Pompeii in a second became a part of a museum to be a show to future generations. There was not a minute allowed for man or woman to put his house in order on that night of terror. There the great city stands today with all its life bare to study.

There were "realistic artists" in those days, and they had much patronage. They thought "whatever is is right," and as artistic as it is correct. The remains of Pompeii are treasured as among the rarest relics of the past. Tens of thousands go all around the globe to study them. The pictures that adorned the walls of the people are there. The art productions of those who were of the same opinion as Bernard Shaw of our day are in a room apart, and to this only men of mature years are admitted. These scenes could not be presented in our day. No Anthony Comstock would have to take up a crusade for their suppression if any artist put them on canvas. And if any did, the pictures would not stand for any existing fact in any part of the world called Christian. It would be a libel on dogs to call these scenes bestial. No beast excepting the human who has fallen lower than the brutes ever thought of such things. The zealous preacher of our day may say as the psalmist said so long ago: "Mine eyes run down with water because men keep not Thy laws." Dr. Parkhurst as well as Mr. Comstock would have had to hie him to a monastery had he lived in Pompeii 2000 years ago.

We are not regarding life from the less important angles of vision which show us how men were lodged, clothed and fed. The laboring man of 1911 is better off by many times than was the noble of 300 years ago. Looking at life from higher ground, it is more important to know that the mechanic of this best of all days is far better educated than the king of old. England had a king in those old days who won the cognomen of "fine scholar." He could actually sign his name and had not to get a subordinate to do it, a subscription to which he added "his mark." The freedmen of the South are getting a better education at Tuskegee than the children of "belted knights" and coroneted dukes in any part of Europe had not many centuries ago.

And speaking of kings and people in those old days a king got a notion that a child had been born who might bring his dynasty to an end. He just issued a command to a squad of bloodthirsty soldiers and they went forth and slaughtered every male child in the place. No Rachels in our day sit disconsolate by the side of graves which contain the bodies of little innocents who "are not" at the beck of king, kaiser, czar or other monarch in the world outside of those savage ones still left in a few "dark places." In those days of horror a lord chancellor of a realm incurred the enmity of rivals, and at their recital an order went forth and the faithful servant was cast into a den of lions. No wonder the lion is a survival of the unfitrest on the escutcheons of kings. He was a noble work-fellow with them in their bloody work. They lay famished in cells at the Coliseum at Rome until a few girls and old men could be discovered saying their prayers in their own cells in order to gratify the cruel eyes of "noble ladies" and "brave men" who sat aloft and saw the hungry beasts rend the limbs of children and women and the blood of the poor victims made the sands run red.

What cruelty, what misery, what wrong men have put an end to in the ages that are past! What a struggle and warfare it has been to win some "rights" for the average men which his "betters" must respect! Well, we the people have made the laws and the rights of men now rest on a pretty secure foundation. It is quite right that we should look on the side of things that is bright, that is glorious, full of good actually enjoyed today and full of hope that the future will be still better for men today. This is the era of the optimist. He has a right to rejoice and be glad in it.

If we consider wars and their effects we reach the point of view most precious to the optimist. For 750 years at Rome the temple of Janus was closed but once. Wars were chronic, and they meant in each case the absolute conquest of one or another of the combatants. No peace treaty was ever signed. The conqueror put his foot on the neck of the conquered, and so there was peace. Tacitus says the "Teutons made a solitude around them by war and called that peace." "Woe to the conquered," was a Latin proverb. The new century is only ten years old. In this time the United States has signed more than a dozen treaties of arbitration with other nations, and the total of such treaties made in the world numbers more than half a hundred. These are not treaties to stop a war, but treaties to prevent the outbreak of war. In the ten years of this era of the Prince of Peace there has been one war. No such record stands in the history of the world. In former ages one year of general peace in a century would have made the epoch memorable.

Raise thy head, thou optimist, and rejoice with all thy heart. You are in the company of the God of Peace, and the world is yours and the fullness thereof. Selah!

SERMONS IN SONG.

THE CITY'S NIGHT.

BY WILBUR D. NESBIT.

We know the city, when at dawn
She turns sleep-hungry eyes on us—
But through what trial has she gone
That she must waken, weary thus?
We know her, with a laugh at noon—
Her careless laugh at toil's unrest—
Her smile that greets the twilight croon
The shadows waft her from the west.

We know the lights that flash and glow,
The gold and silver lights that gem
Her form, in woven loop and row—
A girdle and a diadem.
We know her singing and her smile
When night is young and joy's afield,
But in the silent afterwhile
What brooding sorrow is concealed?

We know her lights die, one by one,
And darkness comes with solemn pace
To hush the revelry and fun
And draw a veil across her face;
And then the city, lone and still,
Is hidden in her solitude.
What grief comes then her mind to fill?
Upon what sorrow does she brood?

We know her in her hours of light,
Her times of restless work and play.
Who holds the secret of her night
When all the songs are swept away?
Why should she, in the gray of dawn,
Turn sad, sleep-hungry eyes to us?
Through what soul trial has she gone
That she must waken, weary, thus?

"You are a perfect little heathen!" she remarked, giving way at last.

"Do you mean it?" demanded Bobby.

"I do indeed," said his mother.

"Then say, ma," said Bobby, "why cant I keep that 10 cents a week you gimme for the Sunday-school collection? I guess I'm as hard up as any of the rest of 'em."

HOW THE GOVERNMENT IS PUSHING IT ALL OVER THE WORLD.

From Our Own Corespondent.

WASHINGTON (D.C.)—Suppose you had a business which brought in $4000 every minute of every day and every night for the 300 working days of the year! Would it not pay to take care of it? Suppose you sold on every one of those days a total of about $6,000,000, and in the year something like $1,800,000,000. Would not you want to increase it?

That is what Uncle Sam is doing as to our foreign trade. His exports in 1908 sold for over $1,800,000,000.

Our electrical machinery en route to a European customer

An American reaper in Siberia.

They were almost as much last year, and they will run close to the same amount this. We are among the chief merchants in the great market house of the world. We are still led by Great Britain and Germany, but our foreign trade is rapidly growing, and the day will come when we shall be the biggest traders of the whole world.

This letter will tell you some of the means by which Uncle Sam, patriarch, is increasing that trade. There are two departments which are especially devoted to it. One is the agricultural branch of the government, which has to do with our crop exports, and the other is the Department of Commerce and Labor, which deals with both manufactures and crops. The crops have always had a large part in the business. The manufactures are of more recent growth, but they are multiplying so rapidly that they promise in time to surpass all that which comes from the soil.

Our Big Industrial Business.

Have you any idea how much our manufacturing business amounts to? I dislike to use figures. They mean so little when they get into the millions. I had an interview not long ago with Mrs. Hetty Green, the richest woman on earth, during which she told me her mind refused to work on anything over $1,000,000. My mind is stunned by a hundred thousand, and the word billion means nothing but "exceedingly large." The only way to realize such conceptions is by homely comparisons.

Well, in figures the products we make annually in our factories are worth $15,000,000,000 or $16,000,000,000! They are so many that if every man, woman and child on this big round earth could have an equal share of them the amount held by each would be just $10. If they were all divided among our own 100,000,000 population each of us would have $150 worth, and the share of each family would be $750 or more.

Again, look at the money invested in our manufacturing business! The capital is about equal to the product, and the cost of the materials annually used is somewhere between $9,000,000,000 and $10,000,000,000. The industries here taken into account are only those confined to the factories, and the men employed in them are 500,000 or 600,000. The census divides our great industries into fourteen groups, and of them five are each making products of more than $1,000,000,000 a year.

Moreover, the amounts are steadily increasing, and we need more foreign trade to keep the hands busy. Our foreign sales already foot up over $768,000,000, and had we the markets we could easily make it a billion. They now amount to about 45 per cent. of our exports, which is 10 per cent. more than they were in 1900 and over double the amount of our exports of manufactures in the year 1890. Indeed, we are rapidly climbing to the top among the nations which are selling the most goods made by machine and by hand. We now rank third, being only exceeded by Great Britain and Germany.

Uncle Sam's Export Bureau.

All this is preliminary to a talk which I have just had with A. H. Baldwin, the chief of the Bureau of Manufactures of the Department of Commerce and Labor, and of the story of how Uncle Sam is trying to push foreign trade. This bureau was established to collect information as to the openings for American goods and as to where and how the goods should be shipped. It is operated in conjunction with the consular service, and gathers all sorts of information for our manufacturers who would do business abroad. It publishes a daily paper made up of the reports of the consuls as they come in, and has on hand a vast amount of confidential information which it forwards to those factories which can supply foreign needs.

This daily is about the only paper published by the United States government. The copy issued this morning now lies before me. It contains twenty pages, and has reports from Japan, China, Germany, England, Australia and Canada. Several pages are devoted to foreign trade opportunities, including the openings for Americn shoes in Germany, for apples in England and or lard, our and cottonseed oil at Mediterranean ports. Another page suggests how our vacuum cleaners might be sold in certain European cities, and others report business firms in a number of countries which want certain things, which the factories making them in the United States, if they write to the bureau, can arrange to supply. The paper has also an article on industrial activity in Japan, one on an American bank for China and one on the status of business at the head of the Yukon in Alaska. It describes the openings for our firearms in Asia, the recent discovery of diamonds in Canada and some new features of the street traffic of London. It treats of the solar eclipse, which may be best seen at Oporto, in Portugal, and of how winter apples are selling at Windsor, Ontario. It tells how public buildings are about to be erected in the new capital of Australia, and urges our architects to send out designs for the houses of parliament and other great structures.

In addition to these there are other articles in this day's copy of the paper. The government issues a journal like this every morning. The publication now amounts to 16,000 copies, and it goes to the boards of trade, chambers of commerce, and the newspapers all over the country. The most of the articles are republished by the papers, so that the news goes to all [illegible] are interested.

The Confidential Service.

Uncle Sam's daily is carefully watched by our foreign competitors, and the exporters of Germany, England and France jump at all of its suggestions of [illegible] to them. For this reason the government is not [illegible] the names of foreign business men who make [illegible] but it keeps such addresses and supplies them only confidentially to those of our factories which could [illegible] the goods needed. as to Packing.

important things which the Bureau of has been recently doing is the gathering information as to how goods should be packed. a pamphlet of this kind was published a great deal of comment. Since then I our shipments have been greatly improved, like 80 per cent. of the goods now properly packed. The worst work is the export of raw cotton. The bales are the burlap is torn and a great deal of Our consuls say that the Russians, East Indians have much better cotton have. Consul-General Skinner at Hamburg says that our packing is as good as that of any in the world, and that bad packing usually comes from new firms that do not understand the market.

Other consuls, and especially those of Asia and South America, urge that the goods be packed in water-proof boxes or bales, and that they be so fastened that pilfering is not easy. The Chinese consuls say that the knot holes in boxes should be covered by pieces of tin nailed on the inside and that all packages for the interior should be made so that they could be carried on wheelbarrows or by porters.

Animal Transports.

Many of the consuls urge the packing of goods in small parcels. In Arabia and Africa much of our exports goes inland on camels, and the ordinary beast will carry only about 400 pounds, so that the boxes should be of 200 pounds, one to fit on each side of the hump. In interior Bolivia American goods are carried on llamas, the loads of which are restricted to 100 pounds, but there the load is fastened upon the back so that there can be that much in one package. A donkey will carry from fifty to 100 pounds, a mule about 200 pounds, while from fifty to seventy-five pounds is a good load for a man, if he has to make a long journey. In Siberia all boxes which weigh over 500 pounds should be fitted with skids, as there is no way of handling freight in the eastern part of that country, and the marks on the packages should be English and Russian, metallic paint being used.

In my talk with Mr. Baldwin he referred to the Trade Directory which has just been issued by his bureau. This is a volume as big as a dictionary which contains the names of 125,000 business men in the leading cities and ports outside the United States. These names have been sent in by the consuls and they should be of value to all those who sell goods abroad. The book is for sale at $5, which was about the cost of publication.

HORSE-LOVING LEXINGTON.

[David Buffum, in Atlantic:] We may breed different types of horses, and we may harness and use them differently; but the points of excellence that combine to form the most perfect horse are no different in one age than another. Xenophon, it is true, attached some importance to points that we care much less about now—as, for instance, a smooth, round back that is "easy to sit upon," which was owing to the fact that the Greeks did not use saddles, but only a cloth, fastened to the horse's body by a surcingle; but these are minor matters. He knew the points of a good horse, and he knew horse nature. And he had, too, that delight in horses that is only found in the true horseman, the man who loves as well as knows them. "It is upon horses," says he, "that gods and heroes are painted riding; and men who are able to manage them skillfully are regarded as deserving of admiration. So extremely beautiful and admirable and noble a sight is a horse that bears himself superbly that he fills the gaze of all who see him, both young and old; no one, indeed, leaves him or is tired of contemplating him as long as he continues to display his magnificent attitudes."

MEETING SWISS PRESIDENT.

[Joe Mitchell Chapple, in National Magazine:] Ushered into the simple executive office of the President of Switzerland by an imposing gentleman with sidewhiskers and a great seal on his breast, there was little of official formality, for the President's office is the same as the other rooms. President Ruchet was seated at his desk going over the last budget, which concisely and in a few pages tells the story of Swiss finances. He spoke German, although he comes from a French canton, and is a member of the Radical party which, having been in power for about seventy years, is still holding a strong majority. As he told of the progress being made, as shown in the budget, the President smiled with the consciousness of a man who has done his full duty. A copy of the budget was presented with a graceful bow, as he remarked that, after all, figures were the most eloquent story he could tell of the administration.

President Ruchet has twinkling, humorous eyes, wears a stand-up collar, is deliberate and optimistic—a true type of the Swiss lawyer that he is. He talked interestingly concerning Swiss authors and poets, and feelingly discussed the work and accomplishments of the government and the people, explaining that it was first the purpose to hold in check any great movements for personal power. This, he said, might explain the lack of great personalities in public life.

QUICK WORK BY PATRICK HENRY.

[Green Bag:] Patrick Henry when he was a young married man of 23 years was a complete failure. He had tried clerking, farming and keeping a country store, all with equally negative or disastrous results.

"Best of all," he said cheerfully to himself, "I will become a lawyer."

Six weeks he allowed himself, as a matter of formality, to prepare for the bar. During this time he read one book, "Coke upon Littleton," supplemented by an equally strenuous perusal of the "Digest of the Virginia Acts."

His examiners, Wythe, Pendleton, Peyton Randolph and John Randolph, hardly knew whether to be more amazed at his ignorance of law or his profound knowledge of history. After no little deliberation he received his license.

"Mr. Henry," John Randolph exclaimed enthusiastically after his examination of the young neophyte, "if your industry be only half equal to your genius I augur that you will do well and become an ornament and an honor to your profession."

INCIDENT OF THE LAST MARCH OF INFANTRY OVER SANTA FE TRAIL.

By Olive Ennis Hite.

A TORN bit of an old newspaper, bearing date of 1906, and a post-card photograph of a white-haired, soldierly man bring vividly to mind one of the early episodes of the Civil War and the last march of infantry over the "Old Santa Fe Trail"—not the last for small detachments, but for a large body of men, the most of them raw recruits, and the "pick-ups" of Atlantic seaboard cities. The picture is that of Gen. David S. Gordon; the episode, the mustering-in in Washington City, April 18, 1861, of "the Frontier Guard" under command of Capt. J. H. Lane, the famous "Jim Lane" of Kansas. Young David Gordon, City Auditor of Leavenworth, Kan., was made first sergeant, and many men who were then prominent in Kansas, or became so in its troublous days, were enrolled in the ranks. Lane had heard the mutterings of the coming storm and called together such men as he could rely upon and offered his and their services to Simon Cameron, then Secretary of War under the newly-inaugurated President, Abraham Lincoln. The company was ordered to Washington city and quartered in the magnificent East Room of the White House, where for nine days they guarded the President, the White House, and the near-by government buildings.

BRIG.-GEN. DAVID S. GORDON.

"One-hundred-days men" were pouring into the capitol from every State; the "Guard" was no longer necessary, so at the request of Capt. Lane they were mustered out on May 26. But "Dave Gordon" had had his taste of blood, and civil life knew him no more. He was given a commission as second lieutenant in the Second Dragoons—afterward the Second Cavalry—in which regiment, the Third and the Sixth, he served for thirty-two years, when he was retired as a brigadier-general. During the rebellion he was on staff duty and in the thick of the fighting in the East. But he had his baptism of fire at Bull Run, was taken prisoner and for over a year knew all the horrors and tortures of southern prisons. At the close of the war his regiment—as were all the cavalry—was ordered to the frontier. The Second was scattered over the Kansas plains, the Third—of which I was a part, as I had a very good young husband attached to it as a lieutenant—went to New Mexico. The Gordons were sent to Fort Dodge, and we, dawdling over the blood-soaked old trail with the Fifth Infantry, had just one lovely red-letter day out of sixty dolorous ones—the Fourth of July, 1866, when the column camped near the post and the blessed, hospitable Gordons came right out and invited us to dinner and a reception afterward. Now a reception in an army post in the sixties—on the frontier wasn't altogether the full-dress, glittering affair I have seen at the Presidio in San Francisco, nor like the army and navy receptions at the White House these days; but it was a very creditable function, nevertheless. Capt. Gordon and his officers had all the dress uniforms, gold lace, epaulets, and side arms that the regulations demanded; the hostess and the few post "ladies" dug up some of the finery that had had its triumphing day somewhere "back in the States" while we, poor, dusty, wearied, homesick creatures had the baggage wagons pulled to pieces to find ungettable trunks. We were not entirely successful as "the mould of fashion," but we had as fine appetites as Nature and three weeks of desert travel and marching grub could furnish. With all the years that lie between that day and this, no other Fourth of July stands out with such splendor as this. I don't remember that we had fireworks—I think not; we people who still had the dull roar of battle in our ears, and the moans of the dying yet filled the air—did not attach much patriotism to fire crackers, spit devils and Roman candles. Skyrockets meant signals—more or less sinister—and so I think that down along the "Arkansaw" we sat under the stars, and talked of the just-gone fighting and the Indians that were yet to come. I never saw the Gordons again, but the career of the first sergeant of "the Frontier Guard" was easy to follow. He went about his lawful occasions thrashing Indians, burying the slain, caring for his wounded men—for there was fierce fighting along the Arkansas in the years that followed that dinner and reception—and, now and then getting a promotion. Few of the old army saw harder service than Gordon and few were as modest and contented with their lot in life as he.

Germany's Capital. By George W. Burton.

IMPERIAL BERLIN.

IN SOME RESPECTS THE MOST REMARKABLE CITY IN THE WORLD.

By a Staff Writer.

HOW much there is about the famous cities of the world that partakes of all the elements of personality. Were these great aggregations of human habitations living entities with vital breath in their lungs and blood in their veins they could scarcely be more distinguished one from the others. In part these marked characteristics are the outgrowth of climate, in part of location, and in part to the uses to which they are most put. But there is more. They owe their peculiarity to the way they are governed and to the spirit of the people who dwell in them and control their destinies. It is easy to see why Venice has so great a fascination in the mind. Its canals and bridges, its gondolas and palaces running down into its waters make it so unlike any other city. Rome has a flavor all its own because of its antiquity, Naples because of the surroundings. London bears at all points the impress of the greatest mart of commerce on the globe. New York's "skyscrapers" convert its streets into countersunk canals because there is so little space to build on, while Los Angeles spreads out into magnificent distances because the climate suggests plenty of elbow room and the location affords such ample space. Paris owes its boulevards with their trees and its parks to the gay disposition of the people who live there and their strong predilection to live out of doors.

The age affects greatly the character of its cities. Athens was small for its population because its homes were merely sleeping places, the inhabitants spending all their waking hours in the streets and market places. Toledo with its narrow, tortuous streets can never be a place for modern business so long as these streets remain. It is merely one of the tombs of a past civilization, as out of place in our time as a sepulcher would be in a drawing-room. There is not a particle of the twentieth century, nor of the eighteenth nor nineteenth about this old Moorish stronghold. There is motive power enough in the Tagus to make the city great in the modern sense, but if the thing is ever done the old Toledo must first be made as the prophet said of Jerusalem, a place where not one stone would "be left on another that should not be thrown down."

There are few cities so utterly of the past as Toledo, but there are many that are so built that the past and the present meet together in them. There are features about Rome that take the mind back long anterior to the days of the Caesars, and there are others as much of the twentieth as anything in Portland or San Francisco. So of many great cities of Europe. There are features about Vienna that go back far into the past. Paris has things left that go back of the days of the Bourbon kings. The cities of Holland and Belgium nearly all speak to the mind of the days when the Spanish kingdom controlled these low countries. Even in London there are features strong of the past centuries.

Teutonic Cities Modern.

No observant person can spend even a few days among the Teutonic people without being impressed with the advanced state of civilization in all the great cities. Some of them date in their history far into the past, but there is little of antiquity about them. Vienna is said to have been first founded by the Celts. It is supposed that as these restless people invaded Rome and passed beyond Constantinople to found a colony in Asia Minor which dominated the country where they settled and gave it its name Galatia, so they went more northerly and founded Vienna. The Romans in the age of the Caesars had a strong camp at this place, and the famous Emperor Marcus Aurelius died there. It was the walls of Vienna which offered the first successful resistance to the victorious Saracens whose whirlwind march through Europe threatened to make that continent Asiatic. But the Vienna of 1911 is very modern. A great city of over 2,000,000 souls, it is almost altogether of today. It would surprise many well-informed persons to see Vienna. It is a well-built, handsome, modern capital, clean and well-managed, with all the evidences of prosperity among even the lower classes of the people, and with all the marks of a high Christian civilization in the manners of the inhabitants high and low. They are indeed an urbane people.

Munich, the capital of Bavaria, and Dresden, the capital of Saxony, are two Germanic cities that while only about one-fourth as large as the capital of Austria, are in all respects of the twentieth century. These cities are handsomely built and thoroughly well managed. The streets are as nearly perfect as can be, and they are at all times and places kept wonderfully clean.

But the man who would see the modern city in all its peculiar features, in all the spirit of the twentieth century, in all the glory of modern civilization, must go to Berlin. There is not a spot nor a wrinkle on this capital of the Kaiser, this metropolis of the German empire. There is not a remainder of the past anywhere in sight. Berlin seems to have sprung from the spirit of the twentieth century as perfect, as fully developed, as the legend makes Athena to have leaped from the cleaved head of Jove, armed and ready for any fray. This great city of more than 2,000,000 souls is as fleckless, as perfect, as flawless, as smooth and clean, as a new suit taken out of the tailor's package, as a new hat sent by the milliner to "my lady" to wear to today's reception. There seems to be not a fleck in the paint on any building. Indeed the paint seems to be all without a bit of weather stain, as if spread last week. There does not appear to be a corner knocked off of any brick in any building. The windows are so clean that one almost walks through them. The pavements are as perfect as any other feature, and there is not a misplaced tile on any of all the roofs of all the houses. Good streets are the rule without any exception, and they are kept as clean as any veranda on any home in Los Angeles. No citizen is permitted to toss anything into the street, even a bit of paper or pasteboard. Street sweepers are everywhere, and there are receptacles for waste of all kinds near at hand anywhere one might be. In all the hours of the several days I spent in Berlin, all in the streets from early morning until bedtime, I saw no person so far forget himself as to expectorate on the sidewalk. This I consider a record any city might be proud of and that all cities should emulate.

Nothing Slipshod.

The perfection with which all mechanical appliances work in Germany, the keys all fitting the keyholes, the modern fastenings all perfect in the performance of their functions, mark the spirit of thoroughness that pervades all the acts of the people. Order is the rule everywhere, and discipline of the highest degree is maintained in all that is done. There is nothing slipshod to be seen. Carelessness seems an unknown thing. One meets urbane people in all cities, and [illegible] manners are in no sense a monopoly of any one nation. But taking them as they are to be met with in the streets and stores, in their homes and in places of business, I have never met more thoughtful [illegible] merely to the rights of others, but for the other person's interest and comfort. Every person in [illegible] seems to be polite, men, women and children. [illegible] no parade about it. It is a thing that is as natural as speech. It is always present with every person in all the relations of life. The courteous [illegible] speech and gesture is as remarkable as the high intelligence of all, high and low. I asked how many persons between 20 and 60 years old might be found in [illegible] who could not read fluently and write correctly [illegible] language, and was told if I found one I would do [illegible] census taker had failed in. They all look it and act it.

A Four-Square City.

I read the other day in an American newspaper [illegible] municipal artist found fault with William Penn [illegible] ing out Philadelphia as the New Jerusalem [illegible] down from heaven, "four square." There are [illegible] to this. Berlin is as square as a chess board [illegible] does not detract from its effect. Other cities [illegible] the lay of the land. It was quite natural [illegible] York, built as it is on a flat iron, should have after the backbone of a flounder, Broadway as vertebrae and the side streets coming in at an angle more or less oblique like the ribs of the fish. Market street, San Francisco, is a noble thoroughfare leading from the ferry to the mission, and the side streets fall in place easily on one side at an angle, making a series of flat irons that are very impressive in the day. It would not be easy to lay out the hill streets in that city much worse than they are. So in Portland, Or., and Seattle, the hill streets are best because they follow the contour of the inclines. In the old days when Toledo and other cities were built a first settler came along and erected his shanty where his fancy led. A cowpath led to the water's edge. The next newcomer built where he pleased and a path connected the two domiciles. The third man never built in a straight line with the other two, and so a devious road grew up naturally. It is not easy in our day to find one's way from point to point. Traffic is greatly impeded by your picturesque winding way. Berlin is the embodiment of this age when business takes precedence of all other considerations. But what is lost in picturesqueness by this very practical way of laying out a city is compensated for by other means. Unter den Linden runs as straight as an arrow from the Kaiser's palace, the cathedrals, the museums, all the way to the entrance to the Tiergarten. But the street is one of the finest in the world. The boulevards of Paris and Brussels may possess an added charm from their curving outlines, but in no other way do they "run down" the German metropolis, and it is cleaner and is in all respects than any of the thoroughfares that may be compared with it. Yet Avenue Louise in Brussels is a model street for cleanliness. The Paris streets are not kept nearly so clean.

I do not mean to discredit other cities in my eulogy of Berlin. Cities differ so in type. Paris is the great pleasure ground of the world. Pleasure always takes precedence of business, excepting in the way of charges. I find the gay city by the Seine has learned much of late in the way of making out bills. It is one of the dearest cities in Europe. Our hotel is not what it should be. It is old, not clean. We take our two meals a day as ... We engaged accommodations in London for the coronation week in June. The rates were just 50 per cent higher than in London on our last visit six years ago. But for all that they are 20 cents each a day less than in Paris, and in London we are entitled to four meals a day. But there are more than 2,000,000 persons in Paris, and they must live (mostly off of the tourists, as many as 300,000 a year come to spend from ... a year.) Of these 100,000 persons are Americans, many of whom spend much time in the French capital. One Sunday in June we went to the church known as the American." It would not be easy to find so much ... in the pews of a house of worship as was gathered there. All things were absolutely redolent of ... and ... with wealth. This church spends thousands of dollars annually in charity. Mrs. W. K. ... is on its books for 2000 francs and Mrs. Collis Huntington for 500 francs for a special charity ... she was here. Archibald Sessions, once organist of Christ Church, Los Angeles, now plays the organ in this house of worship.

Autos in Plenty.

But this is far aside. I was speaking of Paris as the ... of the world. Such gay scenes are to be met nowhere else. One holiday afternoon along the Champs Elysees I counted 122 automobiles passing a point in five minutes. At Rond Point on this ... the same day I counted 146 machines passed in five minutes. It was not an unusual ... it was the rule. Six years ago there were ... in Paris. There probably is not ... a third of that number now. The ... taken the place of the horse vehicle. The ... hard on horses, and the frequent sudden stopping and starting make the load twice ... So the horses get crippled in the shoulders ("sweenied," the horsemen call it.) A good team ... to 7000 francs, the carriage 4000 to 5000. So ... will come to 10,000 francs. A good machine ... 7000 francs for ordinary use, lasts longer than horses and carriage, and is less trouble to care for. All Paris rides in autos. The big car with its ... costs about the same as the little "fiacre" of the same.

... speak of the cities, here is a feature of some ... In most Teutonic cities there are two ... of taxis. The only difference is that the first-class has red wheels, the second-class blue, and ... is a more roomy and convenient thing to ride ... there are people who pay the surtax for the red ... less comfortable seat just to be in style. I ... are mostly tourists, and sad to say perhaps ... of them speak English American-fashion.

... Perfect.

... free from prejudice and trying to point out ... features of various metropolises and saying as ... as possible about the shortcomings of any, ... in the twentieth century Berlin comes more ... embodying perfectly the spirit of this business ... any other. There are other than physical reasons for this opinion. One wonders at the manifest air ... that pervades everything in this capital ... The total count of any aspect of misery ... summed up in a single individual. The workers all seem to be well nourished. They are all ... I asked an American resident in Berlin if ... any poor people in the city. He replied that ... plenty of them. But they are not the wretched ... in other large cities. There is probably ... want here than in any other place of the ... The people are well educated and their intelligence shows them how to make a copper go farther than among densely ignorant people. Then there is less disease to combat, and that helps to keep misery from the doors. Many families in Berlin live in basements where the sun is scant. But these humble habitations must be kept in a sanitary condition. Any neglect in this respect is soon discovered and the culprit is so dealt with that no second visit reveals any neglect of this kind. Compulsory insurance guarantees a little something for old age. This insurance is paid for mostly by those who benefit by it. It is not Lloyd George's political scheme which puts a penalty on ability, industry and thrift on the part of a portion of the people to save from their fate those who would not save when they had something to lay by if they would. The employer contributes his share in the German system, but most of the fund is from the wages of the one for whom the provision is intended.

Another thing. Not all wage earners are compelled to insure. Those who show marked ability and industry by which they make above a given sum a year are presumed to have sense enough to take care of themselves. This puts a premium on the able, on the industrious, and thus encourages effort.

So if I were asked where I found the Zeitgeist of the twentieth century most in evidence I would say in Berlin. My opinion is founded on my conception of what the spirit of the age is composed of. Are not the elements business in its best-developed form, where the artisan turns out on the average the best work; industry on the part of each individual by which a livelihood at least is gained by all, a competency by many; high intelligence to direct the hand in all its operations; skill acquired by careful practice; cleanliness, and all the other concomitants of life that we sum up under the head sanitary; independence of spirit by which each seeks to take care of himself and his family in the present and to provide against times when income falls off? Among all the earnest people of many nations and in many cities it appears to me that the Berliner stands a little in advance of the best and far ahead of the worst.

The matter is deserving of more than passing thought. Germany is under the least popular form of government of any of the nations where the highest civilization prevails. The people, to be sure, have much to do with governing themselves. But it is far removed from a mob democracy. The government is representative where the representative people are charged with the well-being of those they represent. There are few of the most advanced notions in practice here preached by the radicals of all countries. Yet the results are admirable. And if a most highly educated people are so governed and well governed, who will insist too strongly that it is always necessary to let less highly intelligent people "run things" to suit the whim of the moment, following the impulses often raised by passion and often conceived in ignorance.

After all there is much worldly wisdom in the verse of Alexander Pope:

The Trail of the Skirt.

LIVELY TRIBULATIONS OF NED AND HIS GRAND MOTHER.

By Annie Louise Berray.

"WHAT'S the matter, grandmother?"

Ned dropped his tennis racket with a clatter and ran up the stairs, three at a time, to the top, where his grandmother sat. Her face showed amusement and distress.

"Matter!" she exclaimed. "Matter enough. I'm 74 years old, and I haven't as much sense as I had when I was 7. O Ned, I've done something awful!"

"Good for you!" ejaculated Ned, sitting down beside her. "Hope it's a real scrape you're in this time, so I can help you out and pay you back for some of the times you helped me."

"Don't make me laugh, Ned—it's awful," begged his grandmother. "I was sure it was that old black skirt of mine when I took it out of the closet between Mary's room and mine, and I'm sure yet——"

"If you say it was, then it was," affirmed Ned. "I'll swear to it in court. I'll——"

"Ned Roberts, keep still!" Grandmother put her hands over her ears.

"Now listen. You know the rummage sale the Ladies' Aid is having, and you know what beautiful clothes Gertrude has, and how she scatters her things from one end of the house to the other when she comes to visit. Not but what she's the dearest girl in the world, and you know, Ned Roberts, that I just love to have her come and visit Mary. But I'm in mortal terror all the while she's here for fear she'll lose some of her jewelry, leaving it around the way she does, but I never thought of her losing such a thing as her best black broadcloth skirt—and all my fault."

"See here, grandmother," interrupted Ned. "I catch the drift of your remarks as far as Gert's leaving her jewelry around loose—and it would serve her right if she lost it and all her clothes besides—but I can't catch on where the rummage sale comes in. She hasn't donated any of her gorgeous raiment to it, has she?"

Grandmother laughed. "Yes, she has, and she doesn't know it. It's awful in me to laugh about it, Ned, but I can't help it—to save my soul I can't. Mrs. Nutt came this morning to get things I had promised, and as I came downstairs I thought of that old black skirt of mine hanging in that closet off the hall between my room and Mary's, and I opened the door, and there it was, hanging on the first hook. I rolled it up and put it in the bundle, and off it went—and what do you suppose happened half an hour ago! The girls were getting ready to go out, and I heard Gertrude say: "Where's my black skirt?' And then she said she remembered she had found an empty hook in that closet off the hall and had hung it there. She's planning to wear it tonight."

Ned scrambled to his feet. "Me for the rummage sale!" he cried. "I'll have it here in half an hour."

A moment later the front door slammed behind him.

"Bless the boy!" murmured grandmother. "I must trot right down to the kitchen and make him a big plate of fudge for this."

She ran down the stairs as lightly as a girl.

She had just put the fudge on the window ledge to cool, when Ned dashed in. "I'm on the trail of the beast," he declared. "M'm, but that fudge smells good! You're a brick, grandmother. Mrs. Hawkins remembered selling the skirt to a German woman, a Mrs. Schneiderwitz. She is sure she lives over on the East Side. Watch me!"

He was off again—not, however, before grandmother found time to slip five big molasses cookies into his pocket.

More than an hour passed before he came back, hot, tired and empty-handed. His eyes brightened at the sight of the fudge.

"I'll have it here within half an hour," he assured his grandmother, putting as many pieces of fudge into his mouth as it could conveniently hold.

"I'm off now for Jefferson avenue. You see, Mrs. Schneiderwitz has moved. I found the place where she did live, all right, and lucky for me they were able to tell me where she moved to."

"Jefferson avenue!" grandmother exclaimed in dismay. "You don't have to go clear out there? And miss your tennis practice—and that match coming off next Saturday! Dear, dear, if I had to go and do such a foolish thing like that, why didn't I do it some time beside Saturday afternoon!"

"See here, grandmother"—Ned turned in the act of transferring part of the fudge from the plate to his pocket—"you quit it. You've missed things a sight more important than tennis practice to get me out of scrapes. Bye!" And he was gone.

Half an hour went past, then an hour, and an hour and a half.

When at last he did come in, his voice was cheery, but his eyes were grave. "We're in for it," he began abruptly. "I'm no good at breaking it gently, but Mrs. Schneiderwitz is making trousers for the little Schneiderwitzes out of that black skirt. She showed me the first pair of trousers."

Grandmother sat down suddenly in one of the kitchen chairs. "Ned Roberts!" she gasped.

"Never mind, I'll pay half," he said.

His grandmother looked up, and her heart filled with pride at his manliness. What a pity his sister could not see him like this now and then! She would have less cause to complain that she had a brother at the "trying age."

"You ridiculous boy!" grandmother laughed at last. "I suppose you think I would let you take the money you have been saving for a punching bag to help an old lady like me out of a scrape. No, son, all I ask is your moral support when I tell Gertrude. Now you finish that fudge and run along, and make the best of what's left of your Saturday afternoon. Jane is out, so I have to get dinner tonight."

"Pity Mary couldn't help once in a while. Lucky I don't have to depend on her for this sort of thing," he remarked as he gathered up the last of the fudge. "Don't tell Gert till after dinner—feed her first." With this sage advice he departed.

He came in before dinner was quite ready, however, and stood by his grandmother's side as they waited for the girls to come down. Grandmother gave a little jump as she heard Mary say: "Why, Gertrude, I thought you said you hung your black skirt in this closet. It isn't here."

"Sit down, grandmother," commanded Ned. "I'll do the explaining myself."

He started upstairs, but stopped suddenly as Gertrude's sweet voice floated down. "My skirt—isn't it there? Why, where—oh, I believe I took it into your grandmother's room to sew a hook on it. Would you mind looking It is? Thanks. Would you mind bringing it?"

"There!" exclaimed grandmother. "I knew it was my old black skirt!"

"And it was your old black skirt!" echoed Ned, seizing his grandmother by the waist and waltzing her about the dining-room. "And it's the little Schneiderwitzes' trousers now!" He guided his protesting partner too near the table, and a tumbler crashed to the floor. "Ned, you awful boy, what are you doing now?" his sister called from upstairs.

"Nothing," he answered meekly. "It's grandmother."

Grandmother's eyes twinkled as she helped Ned pick the broken glass from the floor. "I just wondered all along," she chuckled, "how many pairs of trousers Mrs. What's-her-name aimed to get out of that skirt, scant as they make them nowadays. That black skirt of mine, now—well, I'm mighty thankful it was my skirt!" sister called from upstairs.

JOHN BURNS'S FAMOUS STRAW HAT.

[London Sketch:] The question has been asked lately, what has become of the historic straw hat which John Burns wore during the great dock strike two and twenty years ago Mr. Burns is a careful preserver of all books, documents, newspaper cuttings, and other records which bear on his own exceptional career, and he preserves the straw hat among them. It would need a great deal of money to tempt him to part with it. He was once offered £200 for it by an innkeeper, who wanted to exhibit it in his bar. But he promptly refused.

New Naval Aero Gun.

WILL SHOOT THREE MILES STRAIGHT UP INTO THE AIR.

By William L. Altdorfer.

BEFORE long American warships will be equipped with another battery of guns to fight hostile invaders in the air. Uncle Sam, with the assistance of his ordnance experts at Washington, has invented a new gun that will shoot more than three miles straight up into the air. Any hostile airship coming within this distance of a battleship in future will be taking great chances, for the new gun will be able to bring it down, no matter how great the speed it may be traveling through the air.

After shooting a shell more than 18,000 feet into the air and closer to the skies than an aeroplane has ever flown, the experiments with the new naval gun destined to destroy the airships of an enemy have proved successful even beyond the fondest hopes of its inventor, Admiral Nathan C. Twining.

The new gun is a great improvement over the aeroplane guns of other countries, as much of the intricate mechanism and gears has been eliminated. The perfection of this gun places the United States far in advance of her rivals in the matter of defense against aerial attack. Many guns for defense against aeroplanes have been built by European powers, but their success has been limited. Probably the best-known aeroplane gun is manufactured in Germany. Recently this gun was mounted on an automobile truck, and is said to be efficient, but very clumsy. A crew of six men is needed to operate it.

All that is needed to put an aeroplane or balloon out of commission, and probably kill the occupants instantly, is to explode a small shell somewhere near it. The white-hot steel from the bursting shell and the flame from the explosion are sufficient. This result can be obtained from the Twining gun, which is so small it can be operated by one man if necessary.

Preparing to fire new naval aero gun.

Winging an airship with the new gu

Story of its Invention.

Admiral Twining's story of how he happened to design the gun is interesting, and shows what can be done in a remarkably short time. "About a month ago I thought of the aeroplane guns invented by foreign countries, and realized it was time the United States got in the procession. I started the plans, and within a week they were finished.

"About three weeks from that time the gun was completed at the Washington Navy Yard and sent to the naval proving grounds at Indian Head, where the experiments proved it a success.

"In an aerial gun the problems of the recoil and the sight are the hardest to overcome. The great difficulty in designing a mount to withstand the terrific recoil of a gun pointing directly up in the air was successfully met, and the only thing now necessary to make the gun accurate and almost sure to hit an airship is the matter of the sight. Our experiments at Indian Head have given us sufficient data from which to design a sight, and it is now being done.

"Another great problem confronting us with an aeroplane gun is to figure out the trajectory or curve the shot describes while going through the air. When firing straight ahead or on a horizontal plane, this has been figured out to a certainty, but when we fire into the air—something entirely new—it is altogether different. However, it is certain this point will be detrmined in a very short while.

"In order to hit an aeroplane the man who sights the gun must be very skillful. It is something like wing shooting, and requires accurate judgment on the part of the man sighting the gun. The range finders we already have in the navy can be used to find the range of an airship just as well as finding the range of an object on a horizontal plane."

In speaking of the danger of bombs thrown from an airship striking the deck of a battleship, Admiral Twining gives some interesting reasons why this would be next to impossible, unless the airship comes dangerously close to the battleship. He said: 'A shot from a gun on a battleship can reach the aeroplane much quicker than a bomb can be dropped from the airship to the battleship. If a gun could be placed on an airship and fired downward, the airship would then be in nearly as good a position as the battleship, but there has been no such gun yet invented. The question of weight comes in here. A gun to be of any value at all should weigh about 100 pounds, and when this weight is added to that of the operator, it would be too heavy for the aeroplane to carry.

Difficulties of Fighting from Airships.

"A striking and simple illustration of the difficulty an airman would experience in dropping a bomb on the deck of a battleship is that of a person going over a trestle in a railroad train traveling at the rate of say thirty miles an hour trying to drop an orange between any two ties of the trestle. In order to accomplish this feat it would be necessary to drop the orange several seconds before reaching the particular ties, because the velocity of the train would throw the orange ahead for so many feet. This is the problem the airship is up against when it attacks a battleship, only on a much greater scale.

"Again, the weight an aeroplane can carry is limited and very few bombs could be carried by the airman, but on the contrary a battleship carries almost any amount of ammunition, and it can therefore afford to take more chances than an airship. The same reasoning applies if a fleet of airships should attempt to destroy a city.

"We hope ultimately to have such a sight that will enable us to fire at and reach an aero at any point in the sky within a vertical distance of at least 15,000 feet or within a horizontal radius of a mile. And we believe that such a sight will be designed shortly. When this is done there will be practically no danger to be apprehended from an airship."

While the new gun can be fired from any angle in a half-circle, it is the general belief that it will never be aimed at 90 degrees or in a perpendicular position, for the reason that the shell might return to the deck of the battleship probably unexploded, and there wreak the destruction intended for the enemy. The angles of fire will probably range from 50 to 75 degrees.

When the gun was submitted to its first test at Indian Head, Md., fifteen shots were fired in the air at various angles, then the gun was lowered to 70 degrees, but the firing crew lost sight of the place where the shell fell because of the haze. Unloaded shells were used in the experiments. The fuse of a loaded shell is so sensitive, ordnance experts say, that explosion would result immediately upon contact with an airship even though it grazed only a wing and would disable or demolish the aeroplane and probably kill the aviator.

The Tests.

The second day's tests were even more favorable than the first day. A preliminary examination of the gun showed it stood the first test without injury. The first shot was fired at an angle of about 70 degrees and long line of smoke, curving slightly as it reached the ground, furnished the commanding officer with his view as to the course of the shots. Observers stationed along the river bank to ascertain the spot where the shot struck, said it had become lost in the haze.

A few seconds afterward another shot was fired at a lower angle. This test continued, the gun being altered with every shot, until ten rounds had been fired. The gun was swung on its turret so as to cover a quarter of the horizon, and discharged at angles ranging from 60 to 75 degrees.

It was then arranged to point at an angle of 75 degrees, when the final volley of the day—five shots fired in rapid succession at an imaginary aeroplane—was discharged. From these tests it was shown that the new aero gun could, in warfare, keep up continuous firing at the rate of twelve shots a minute.

The government expects to build at least twenty-five of the new aerial guns, and after being tested at the Indian Head proving grounds they will be sent immediately to the battleship fleet for mounting in a new deck battery. Because of the low caliber, it will be possible to have them made at the Washington Navy Yard. This foundry has for years been too small to meet the exacting casting requirements for modern big guns, and all big gun castings have been made by private concerns.

The idea of the new one-pounder gun is expected to be developed later into a three-inch gun. Naval experts say the three-inch gun will shoot seven miles straight up into the air, and with this great range they claim no airship will be able to live long enough to come within striking distance of any battleship. And even should it manage to live through the hail of shot and shell which would greet it, the chances are a thousand to one it would fail in striking the battleship with a bomb.

The Army Gun.

The army has progressed even farther than the navy in perfecting an aeroplane gun. The new army gun is a six-pounder, equipped with specially-adapted high-explosive projectiles and shrapnel shells, to demolish aeroplanes and balloons in battle. It can be elevated at any angle and throws a shell seven miles.

The construction of the new army rifle has just been completed at the Rock Island, Ill., arsenal. Experiments with it are expected to begin at the Sandy Hook proving grounds within a fortnight. The army thus is in advance of the navy toward the solution of the problem of guns against airships.

The shells which this gun will hurl into the skies are formidable devices. They are loaded with dunnite and other high explosives, and, on bursting, send forth a spray of shot in a conelike area, similar to the performance of a skyrocket, almost certain to strike an airship if aimed with any degree of accuracy. Other projectiles which have been designed for the new gun contain only a high explosive, which, on exploding, would wreck any airship in its vicinity.

Following in the wake of these powerful projectiles are "tracers," which will aid in accurately aiming the gun in the course of a hostile airship. The "tracers" to be used in daylight will be of smoke, while sparks will mark the path of the shell at night.

The sight of this new gun also has been perfected. It is designed to meet the changing conditions of the trajectory of a projectile fired at varying angles. As soon as the angle of the aeroplane has been determined, the sight will automatically set the gun to the proper elevation.

In the forthcoming experiments at Sandy Hook the gun will shoot at balloons and box kites, and possibly an aeroplane will be used for the purpose of sighting at distance. The signal corps is expected to cooperate with the ordnance department and send one of its airships now at College Park, Md., to the proving grounds. Credit for the invention is due ordnance experts of the army working under the direction of Brig.-Gen. William Crozier, chief of ordnance.

[illegible] of the Airship.

The strenuous efforts now being made to perfect an engine of war capable of demolishing an airship, it is pointed out to the writer, demonstrate the seriousness with which the possibilities of the aeroplane in any conflict is regarded by naval experts.

American officers still cling to the belief that aeroplane warfare will be confined largely to scouting, but even this, they admit, is of tremendous importance. The scout cruisers—the "eyes of the navy"—with a flotilla of aeroplanes, which could be sent from their decks at any moment, would increase their range by hundreds of miles. Few believe, however, that they ever will be resolved into an attacking force.

Germans have made the greatest progress in the development of an airship gun, both for the army and navy, while the French and the English follow. In Germany they have an airship gun which can be mounted on board ship, but at present has been used only for army use. This gun was shown at the exhibition, mounted on a powerful armored car, capable of a speed of forty miles an hour.

On the gun the sights are changed by means of a wheel. They are telescopic, and a moving object is followed easily, while a patent temperature scale gives automatically the fuse setting for any elevation or range. Special arrangements were made for using the motor chassis as a gun platform, making it very rigid. The peculiar feature of this gun is that the recoil is absorbed without the necessity of compressed springs. These features are said to be especially valuable in a gun carried on a car, and are such as to [illegible] curves to be taken at a high speed. [illegible] the German car carries six men, 140 rounds of ammunition, and 200 liters of benzine.

The question of airships attacking submarines has received considerable attention of late. Only last month an aviator named Aubrun flying outside Cherbourg, in France, was sent out by the French naval authorities to find two submarines which had been ordered to submerge in the harbor several hours before.

Submarines Discovered.

The aeroplane, at a height of 400 feet, discovered within a few minutes both submarines, which were over a mile and a half apart. It then returned to the harbor and prepared for a further test—to discover the submarines while submerged and going at a high rate of speed. Aubrun rose at once to a height of 1200 [illegible], and, after a short observation, he found the perisc[illegible] of one submarine which was at a depth of about eighteen feet. This second flight occupied twenty minutes. It has now been demonstrated that from a height of about 3000 feet it is possible to discover a submerged submarine, and that a submarine, with the aid of its periscope, cannot sight an aeroplane when the latter is flying higher than 1500 feet.

The other side of the story regarding the destructive possibilities of the airship or aeroplane as against the aero gun on land or sea is of interest. For instance it is claimed an airship can drop from an unreachable height at least 200 pounds of high explosives, and destroy railroads, bridges, ships, and whole cities. Moreover, it should be considered that what goes up must come down, and the destructive force of a descending bomb would be just as great downward as in its upward flight, and there is no controlling its fall.

The fastest time made by expert gunners in recent experiments at finding the range of an aeroplane, with all the most advanced instruments, was eight minutes, and then the barometer record on the aeroplane showed the range was 200 yards off. The aviator is not standing still, waiting for the gunner to find his range and shoot him down, but he is on his way and out of sight before the gunner can adjust his sights.

In France there are more than 1000 airmen all qualified for special military duty. There are also fifty schools of aviation there, ten of which are of the highest order, and can turn out aviators with a week's training if required. With the present facilities of construction, twenty aeroplanes a day could be produced if they were needed. These can be carried in compact form, so the question of transportation amounts to nothing. An old barn or a granary would afford all the needed facilities for putting together aeroplanes secretly near the scene of action so the outside world would know nothing until the fleet of war birds arose and was on its way carrying destruction.

"Psychic Effect."

It is just here that the generally unappreciated power of the aeroplane exists. It is in that psychic effect upon the minds of the people of threatened communities that the greatest peace-compelling power of the aeroplane is to be found. Self-preservation is a sound law of nature, and the destruction of all one's family and belongings is not a thought that can be overcome by an appeal to patriotism. It is my all or your all that is at stake, and the crime of war under such conditions might cause an insurrection against any ruler who sought to permit it.

Unfortunately it is claimed with all the progress made in aviation, conditions have forced development along lines not to the best general good of science. It has been a money-making period of the manufacturers, and they have only devoted their time to speed, ignoring other and more important phases. Now solid and substantial progress seem to be in order, according to experts, which will make the aeroplane as positive a factor in commerce and war as the railroad and the dreadnought.

While on the subject of aeroplanes, airships, and aero guns, it is interesting to go back twenty years or so. If any one had said, at that time that within two decades man would be able to see through opaque substances, to talk with vessels sailing on the high seas, or to fly higher and faster than most birds, no one would have believed. Roentgen's X-rays, Marconi's wireless, and the invention of a heavier-than-air flying machine have brought all these things to pass.

RUSSIAN EXCAVATIONS AT OLBIA.

[London Standard:] The site of the ancient Greek colonial city of Olbia is on the southern bank of the Bug and is partially covered by the modern Russian village of Parutino. Renewed excavations are now proceeding under the supervision of Prof. Parmakovsky of the Imperial Archaeological Society. During the last fortnight many interesting finds have been made in the old city necropolis of terra cotta statuettes and masks, and personal adornments in gold and silver, rings, beads, necklaces, ear pendants, bracelets, etc. The most valuable object, however, is a second Eros in bronze, of superb workmanship and artistic merit, standing about fifteen inches with its small pedestal. The greater and more valuable results of the researches desultorily made during the last few years are now in the Hermitage Museum at St. Petersburg. Olbia was originally founded by a Greek colony from Miletus, and became about 600 B. C. the greatest civilized and trading center in Southern Scythia.

PERIFIED GIANTS.

[Scientific American:] Three petrified redwood trees that have been pronounced the very largest in the world that have thus far been discovered have just been uncovered from the debris of the mountainside, only a short distance from the famous Bohemian Club Grove in Sonoma county, California. This point is near the little town of Occident.

One of these prehistoric monsters, that make the pyramids of Egypt modern by comparison in their ages, measures 23 feet in diameter and is 350 feet in length. The two other petrified trees are 13 and 12 feet in diameter.

THE PASSING BOOTJACK.

ONCE USED BY ALL MEN, NOW BY FEW—THE MODERN BOOTJACK.

[New York Sun:] Time was when there was at least one bootjack in every home, for in those days father and son wore boots, and when boots were wet or tight a bootjack was a necessity.

Then all of a sudden, some fifty years or thereabout ago, the great majority of men took to wearing shoes. Then in many homes the bootjack passed out of use and out of sight and out of mind. There are many people of the present generation who never saw a bootjack or even heard of one. And still there are sold at the present day some bootjacks, for there are still some men who wear boots, either as their customary foot apparel or at times in pursuit of labor or recreation.

There are still some fine old gentlemen who continue to wear fine calfskin boots. There are hundreds of thousands of farmers who still wear boots, but in the boots worn by farmers there has been also a great revolution. Where once they all wore cowhide boots, now almost without exception they wear rubber boots, and if they buy with them the socks intended to be worn with them the rubber boots pull off easily and there is no need of a bootjack.

The original bootjack was made of a strip of wood a foot or more in length by three or four inches in width and an inch or so in thickness. You sawed out a deep notch in one end of this piece of wood or you rounded out there a deep opening to put the heel of the boot into, and a little back of this notch you nailed across the under-side of the board a cleat to raise that end of the bootjack off the floor. Then you put one foot on the bootjack at the end on the floor and you put the other heel in the bootjack's jaw and you pulled on that foot to try to pull it out of the boot. Many a man and many a boy has had to do some right smart tugging to get his boots off, even with a bootjack. Some years before bootjacks went out there were introduced also malleable iron bootjacks.

As might be expected, the bootjacks of the present are much like those of old, but there is now sold a folding bootjack made in two lengthwise pieces hinged along the middle. You can fold this bootjack up and fold down into a place made for it the supporting cleat. The folding bootjack occupies less space at home and is handy for traveling.

Now also there is a bootjack with adjustable jaws which can be set for any size boot.

What is called an ox-yoke bootjack is one that you can use without any bending over. The ox-yoke bootjack is held in a frame composed of two upright sticks about three feet high which are held together by two cross-pieces, one near the bottom and one near the top. At the floor end the upright sticks of the frame are a foot apart, at the top some three or four inches. Across the top ends of the sticks is a handle for you to grasp. The cross-piece between the uprights down by the floor runs through the bootjack from side to side just back of the jaw and the bootjack turns on this cross-rod. When it is not in use you turn the bootjack up between the uprights and then you can lean the outfit against a wall or set it in a closet; it takes up little room. When you want to use it you grasp it by the top handle and kick the bootjack over to let its free end rest on the floor and then there's your bootjack ready for use without any stooping over.

Then there's an imported bootjack called the London fitted folding bootjack. This bootjack is of wood, hinged, as its name implies, to make it fold into smaller compass. It has on its under side clasps to hold a pair of boothooks. Here the gentleman rider has his equipment for pulling his boots on and for pulling them off kept all together in compact and handy form.

HOME OF THE GUILLOTINE.

[Le Petit Journal:] A wagon drawn by the two prison horses Gaspard and Balthazar made its way slowly and solemnly through Paris yesterday from M. Deibler's shed in the Rue de la Folie-Regnault to the Sante prison, Boulevard Arago. It was evident from the care taken that the contents of the wagon were precious, and if it had been known that the guillotine, which has served its sinister purpose for many years on the Place de la Roquette and all over France, was being moved to its new home many more people would have stopped to look at the silent procession.

The new home of M. Deibler's "widow" is the courtyard of the Sante prison, so that when an execution is contemplated now there will be no watching the premises in the Rue de la Regnault for signs of activity as a "tip" that M. Deibler is going to operate. Now the machine will be on hand, except of course when it performs out of the capital. The residents in the neighborhood of its former resting place certainly are not complaining of its departure.

HEATED CARPETS.

[London Daily Sketch:] Many patents have been granted in respect of passing electric wires or gauze along grooves or sewn compartments in carpets, table covers, "and such like," as the patent agents say, but these have generally been for lighting purposes, connections being made by means of sharp spurs that penetrate the top cover.

A patent has been taken out lately in Germany in connection with running fine wires through a carpet in parallel lines connected with an ordinary electric-light current. The wires become warm, and in larger sizes of carpets the temperature can be regulated at will. After the current is turned off the carpet remains warm for two or three hours, and a small foot rug may in this way be placed hot in a carriage in winter and keep the feet warm without additional current during an ordinary drive.

Persian Superstitions.

CONDUCT OF ALL CLASSES WIDELY INFLUENCED BY THEM.

By Mary A. Clarke Colquhoun.

IT is impossible to listen to the conversation, or to observe the actions, of the Persians without becoming aware that they are very superstitious. No nation, and few individuals, are entirely free from superstition of some kind, but in Persia this feeling etxends to all classes of society and governs all the actions of daily life to an extent unknown in western lands.

The well-known superstition that to sneeze once is a bad omen seriously interferes with many of the duties and pleasures of the Persian. When he is so unfortunate as to sneeze once, he quickly says: "Sabr amad" (a time for waiting has come,) and for at least two hours thereafter he cannot be persuaded to take medicine, start on a journey, or begin any new or important work. A missionary surgeon, who has more than once had to postpone an operation because he or the patient sneezed once, says: "I have now become an adept at producing double sneezes."

A patient on consulting a doctor, invariably asks if he shall eat hot or cold food. The words "hot" and "cold," as he uses them, do not, however, refer to the temperature, but rather to kinds of food. The distinction between these, moreover, is sometimes so fine as to be quite incomprehensible to the western mind; as, for instance, when they call a hen hot and a rooster cold; or vice versa, I'm not sure which.

The superstition of thirteen seems to be world-wide. In Persia it is so strong that in counting it is customary to say: "Eleven, twelve, NOT thirteen," etc.

Another of their superstitions relates to bread. They think it a bad omen to destroy a piece of bread, though they would not think it so to destroy anything else that they did not need or want. Again, it is unlucky to cut bread, they always tear it into pieces. When I have asked them why they have this feeling in regard to bread, the answer has invariably been: "Bread is the gift of God." But why it should be considered the gift of God more than other articles of food I am quite unable to say.

On one day in early spring (I have forgotten just what day it is, but think it one of their numerous holidays) everybody must go outside the city gates "to carry away the bad luck of the year."

A piece of white muslin to be used as a shroud must never be folded, but is carried from the bazaar crumpled up in the hands.

The wearing of amulets and charms is universal. For this purpose nothing is thought quite so efficacious as the Koran. This is printed in very small type on circular paper about two inches in diameter, and bound in leather cases which are worn on the arm.

Written prayers are often sewed up in cases of leather or beads or silk, and worn about the neck. The most approved way of using written prayers, however, is to put the paper in water, and, after the ink has faded from the paper, to drink the water.

It is easy at this distance of time and space to write somewhat lightly on this subject, but I remember that my feelings were very different when some poor, disheartened woman asked me to write for her a prayer that her husband might love her, that he might not take another wife, that God would give her a son so that she might retain her husband's favor, or that her sick baby might be restored to health.

There are few rivers in Persia, and not many of these are bridged. Years ago a wealthy woman built a bridge over a stream near the capital city, and then, thinking that this should have been done by the Shah, she pronounced a curse upon any king who should ever cross the bridge. It is said that no Persian ruler has ever had the hardihood to venture upon it, and I do not suppose there is money enough in the kingdom to hire one to do so.

One is thought to be very lucky to be the bearer of good news, and equally unlucky to be obliged to be the bearer of evil tidings. Indeed, there is such a prejudice against telling bad news that it is always concealed as long as possible from those most interested.

In the early days of missions in Persia the people were naturally suspicious of the missionaries, and were constantly on the lookout for something in their houses which would exert a baleful inuence upon native visitors. A Persian lady calling one day on an American missionary lady wished to sit in a rocking chair, which was something she had never seen before. She got up into it with her feet and attempted to squat upon her heels, as she would have done upon the floor—with the result that she and the chair both took a tumble backward. Hence there went abroad a report that the missionaries kept in their houses a machine for converting people to Christianity.

The great superstition is what is known as the "evil eye." You must not say to some one whom you meet: "How well you are looking!" For if you do, and that person is taken ill, it will be because you gave him the evil eye. You must not say to a mother: "What a pretty baby!" "What a bright child!" For if you do, and anything unfortunate happens to that child, you will be considered responsible. Many mothers let their children go dirty and poorly clothed, in order that they may not attract favorable attention.

During my first summer in Persia the baby daughter of our cook was ill. The family lived near us, and I had become very fond of the baby. One day the American doctor told me that the little thing could not live until the next morning. I went to see her that evening. As I was leaving, knowing that it would be the last time I should see her alive, I leaned over the cradle and kissed her lightly on the forehead. As the doctor had expected, the child died that night. The father and mother, I think, were too intelligent, and had too much confidence in my affection for their baby, to think that I had given her the evil eye, but some of their relatives and neighbors took a different view of the case.

Really, however, this superstition of the evil eye is only an extreme form of a superstition that is very common in more civilized lands. It is a relic of the old heathen belief that the gods are jealous of those who enjoy great good fortune, and will do all in their power to bring disaster upon them. You have seen it a thousand times. If in a company of people some one says: "I have not been ill for six months," or mentions immunity from some other misfortune, some one is sure to say: "Oh, touch wood!"

I never saw the most ignorant Persian woman who was more superstitious about the evil eye than a prominent English lady of Tabriz. Whenever anything was said in company which was supposed to be a cause of the evil eye, this lady would exclaim: "Oh, do make the sign," and she herself would invariably make it. She would laugh, of course, but some of us felt that if it had been purely for the sake of fun she would have forgotten it once in a while.

The sign which is thought to have some power to avert the evil eye consists in holding the second and third fingers of both hands close to the palms with the thumbs, while the other fingers are extended straight out. Then, with the hands behind you, you make a downward movement three times.

Fortune tellers do a big business in Persia. Some read the palm; others read the stars; still others consult the Koran, for so firmly is superstition mixed even with their religion that "suras" or passages from their sacred book are marked "lucky" or "unlucky." Should a Persian be in doubt as to the advisability of starting on a journey or undertaking any enterprise, he might visit a fortune teller and ask him to consult the Koran. Should he, opening the book at random, chance upon a sura marked "unlucky" it would be a divine indication that the project must be abandoned.

Did not our ancestors consult the Bible in much the same way? For them the indications were not quite so certain, for the translators of our Scriptures failed to mark passages for the purpose of fortune telling, but the spirit was the same.

Charms and love potions are commonly resorted to. There is a story told of one man who did not believe in love potions. In order to prove to several friends that there was nothing in it he bribed the maid of a prominent, wealthy, married woman to give her mistress a potion which was designed to make her fall in love with him. A few hours afterward the servant of this lady appeared at his house, saying: "My mistress wishes [illegible] see you." Whereupon the man became frightened, [illegible] in that vicinity.

NEW TROUSERS FREE.

[London Daily Sketch:] The item of £110, [illegible] mately, revealed in the accounts of the London City Corporation as expenditure on new trousers for half the Cabinet is not, as some might think, a gracious tribute to ministers who have been worn down, in more [illegible] than one, by the prolonged session and the all-night sittings.

The annual rendering of a bale of cloth is one of the perquisites of high office dutifully adhered to by the corporation.

Trousers! The bulky parcels which Guildhall [illegible] to Whitehall contain more than enough cloth for an extra pair of trousers. By immemorial custom the [illegible] ing amounts, in each case of a government officer, to four and a half yards—sufficient to cut up into an [illegible] frock coat suit or evening dress. The [illegible] man in a lounge suit fills out about three and a quarter yards. The color of the cloth is black, and the material of the very best. At one time of day it was invariably woven on one particular loom.

Not every member of the government shares in these best black perquisites, and to be entitled to the [illegible] tion offering one must be the Lord Chancellor, [illegible] Secretary, Foreign Secretary, Attorney-General, or Solicitor-General; but those who hold the following [illegible] offices of state are also in the share-out: Lord Chancellor, Lord Chief Justice of the King's Bench, Master of the Rolls, Lord Chamberlain of the King's Household, Vice-Chamberlain of the Household, Lord Steward, Treasurer of the Household, and Comptroller of the Household.

Every December the livery cloth committee of the Court of Aldermen meet for solemn deliberation [illegible] the samples submitted to their choice. The [illegible] then given out, and the cloth delivered and paid for [illegible] the following May, the items passing through [illegible] counts of the City Chamberlain.

REFORMING THE CALENDAR.

[London Daily Sketch:] Sir Henry Dalziel is [illegible] sible for a bill that would substitute for the [illegible] irregular periods, of which the week is a common [illegible] ure.

It differs in some important features from the [illegible] dar reform bill of Mr. Robert Pearce. The bill [illegible] to make the months as uniform in length as [illegible] but as a difference in this respect is unavoidable [illegible] year with twelve months, it is therefore thought [illegible] ter to increase that difference so as to allow of the [illegible] being a common measure of all the months. [illegible] rangement makes it possible for each month to [illegible] on a Sunday and end on a Saturday.

In meeting the desire for a fixed date for [illegible] movable holy days, it has been thought sufficient [illegible] act a fixed date only for Easter, as all the [illegible] calculated from the date of Easter.

Sir Henry Dalziel proposes that the extra [illegible] accrues in leap year, and has hitherto been added [illegible] end of February, shall after the commencement [illegible] act be named Leap Day, and be intercalated [illegible] last day of June and the first day of July, [illegible] tuted by the next section of this act. The [illegible] 364 days shall be divided into months as follows: [illegible]

January, February, April, May, July, August, [illegible] November, twenty-eight days each.

March, June, September and December, [illegible] days each.

The day on which the act comes [illegible] first day of every year thereafter is to be [illegible] Year's Day, while neither New Year's Day [illegible] Day are to be accounted days of the week [illegible] be included in any computation of days.

[illegible] Tiger Lily's Trail.

[illegible] EXPEDITION THAT WAS BLOODLESS BUT SUCCESSFUL.

By Neeta Marquis.

[illegible] wild flowers, one would naturally expect the tiger lily to be the most difficult of capture.

Early in the spring I found a certain canyon [illegible] shining green stalks with graceful whorls of [illegible] leaves gave promise that along in the first days [illegible] tiger lilies were going to air themselves in [illegible] and flaunt their red-flecked orange petals [illegible] admiration of the ferns and grasses. It was a [illegible] secluded canyon, ingeniously concealing itself [illegible] the general picnicking hordes, with their scatter[illegible] and mussy eggshells, by the narrowness of [illegible], which apparently offered little to the inves[illegible]. But I learned its secret that day in early spring, [illegible] my knowledge against the time when it [illegible] to the open season for tiger lilies.

[illegible] Chloe and the Newspaper Man into my confidence, for they are both trustworthy and discreet, and [illegible] of the Order of Bloodless Sportsmen.

[illegible] were made for the hunters of dreams,
[illegible] for the fishers of song;
[illegible] who hunt for the gunless game
[illegible] and the woods belong."

[illegible] a day in July we set forth on the quest for [illegible] quarry. You know what it means to have "a [illegible] to go tiger hunting with"? A tiger-lily-hunting [illegible] many of the same qualifications.

[illegible] weather for hunting, but the morning re[illegible] until we reached the mountains, and as [illegible] Chloe's and my impedimenta was, as usual, in [illegible] of the Newspaper Man, we got along beau[illegible]. The big canyon from which our lily canyon [illegible] filled with sumach in a white flame of [illegible] a numberless army of little busy bees [illegible] the shining hour. The air was drowsy [illegible] melody of their labor song. Blos[illegible] also spread a banquet for them, with [illegible] whitish flower, and love vine spun its [illegible] into thick meshes of color over bush and [illegible]

[illegible] a fresher color note in our smaller canyon. [illegible] penetrated but a little way when the bright [illegible] and bay tree greeted the eyes, and linger[illegible] of spring softened the ground growth. The [illegible] of the beauty a little farther up set my [illegible] all a-tangle.

[illegible] the darlingest canyon!" I gushed in my [illegible] way. "Just wait a little and see!"

[illegible] willing to halt for a rest before pushing on [illegible]. We dropped down on a brown bank in the [illegible] green maple leaves. Some previous [illegible] penetrated thus far, for newspapers [illegible] in untidy confusion. The first [illegible] from them was a flat bottle lying [illegible] the brown grass. It was half-filled with am[illegible]. Its label was clean and new, and said some[illegible] Old Bourbon. Altogether a nice thing [illegible] in the "darlingest canyon."

[illegible] indignant attention to it. The Newspaper [illegible] it up, uncorked it, sniffed scientifically at the [illegible] pronounced them genuine. He mused [illegible] the advisability of taking the find along to [illegible] the bottle of alcohol for the stove in his [illegible] decided it would not be necessary.

[illegible] ought to break the bottle and destroy the [illegible] the Carrie Nation side of my conscience [illegible] to suggest.

[illegible] the Newspaper Man gently, laying it [illegible] position on the ground. "It may [illegible] life."

[illegible] very humane. And incidentally reassur[illegible] of rattlers.

[illegible] we went the prettier the canyon grew. [illegible] us, rippling along with perhaps [illegible] joyousness in contrast with the [illegible] winter flow. Its bed was a tangled [illegible] vines, on which we discovered an [illegible] bright red berry. Big-fronded ferns and [illegible] added their tropic profusion to bitter[illegible]. The trail skirted the stream bed in [illegible] where the canyon walls sought to lay [illegible] together, and the grasses, or [illegible] our garments with a deliciously [illegible] sound as we threaded our way, [illegible] the thickets.

[illegible] sumach was left behind as we [illegible], and the white flowers of the holly [illegible] place. The lovely creamy flower of the [illegible] above our heads in feathery clusters, [illegible] elder blossoms and even more deli[illegible]. The clear, soft green of the maple [illegible] a great umbrella held over us, and [illegible] filled the air with stimulating fra[illegible]

[illegible] was the most conspicuous flower. [illegible] it on small stems, but it grew ever [illegible] six feet tall were flaring like torches [illegible]. The canyon widened, narrowed, and [illegible] with fascinating capriciousness, and in [illegible] pale lavender mariposa lilies, purple[illegible], and rich deep yellow flowers of an un[illegible]. But red and white were the predominant [illegible] yellow and blue had been the color notes [illegible] earlier. The scarlet of the larkspur [illegible] in the scarlet of swinging vines like [illegible] which were pendant above the stream [illegible] to the rocky wall, and echoed in a [illegible] like the mimulus down close by the water. White was there in holly, buckwheat, everlasting, sage, and amole, or soap plant, and up on the mountain sides in magnificently tall yuccas.

Lifting the eyes to those mountain sides, one's thought strayed back to the brief, exquisite time when the wild lilac powdered the chaparral with its delicate lavendar bloom. Now the dull brown-green of the slopes was lighted only with the brave scarlet of the larkspur, aside from the scattered yucca.

We found lupines in here, light blue in shade and sweet as orange blossoms in scent. I had never dreamed that a lupine could lead a life such as would develop a fragrance like that—all the concentrated essences of summer in one straggling, imperfect stalk, like attar of roses in a bottle with an advertisement blown in the glass. I am not over-fond of lupines. Perhaps their relation to lupus, the wolf, has prejudiced me against them. But I bent my face to these with an actual adoration. And the bees, for commercial or sentimental reasons, I don't know which, appeared to share my feeling.

After a while we encountered a tiger lily or two—just enough to prove that our confidence in the canyon had not been misplaced. Chloe says they should be called leopard lilies, and it is true that the cardinal velvet markings on their orange silk petals—petals that curve away from the long straight stamens, like soft ears with a bit of temper in their backward curl—are spots rather than stripes. Each had chosen the loveliest lair for itself, in a thicket of brakes, or under sheltering maple, bay, and willow leaves, and each was lovely in its curious tawny way. But we left the capture of our quarry until homeward bound.

We reached a wide place, and turning a bend came face to face with a ranger's cabin. It was hospitably labelled "Havalook Inn," but the invitation was belied by the padlock on the door. The only place we could possibly have looked in was through a joint of rusty stovepipe which projected from a side wall at the rakish angle of a cob pipe in the mouth of an Irishman. Though why an Irishman, I am not just clear when I pause to think about it. It must be because it gave the whole cabin an air of looking us over quizzically, tramping clothes and all, and saying:

"Gorra, but yer the swate-lookin' outfit!"

There was an atmosphere of long desertion all about. The next thing we knew the stream had deserted, disappeared, gone dry. There had been a good spring at the ranger's camp, but it evidently did not flow both ways. We pressed on, however, in the hope, almost the conviction, of finding another stream. After a quarter of a mile or so we noted wet and mossy spots in the rocky bed and a return of the water grasses, and soon, surely enough, here was a little brown brook making faint music below a screen of vines and brakes. Tender green mint began to cover the whole bed of the canyon, and our feet, crushing it involuntarily, released its imprisoned scent until the entire place was suggestive of—yes—chewing gum and juleps.

Broken rock began to make the way rough—such rock as accumulates at the mouth of a mine. Next we were accosted by a written notice nailed to a tree, which read:

"This claim don't amount to a BLANK, but it belongs to Bill D—— just the same. Beware."

I print an emasculated substitute for one of the original words, which was picturesque, but rather too virile and bold for ladylike quotation.

We respected Bill's wishes, however, delicately expressed as they were. But as we moved on up the ferny, flowery trail I couldn't help reflecting that the "darlingest canyon" seemed to have formed some startling associations.

More tiger lilies rewarded our searching eyes, some in clusters of three and four, more on single graceful stalks. And the dashing larkspur continued to make bright color by the path.

We must have gone nearly three miles along the trail when we were warm enough, hungry enough, and weary enough to halt for the rest of the day. We were in a beautiful glade of bay trees and aspens, with the leafy ground grown thick with sweeping brakes. Tiger lilies were bending over the clear quiet water—primping, I don't doubt, feminine things that they are.

We chose our camp ground under the aspens on the far side of the brook, and the coffee pot was promptly put to boil on the tiny alcohol stove. We wanted a camp fire, but it was against the law in here, and even the Newspaper Man has a conscience—strange but true.

The final touch to our luncheon was poetic and delightful. It was strawberries. There is always more or less poetry in a strawberry, but when it is eaten out of doors, after being rinsed in a running stream, dipped in sugar, and carried direct from fingers to lips, it approaches that ambrosial fare supposed to be known only in the famous old resort of Olympus. Perhaps it is better. Sometimes I have my skeptical questionings as to whether ambrosia is up to its advertisements, anyway.

It was most easeful and pleasant to rest upon the brown mold and look up through the fluttering aspen leaves, so silver-white on the underside, so glistening green on top. I am not absolutely certain that they were aspen leaves, but they were some variety of poplar, and aspen sounds peculiarly attractive. The sky beyond was softly azure, not the burning turquoise of a clearer, hotter day.

We read aloud, a whimsical, tender little tale from a magazine. We had some high-brow literature along with us, but somehow failed to get around to it. There are days when the spirit insists upon loafing, along with the body. And blessed be that companion who does not compel one to think Carlyle when one wants to idle, to fool, to dream—Eleanor Hallowell Abbott!

And presently it was 5 o'clock. Five o'clock, and the homeward car five miles away! We proceeded down the canyon in the lovely twilight, all hands on the alert for tiger lilies. The Newspaper Man went ahead with his clasp knife open and warily gathered in the prey, which Chloe and I divided amicably between us. We added the flaring larkspur, too, on its giant stalks, a few Woodwardia, maidenhair ferns, and brakes. Some of our lily stems were four and five feet long, and the fragile beauties were not easy to transport through the tangling growths of the trail. The willows and maples were kind enough, but the vicious way the scrub oak harassed us was enough to justify bitter language. It gave us beheaded blossoms to mourn over, as well as broken, shredded petals. The crisp delicacy of tiger lilies was not made with a view to roughing it.

We added mariposas, lupines, and penstemon to our bouquets as we came to the open places, and my arms ached with the burden of bloom they bore. My nosegay was as tall as I was. The flaming larkspur combined with the orange lilies made a gorgeous effect, and I kept the lavenders and pale yellows in the other hand. The cool odor of mint rose with the freshness of twilight fragrances around us, and the dusk was vocal with the soft twitter of nest-seeking birds.

It was 7 o'clock when we reached the lower canyon, and an evening mist had softened the mountain peaks to the dreamy blue of a milk opal. We missed the car just forty minutes later, and waited over an hour for the next one, while the ferns and lupines we had carried from the hills filled the quiet air of the outdoor waiting station with magic perfume.

Nine-thirty found us safely in Los Angeles. We looked like a torchlight procession as we moved across Third street. The Newspaper Man carried the tallest bouquet, and was the "cynosure of neighboring eyes."

"Wild columbines!" we heard one woman exclaim as we passed.

"Where did you get that larkspur?" queried an elderly party in awestruck tones when we halted for a moment.

"I never realized before what a classy individual I am!" said the Newspaper Man, beaming back cordially at all who stared in his direction.

Everybody looked and looked, then turned around to look again. We didn't need a calliope to make us feel like the animal division in a circus parade. The only thing we could have desired was a placard reading:

THE KHAKI COMPANY.
Presenting Some of the Wildest Tiger Lilies in Captivity.

There was a wistful look in the eyes of some of the observers, as if our ferns and flowers brought memories to them of other hills than those of California, and of half-forgotten junkets after other flowers. Particularly was this true of the man who asked about the larkspur. One could read a whole story in the pathetic eagerness of his face. Other looks were merely curious, as if the sight of the tawny lilies recalled William Blake's

"Tiger! Tiger! Burning bright
In the forest of the night."

Few of the glances were quite indifferent.

Take it all together, there was something of a stir that night on Third street when the procession went by, and even the white lights of Broadway gained a momentarily greater brilliance and warmth from the glow of the scarlet and orange torches of the mountains.

WORLD'S GREATEST LINER.

[London Express:] Work has been proceeding for the last twelve months at the Vulcan Shipbuilding Yard at Stettin on a new vessel for the Hamburg-American Line, which is to eclipse all previous records of ocean greyhounds for size and splendor. The new boat is to be named the Imperator, and will be run in the Atlantic service. It is to be larger than any craft yet afloat.

In her present condition on the slips at Stettin she presents a wonderful spectacle, appearing something like the skeleton of an eleven-storied skyscraper in course of construction. She stands 100 feet high, is nearly 90 feet in the beam, and has a length of 710 feet. Her displacement will be 50,000 tons, and she will contain accommodation for 5000 passengers.

In her present condition, without engines or boilers, she weighs more than a fully-armed battleship. Her interior furnishings and decorations are planned on the most lavish scale, and she will in every way merit the description of a floating town.

In the Berlin offices of the Hamburg-American Line there is at present on exhibition a marvelous model of the Imperator as she will appear when finished. The model is complete down to the smallest details, both external and internal, and at night, when each of the thousands of tiny portholes is lit by electric light, presents a particularly charming sight.

LORD AVEBURY'S PET WASP.

[London Daily Chronicle:] The wasp is becoming a nuisance, and there are few who would choose a wasp as a companion. But Lord Avebury, who was Sir John Lubbock, is among the few. Some years ago he captured a wasp in the Pyrenees and he kept her for nine months. "I had no difficulty," he writes, "in inducing her to feed on my hand; but at first she was shy and nervous. She kept her sting in constant readiness, and once or twice in the train, when the railway officials came for tickets and I was compelled to hurry her back into her bottle, she stung me slightly. I think, however, entirely from fright. Gradually she became quite used to me, and when I took her on my hand apparently expected to be fed. She even allowed me to stroke her without any appearance of fear, and for some months I never saw her sting." The wasp ultimately succumbed to the rigor of an English February, "and she now occupies a place in the British Museum."

REMINISCENCES OF BOYHOOD DAYS AT MME. MODJESKA'S HOME.

By Everett Carroll Maxwell.

A WISE philosopher once said that if a man can write a better book, preach a better sermon, or create a better mouse trap than his neighbor, though he build his house in a forest the world will make a beaten path to his door. In one way this is a very trite utterance; in another its author may be credited with the discovery of a truth. Be that as it may, I choose it for the simple reason that I know of no other celebrity, past or present, who proved the utter faithfulness of this statement as completely as did the late Mme. Helena Modjeska.

I could, were argument necessary, cite many cases where celebrated artists, musicians, and men of letters have set up their household gods in the silent places the better to harken to the voice of the muses, and, despite barriers in the way, the public have acquainted themselves with every particular of their habitation and routine of daily existence. I think, however, that all who read this article and are in any way familiar with the facts of the case will agree with me that "Arden" is one of the most isolated and inaccessible regions in Southern California and that more tourists have found their way to its gates each year than to any other spot of a like character in America.

Those who best knew Madame Modjeska can best understand her specific reason for choosing the location which she did for her "rest ranch," and it is not my intention at this time to enter into a discussion upon her claim to artistic greatness or international fame. What her life has meant to the moral and intellectual uplift of millions of ambitious women on two continents or the value of the legacy she has bestowed upon the art to which she devoted her best strength, we in our feeble time can scarcely appreciate. It is a seed grain that future generations will see ripen into golden fruit.

Nor is it my purpose at this time to attempt to add a laurel to the perfect chaplet which pressed, alas, too heavily upon Modjeska's brow during her lifetime and wreathes her memory as a fragrance since her death, but simply to set forth a few commonplace incidents of the home life of Mrs. Bozenta the woman, rather than Helena Modjeska the actress, as I caught them in fleeting glimpses as a child. They may be of passing interest to those who knew her only as a public property.

When a mere lad just entering my teens, coming from a far eastern home to experience the novelty of ranch life in Southern California, I found myself in close proximity to the storied Santiago Canyon. What a bonanza for a small boy! Here were new worlds to conquer. Under its spreading century-old oaks and gnarled aliso trees I romped with Pan. With bowie knife and pistol I explored "Robbers' Caves," famous for the part they played in the early history of the State. I stormed "Man-Cow Rock" and discovered where the silver trout hid under cool leaves. Sometimes I would fish for these, but oftener would put them to rout by diving into their midst.

One day in early summer, after following the windings of the stream far into the cool, quiet depths of the canyon, I discovered a tiny cabin, set well back from the road. It had evidently been a beekeeper's home, but was now silent and deserted. Henceforth it should be mine until some one disputed my claim, which eventually transpired. But during my possession other important events were to take place.

A few days later as I trudged down the dusty, rocky road returning from a search for "prickly pears" and was about to crawl under a gate which marked the entrance to some private domain, I saw a carriage approaching. The driver stopped the horses and was about to alight when a wonderful voice said: "Little boy, won't you please open the gate for us?" I looked up into the most remarkable eyes I had ever seen, and in the beam of a smile as rare as California sunlight I managed to obey. The vehicle disappeared in a cloud of dust, and that evening the keeper at Orange County Park at the canyon entrance told me that Madame Modjeska had arrived home, which meant little or nothing to me.

Mid-afternoon a week later found me in a remote part of the canyon on a "bear hunt." From a hilltop that I had mounted for a view of what lay beyond, I was astounded to find myself looking down upon the roofs of a rambling white bungalow nestling in a great park of giant live oaks. About it were lawns, gardens, stables, and rustic arbors. I had neighbors! and without a moment's hesitation I set out to call upon them. In due time I came to a fence, which I climbed, and soon I was in close proximity to the house. It was then I heard the sound of a voice, low, vibrant, mellow, that issued from an open casement. I listened and its utterances were so strange to me that I retraced my steps in awed silence. I have since heard that same voice repeat those same lines, but the magic [illegible] bowed between us.

MME. MODJESKA BY THE FOUNTAIN AT ARDEN.

This was my first visit to "The Forest of Arden," but it was by no means my last. In a few days I knew Oliver, the colored cook; Sport, the dog, and was upon friendly terms with the Spanish and Russian servants. "Arden" charmed me. It was like a dream world peopled with fairy princes and ruled by a real queen. For such Modjeska always was, a real queen moving with dignity and grace and commanding her household with gentle power. She liked children, fortunately for me. She also liked things boys liked—dogs, horses, bold bad robbers, and, most of all, the canyon, big, silent, deep, full of mystery.

I often went over early in the morning, and, wriggling under the white gate, ensconced myself quietly on a big rock under a spreading oak and beheld Rosalind wander at will in Arden. Sometimes she read whole scenes from favorite plays, sometimes she would garden, singing as she worked, but oftenest she just walked, head thrown back and eyes almost closed. Little did I know then that I was spying upon a great soul as it roved the heights with the masters.

Modjeska's home life was wonderfully simple and very beautiful. She dressed plainly, took a lively interest in the work upon the ranch, especially the construction of a great dam which was to horde its precious water supply, and all the little things of daily occurrence. She sewed a great deal and was always busy upon some dainty article for a friend, or a scrapbook for her little grandson. With her Polish maid she designed and executed many of her most beautiful stage costumes. This was not merely for the sake of economy, but because when this great actress set her mind to work upon a famous heroine whose character she was about to assume she drew a complete and perfect mental picture of the individual even to the cut and color of her gowns. Hence it was much more simple for Modjeska's deft fingers to fashion these elaborate wardrobes which she saw in every detail than it would have been to have made her gown builders see them clearly enough to turn them out satisfactorily. I may add that in studying a new role, if Modjeska were unable to "see the character" from tip to toe, she refused to play the part.

I shall never forget the day her wardrobe was unpacked and hung out to air. Such a marvelous array of dazzling splendid apparel! I danced callouses on both my bare feet from sheer delight.

Those who have visited "Arden" within the last eight or ten years must have a very imperfect impression of what it was like fifteen years ago. For several years preceding Modjeska's retirement from the stage she was constantly touring Europe and America in Shakespearean repertoire. Following her return from her Polish tour "Arden" was sold to a Chicago syndicate, and Modjeska made her home at the magnificent [illegible]mand mansion at Tustin. Of late years I am told that sheep and cattle wander at will over the rolling lawns and hunting parties make merry in the chapel-like library which in the days of yore was the holy of holies of the muse of art.

As I remember "Arden," its lawns were like emerald velvet. The white gravel walks wound and twisted between low hedges of flowering shrubs and were bordered by banks of multi-tinted flowers. Great circular beds of choice plants filled each sunlit opening between the far-spreading live oaks, rustic seats, vine-hung arbors, and long trellises screened the dwellers in "Arden" from the eyes of the cravenous tourist. Oh, the tales I could tell about these tourists at "Arden!" Their vandalism would make a long story and a shameful one. Perhaps sometime I may, but not now. Rather let us deal only with Rosalind and try to forget how many Touchstones and Audreys there are in the world.

The fountain with its wide basin was a delight. Large gold fish glided about among rare aquatic plants, and one of Modjeska's most charming "at home" photographs was posed seated on the rim of this basin gazing into its shadowy depths. The well was a unique feature of the place. It was of the windlass-and-bucket type under a vine-covered well-house. As I look over a kodak album to refresh my memory with details, I find a picture made when I was a trespasser in "Arden," showing Mr. Bozenta, as he preferred to be called, in overalls and sweater refreshing himself from the moss-grown bucket in true farmer fashion. Madame personally superintended the taking of the picture, laughing merrily the while.

I wish I might speak of a few of the rare art treasures the house contained; of the shadowy music-room, the vaulted library, the great guest hall, but space forbids.

During the summer of which I write the ranch folk and neighbors of Modjeska, for such every one for miles around claimed to be, gave a fete in her honor at Orange County Park. The country folk drove up in a long motley procession, men, women, children, and dogs. A rustic bower had been erected and here Modjeska, seated in a gilded chair canopied with wild flowers and ferns, reviewed the sports and awarded prizes to the stalwart swains who won victory. They crowned her queen with a wreath of mountain laurel, which I happen to know she treasured for many a day.

I might tell of tramps into the woods, of tramps with Sport, of grand guests who came to Arden, of the afternoon coffee hour on the "west veranda," of visits to Judge Pleasant's ranch, clam bakes at Laguna and La Jolla, lawn fetes for charity at Tustin and Santa Ana, but space forbids.

I haven't visited "The Forest of Arden" for many years, nor do I ever wish to do so again, for the dim aisles of age-old oaks and giant alisos would sigh too heavily for Rosalind, and Arden could never be Arden without Modjeska.

The Silent Photographer.

HE CAUSED HARRIMAN TO BUILD A $2,000,000 RAILROAD.

By Richard Spillane.

THERE rolled into the little town of Monida, on the Oregon Short Line, one day in 1907, a special train that bore that great star of the transportation world, Edward H. Harriman. The overlord of the Union Pacific had been on a tour of the lines whose destiny he controlled, and to round out his journey had decided on a trip to that wonderland of the nation, the Yellowstone National Park.

In those days the Northern Pacific commanded the only railroad entrance to the park. From the Northern Pacific station at Gardiner, Mont., it is only five miles to Mammoth Hot Springs, and through this Gardiner gateway poured the thousands who flocked each summer from the far East, the West and the South to see the marvels of nature in that land of innumerable geysers, canyons, boiling springs, waterfalls, rapids, towering peaks and marvelously-colored lakes, pools and streams. Mr. Harriman might have had his special train hauled over the Northern Pacific to Gardiner, and he and his party entered the park by that route, but Mr. Harriman had no love for James J. Hill or the Northern Pacific, so he went to Monida. From Monida it is approximately seventy miles to the western boundary of the park—a two-day journey by stage—and this was the nearest point on the Oregon Short Line to the Yellowstone country.

Mr. Harriman asked Julius Kruttschnitt, vice-president of the Union Pacific, to accompany him in a tour of the park, but Mr. Kruttschnitt, who is big and heavy, begged to be excused. His private car was much more comfortable and, besides, he could not afford to be out of telegraph touch with the world in general and the Union Pacific system in particular, so long. Mr. Harriman asked W. H. Bancroft, vice-president of the Oregon Short Line. Mr. Bancroft also had urgent reasons for remaining at Monida.

The boss of the M.-Y. stage line, F. Jay Haynes, was detailed to act as escort for the visitors. M.-Y. stands for Monida-Yellowstone. Haynes looked at Harriman and Harriman looked at Haynes. Harriman was of the East, Haynes of the West. To Haynes every one from the East was a dude. If he thought Harriman was a dude he did not say so. Certainly there was nothing dudish about that slender little man, who was the most potent force in the railroad empire. Mr. Harriman disliked talkative people. He did his own thinking. When he wanted information he asked for it. He desired to be answered briefly and to the point. Nervous, high-strung and irritable, he became incensed when persons wasted his time with unsought advice, long-winded explanations or arguments. He was too busy a man and his brain worked too rapidly for the ordinary run of people. He worked eighteen hours a day and then begrudged the few hours he gave to recreation and sleep. Work was his passion.

Haynes and Harriman drove out of Monida together. As Haynes guided the horses over mile after mile of the mountain road Harriman sat and watched the scenery. Probably he was busy with his ever-present problems, but after a time the grandeur of the country through which he was passing began to challenge his attention. Maybe, too, he was beginning to feel relief in knowing he was leaving behind the shackles of business and that for a few days at least he would be free from the cares of the world.

Haynes, who did the driving, said nothing, but looked steadily ahead. That was pleasing to Harriman. The mountain stillness was soothing to his strained nerves. He leaned back and breathed in the balsamic air and closed his tired eyes and had a sense of ease and rest he had not known for weeks. For two hours neither man spoke a word. Then Harriman, who was too nervous and restless to be still in body or mind long, asked a question of his guide. The answer was prompt, exact, concise. An hour later Harriman wanted another bit of information. He got it, but Haynes did not waste a word.

When the park was reached, Harriman had formed a high opinion of Haynes, and after they had been in the park a day or two this opinion was strengthened. Occasionally Mr. Harriman's mind would turn to some business matter and he would become deeply absorbed. The park and its wonders meant nothing to him then. When the abstraction was over he again would become highly interested in the things about him, whether geysers, [illegible] streams, majestic mountains, queer formations [illegible] earth, craters of extinct volcanoes or boiling pools [illegible] beauty of coloring.

There probably is no man who knows the Yellowstone better than F. Jay Haynes. From the days of the Nez Perces up to the present time he has been going up and down that broad territory picturing its wonders and its beauties. As a photographer he is in the front rank. There hardly is a geyser, a crag, a rapid, a waterfall, a rugged character or beauty, a bear, an elk, an antelope or a buffalo in all the park that he has not photographed. Some of his winter views, taken when the [illegible] locked, are marvels. The snowshoe is as familiar to him as the stage coach. Like men who have lived much in solitude he can be silent at long stretches, but he is by no means a silent person. He is a good judge of animals and of men.

[illegible], eager guide or driver would have made the trip a horror. Haynes suited the millionaire. Harriman wanted no information except what he asked for. Haynes never gave any except in answer to Harriman's questions. There was no restraint in the case of either man. Harriman was quick to discover what a fund of knowledge Haynes possessed and how keenly developed were his artistic and scientific sides for all the bluntness of his speech. There was a charm in the quaint, picturesque, but forceful manner in which Haynes said things that appealed strongly to Harriman. Every sentence seemed to fit just right.

Not only that, but there was character to everything he said and did. If he cussed it was in a way to make Mr. Harriman laugh heartily. If he was describing one of nature's strangest forms it was so plain and yet so comprehensive that it made a strong impression. He seemed to know every bear in the park, whether grizzly, cinnamon or black, and he knew its habits and its moods and its haunts. He had names for the deer and the elk. So, too, it was with every stage horse and every driver.

Harriman knew his companion was a stage owner, but he did not know the extent of his interests, for Haynes, in addition to his stage line and his photographic concessions in the park, is a third owner in the chain of great hotels and eating-houses and a third owner in the permanent camps that dot the park.

The circuit of the park is a five-day trip—160 miles by stage. It so happened that Mr. Harriman found only a small party at luncheon at the Fountain and only a small number of persons at Old Faithful Inn. There was a good-sized party one day's journey ahead, and a fair-sized party behind, but Harriman did not know this, and got his early impression of Yellowstone Park travel from his own observations. At night in Old Faithful Inn, after he and the small party at the hotel had seen Old Faithful spout once or twice, he remarked that the Northern Pacific was not likely to profit much on Yellowstone business. Then he got gay and drew Haynes out on stories of the West, and seemed to enjoy himself hugely. Persons who met Harriman for the first time that night got the idea that he was one of the most jovial and kindly of spirits.

Old Faithful Inn is a charming place. It is five stories high and is built of logs. In every detail the log-cabin idea is carried out except in regard to the beds. They are gilt, and they spoil the exquisite harmony of an otherwise perfect and novel establishment. Probably in all the great park there are no more remarkable geysers than the three close to the Inn. Old Faithful, the best-known and most inspiring of the three, is only a few hundred feet away. Every sixty-nine minutes it comes into action and sends a torrent of steam and boiling water seventy to 100 feet high. It never fails and is as regular as is the sun in rising. At night, with a searchlight playing on it, the spectacle is magnificent. The Giant, a little further away, is irregular. About once in seven or nine days it becomes active and for nearly an hour shoots its immense volume of vapor and water toward the sky. Its power is greater and its volume larger than Old Faithful, but it never can approach Old Faithful in popularity. The Castle, which gets its name from its castellated crater, comes into play by fits and starts, being comparatively mild for a week or more and then equaling or surpassing the Giant in the splendor and intensity of its outburst.

Yellowstone Lake did not interest Mr. Harriman much, but he lingered for hours at the canyon. The upper and the lower falls and the great gorge, with its bewilderment and riot of color made a deep impression on him. From the canyon he traveled to Mammoth Hot Springs, passed through the Golden Gate and the Silver Gate and then came upon the great terraces from which flow the springs that have given Mammoth its name. The hotel at Mammoth is not much to boast of in appearance or appointments, but Harriman gave little thought to the hotel or its furnishings. A materialist always and a transportation man to his finger tips, he gazed in surprise as stage after stage came in from Gardiner loaded with passengers. There were four-horse stages and six-horse stages, and as they came up to the hotel entrance and discharged their loads the master of the Union Pacific frowned.

"Who are all these people?" he inquired of Mr. Childe, the president of the hotel company.

"Our afternoon arrivals," was the reply.

Harriman walked up and down the hotel porch once or twice and then went to where Mr. Haynes was standing. "Haynes," he said, "we should have some of this business." Then and there he decided that the Union Pacific should build from the south and have an entrance to the park that would put it on as good, if not a better footing, than the Northern Pacific. Once he had come to that determination he was impatient for action. The park had no further attraction for him. He wanted to get back to his train at Monida to get in touch with Kruttschnitt, the road builder. He wanted to see all the surveys ever made of the country between the Union Pacific line, the Oregon Short Line and the park. There was an opportunity to bring business to the Union Pacific. That was enough to stir the imagination and stimulate the energies of Harriman. When Kruttschnitt and Harriman got together at Monida and Harriman told his chief aid of his determination, Kruttschnitt pointed out the heavy cost of building such a line in such a country and expressed a doubt as to its worth in a money way. The season in Yellowstone Park is only three months—from June 15 to September 15. The business in the first fifteen days and the last fifteen days is nothing to brag of. Only in July and August is travel heavy.

There was merit—a great deal of merit—in what Mr. Kruttschnitt contended, but that did not weigh with Mr. Harriman.

"Have you ever been through the park?" he asked.

"No," Mr. Kruttschnitt answered.

"Then you don't know as much as I do, for I have just been through it," said Mr. Harriman. That settled it.

Surveys had been made of the country to the west and southwest of the park in 1904 and 1905. Harriman examined them closely and decided on the Madison River route as the best. Harriman had so much respect for Haynes's knowledge of the country that he asked him to go over the surveys and report to Mr. Bancroft such suggestions as he had to offer.

There was a scarcity of labor when Harriman began building to the Yellowstone. His new line was to be from Pocatello to what is now the town of Yellowstone, right on the western boundary of the park. Other railroads were active in construction work and many irrigating projects were being pushed with vigor. To get men for the building of the new road the country for hundreds of miles south, west and north had to be scoured. In the spring of 1908 there were unusually heavy snowstorms. Next came a rainfall heavier than that section of the United States had known for many years.

The construction work was hampered seriously by slides, washouts and other difficulties, but the orders were to hurry, and hurry they did. To get laborers to the grading camps the Oregon Short Line kept a special coach on the trains between Ogden and Marysville all seasons, but even at that all the men wanted could not be obtained.

That bit of road from Pocatello to Yellowstone cost $2,000,000 to build. It traverses a strange land, a part of which is a great lava bed. When the first train over the new road was run to Yellowstone and passengers from the Union Pacific entered the National Park by a new gateway a message announcing the fact was sent to Harriman, but Harriman was dying. He did not know then, and he never did know, that his decision to build into the Yellowstone was based on an error. He died without knowing that the big crowd that climbed from the stages at Mammoth Hot Springs that day in 1907 was due to a tie-up on the Northern Pacific that delayed various trains and brought all their passengers in together.

There are men who thought Harriman blundered egregiously. They are not so sure of it now as they were last year, and much less so than they were the year before. The road that was built because a photographer remained silent and allowed Mr. Harriman to do his own thinking is adding materially to the number of persons visiting the Yellowstone. While not depriving the Northern Pacific of business it is making business of its own. Last year it carried 40 per cent. of all the persons who went to the National Park. Its business in June of this year was 138 per cent. greater than in June, 1910. Possibly E. H. Harriman, despite his mistake, saw further into the future than any of those about him in that Yellowstone trip of 1907.

COUNTING THE STARS.

[New York Sun:] A tremendous task, that of counting the stars up to the nineteenth magnitude, has been undertaken by the Dutch astronomer Prof. Kapteyn, who has collected all the material furnished by the most recent discoveries, notably those from the American observatories.

Stars of less size than the fourteenth magnitude are found in millions in the Milky Way, and the work of counting them from photographic plates can best be described as similar to counting blood corpuscles under a microscope. Prof. Kapteyn places the total at 842,000,000 stars, the average being 20,400 stars to the square degree of the heavens. He has further calculated that the total light emanating from all the stars is equal to 2384 times the luminosity of a star of the first magnitude.

According to the Dutch scientist the boundaries of the universe, as far as human science has been able to penetrate, extend to 32,000 light years.

CHANGE OF HABITS OF SEAGULLLS.

[Westminster Gazette:] It is reported that the habits of seagulls in some districts along the northeast coast of Scotland seem to be undergoing a remarkable change. The summer it has been noticed that these birds have built nests in the heather and bushes a few miles inland, a fact never observed before.

A disturbing feature of this invasion is that the birds in forsaking the sea have abandoned their exclusive fish diet and have taken to eating corn, thus adding another to the many feathered foes with which farmers have to contend.

FALL O' THE YEAR.

Silver and mauve of sea holly, foxgloves all purple and snow,
Bells blue as sea in the sunlight, daisies like stars in a row,
Phlox where the wind loves to linger with a soft little sound like rain—
These are my garden's glory at the fall o' the year again.

Rosemary's green and gray tangles, basil and balm and rue,
Thyme in soft cushions of purple, lavender's mists of blue;
Mignonette's russet and amber, lad's love and marjorlaine—
These make the sweet o' my garden at the fall o' the year again.

Hollyhocks splendid in satin, peach-hued and pink and pearl,
Fuchsias like eardrops for fairies a-swing to the wind's soft whirl,
Anemones curved like pale sea shells that cherish the waves' refrain—
'Mong them I roam ne'er rememb'ring the fall o' the year again.

A Ball of Twine.

THE LAST EFFORT OF A MAN WHO WAS A FAILURE.

By Alice V. Hall.

OLD FLETCHER sat on his porch steps, his thin, wry mouth worrying his long restless fingers, which were closed over the head of his cane.

Down in the arroyo the frogs croaked insistently. From the gray gloom of the distant city a wet fog insisted itself up the dry river bed into the very arms of the low, parched California hills.

A violent scratching from within against the shanty door, followed by a long-drawn luxurious howl and numerous snappily-ended yawns, made the old man smile. Then his face softened as a second more lugubrious howl followed. Slowly and painfully he got up, unlatched the door, reprimanded the frantic joy of the freed dog who bounded out at him, and sank into his former position.

Suddenly the dog's red hair bristled over his ungainly body. With a throaty growl he sprang off the steps and down the pathway to bark furiously at the man who seemed hurrying ahead of the dense incoming fog—a background that made his figure loom grotesquely, even threateningly.

"Friday!" Old Fletcher lifted his head and called raspingly. The dog crept yapping back to his master. There he crouched ready to leap at the stranger who steadily and rapidly advanced toward the shanty. The old man watched, too, his dull gray eyes devoid of interest.

Meanwhile the fog enfolded the stranger and hurried on ahead of him to blur the landscape with gigantic gray strokes. He stopped before the steps of the shanty, lifting his hat with a genial smile.

"Good evening," he said.

Old Fletcher's eyes concentrated to a pinpoint of light at the sound of the stranger's voice. Under his sallow, flabby skin crept a glow. Covertly he examined the speaker from beneath his overhanging brows. He saw a man, middle-aged, 50, perhaps, a little grayed about the temples, but erect in figure. Full of life—with an air of triumph. It was—it must be——!

"Can you tell me where Manuel Fletcher lives?" Again the assured major tones. This time he felt the stranger's black eyes sweep casually over him. He bowed beneath their careless scrutiny, and then followed their impatient plunge up the hillside in search of another dwelling.

It was—beyond a doubt—Dan Marks, fresh from Parisian triumphs—accepted everywhere with open arms. Dan of the everyday imagination, mediocre talent and extraordinary gift for work.

Old Fletcher shriveled within, dropped his eyes and bent still lower over his cane.

"I was told he lived on this side of the arroyo. It looked from the other side as if they pointed out this place. This nasty fog must have deceived me." The voice rang on impatiently, awaiting the old man's answer.

Old Fletcher muttered incoherently, swaying back and forth from side to side with his cane. An avalanche of repressed feeling bore down upon him. His old college chum and fellow-artist come to him from the darks of time and distance! Why not say: "Here—here am I." But no; that friend did not even recognize his old friend in this the tumbled-down body of a failure. A huskiness covered his tones, and he drawled slowly in the high falsetto voice of old age: "I ain't heard tell o' no sech body hereabouts. I reckon me and Friday hold down this mountain side."

The stranger's face fell. His black eyes clouded, and then suddenly scrutinized the old man, who puckered his face grotesquely, got up with many muttered curses and slow jerks and started for his doorway. "Wal, good night to you," he said.

Marks stood with vacant gaze, beating an unconscious tattoo on the spindling porch pillar. Finally two fingers groped for a card. "I'm sorry," he said. How like Marks's college voice! Genuine. Full of color. And how young prosperity had kept him!

"Perhaps if you ever run across him you'll give him this"—he laid the bit of pasteboard on the unpainted porch rail—"and tell him Marks tried to look him up. It's my first and probably my last trip to the Far West. I wanted so much to talk to him." He lifted his hat with his graceful, mechanical courtesy, and turned back the path he had so lately and hopefully traveled.

Old Fletcher turned, overcame an imperative instinct to call his friend back, grasp his hand, flood him with questions, bombard him with memories, and only repeated quaveringly: "Wal, I ain't heard tell o' no sech man." He groped, through a mist of tears, for his friend's card, and stood watching the energetic, retreating figure until it was swallowed by greedy grayness. When he entered his one room he seemed years older; his steps dragged, his eyes were glazed, and his body shook as with palsy. Friday whined sympathetically and licked at his master's heavy, square boots, one of which sent him howling into a corner.

Old Fletcher sank down into the big chair by his cot. A stupor seized him. Friday crept stealthily from the corner to his feet and lay with his melancholy, homely face between his paws, occasionally sniffing with upraised head at his unconscious master, while his tail beat a frantic, dust-raising tattoo on the floor.

A crowd of noisy boys went by, armed with air guns and "twenty-twos," returning from their squirrel hunting among the hills. They beat with their hands at the windows and banged at the door.

"Hi, there, old Satan! Skidoo!" Other voices took up the same cry, altered it or called it in different keys. Friday uttered his deep, throaty growl, but did not stir from his master's feet. A stone crashed through the window pane. The shattered glass and dull thud of the stone sent the dog across the room with fierce barks, but still the old man did not stir. His face was contorted. Bitter memories ate like an acid at his heart and mind. The boys vanished like young Indians, down the arroyo bank and up the other side.

Then a child went by crying. This time old Fletcher sat up and listened. The sobbing continued with deeply wrenched tears and breathy catches of voice. Suddenly without a knock the door knob turned and a dark-eyed little girl of 6 stood on the threshold. Her dirty little face was smeared by her tears, her dirty little hands clutched at a still dirtier little apron. Black unkempt curls floated about her head in silky beauty. Man and dog sat staring. She advanced into the room, her body shaken by her convulsive sobs.

"The b-b-oys r-r-ran away f-from me. I'm a-afraid t' go home."

Still old Fletcher silently stared, but Friday got up and crept bashfully near to distress, ready with the all-healing power of his tongue. The child's sobs stopped abruptly. She laughed a running breathy little child's laugh, caught up by sudden hiccoughs from her late distress.

"Wot's his name?" she inquired eagerly.

"Friday." Old Fletcher found his voice with difficulty.

"Jest like in Robinson Crusoe!"

"Yes." The old man spoke solemnly, with an amused and interested light brightening his gray eyes. "You see, I'm the wreck and wrecked one on this desert island. Friday"—the dog wagged his body with fierce energy at his master's voice—"strayed along just in time to pull me out of yonder river bed, which was quite a tidy little stream last winter. Hence his name."

The child considered him seriously for some seconds with round questioning eyes. Finally she smiled. "O' course you're only playin' make-believe, 'cause this ain't no island. It's jest a hill acrost from home."

"Home? Where is home?"

"Acrost there." A chubby finger pointed across the arroyo to the long brownish-red bungalow that nestled beneath the arms of fragrant sycamore trees. He did not often pass the place, but he remembered the long clean graveled walks with their edging of roses, and the bells beneath the eaves that tinkled out the wind's caprices.

The child came closer and stood leaning on the old man's knee. One chubby hand sent a warmth over his body that reached his heart. He considered her with embarrassment and a steady longing to take her up on his lap. But while he fought off his long reserve, she confidingly climbed his knee and settled herself comfortably in his arms. Her bright eyes wandered about the room. In one corner was a gasoline stove, near it a dry-goods box that had been converted into a cupboard. In the opposite corner was his cot, a table on which was an exquisite Cloisonne vase filled with Mariposa lilies, a Whistler etching and stray books taken from the well-filled bookcase that hung above the table. Nails had been driven into the walls. Some were piled with old clothes, and from others hung bits of landscapes, water scenes, forest interiors, and a rough sketch of Friday, very much alive, but slightly out of drawing. This last sketch the child found and designated delightedly with a smutty forefinger.

"It's Friday," she cried. "It's his picture. Did you make it?"

Again a glow crept under the dinginess of the old man's cheeks.

"Yes. I made it," he said laconically. He felt inward rage at his delight under the child's appreciation, but his restless old hand smoothed her black curls awkwardly, a half-shamed, half-tender smile making his mouth lovable. As he watched her, a bitter longing to end it all was lulled to sleep.

"I'm awful hungry," suddenly announced the small personage in his arms. "I wisht I could have a piece o' somethin'."

Outside some one whistled, a long, ringing sound caught up abruptly at the end by an indrawn breath. On the heels of the whistle came a man's big voice. "Be-tty," he called repeatedly.

The child slid from the old man's knee. "That's Dad," she said, "I'm Betty. But I'll come again," she reassured him. "Guess you're awful lonely with jest Friday." She held out one dirty warm little hand and caught at his bony fingers, and they went out together, Friday sniffing at their heels.

A great bulk of a man with a flaming red countenance stood helplessly searching the hills with his eyes. He turned toward the pathway leading to the shanty just as the three friends came out on to the porch.

"Betty!" he thundered in relieved wrath, and waddled up the pathway.

Undaunted by the hint of approaching trouble in her father's voice Betty precipitated herself upon him, clinging joyously to one mountainous leg. "I was afraid t' go home," she announced cheerily. "The boys ran away from me."

Her father disengaged her with some difficulty, his face empurpled by the necessary stooping for the task. He gripped her small hand firmly in his great, moist, flabby one. "Lord, what a dirty young 'un," he panted. Then he turned to the old man in the doorway. "Kid came in t' you, did she?" His shrewd black eyes gripped the old man's gray ones. "You're old Fletcher, ain't you?"

"So the boys call me."

"Not Manuel Fletcher, I reckon?"

The old man's eyes again concentrated to a pinpoint of light. He hesitated. "No," he said in a muffled voice; "Manuel Fletcher died years ago."

"Oh, so he was a sorta relation, then?"

"Yes," he answered huskily, "a sort of relation."

"Well, just asked 'cause a painter feller was a-askin' fur THAT feller. Said they was pals from the time they was kids. Said he was a deuced bright feller with a rippin' 'imagination.' He'd heard he lived [illegible] Didn't think it could be you, but I pointed [illegible] to him." He stooped with repeated [illegible] ered Betty into his ample fatherly embrace. "It's [illegible] fog this. Got t' get the kid home," he [illegible] ing down the pathway. "Come t' see us," he [illegible] over his shoulder. "If the kid likes you, you're the goods fur me." He stumbled painfully on, [illegible] each step, while Betty alternately put on and removed his fedora.

Old Fletcher smiled whimsically, and with Friday went back into the shanty.

Summer and autumn followed in rapid succession for old Fletcher. Betty had invaded his shanty, and had [illegible] sisted her small bright presence permanently into his highly-walled heart. There she now reigned supreme.

He had even sketched her elfin self, a marvelously live Betty, and given it to her to carry home to a pride-inflated dad, who framed it a foot deep in gilt and hung it in the best parlor.

But winter came on with its heavy rains, converting the dry river bed into an angry, self-important stream almost impossible to cross. The hills grew softly green with their new carpet, and the air fragrant with their new life. The separation from Betty was hard, and when the dismal winter nights came on, warm lights gleamed from the brown blur across the stream, and seemed to the old man a message from the heart of a child.

To compensate for the long days of waiting he had the joy of preparing for her birthday. For hours he pottered about among his books fingering first one old friend and then another. Each had its history. Finally he resolutely took out two, leaving an aching void in book shelf and heart, hazardously reached the [illegible] car that passed near Wallace's book store in the city beyond. There he parted with the books for a paltry sum, and came home with his precious toys and colored twine. The toys he stowed under his cot, but the twine he put eagerly on the table while he got his supper of boiled potatoes, coffee and bread. He hummed as he moved about, Friday beating a rhythmic accompaniment with his tail.

"Oho, Friday," he chuckled, the little supper over and the smoky lamp lit, "you'll see what your old master can do!"

Under his patient fingers a little doll hammock began to appear. "It's to be a work of art, Friday," he said, as he chose and rejected colors for his weaving. "The perfection of detail makes or unmakes a work of art, you know, my boy. Tomorrow she comes. Do you hear? tomorrow!" He laughed, and Friday barked joyously, then panted with lolling content.

Outside the arroyo roared. The steady downpour pattered against the pane. The old man stopped to listen. Friday, too, drew in his tongue and pricked up his ears with a quick bark.

"There, there, don't worry." The old man stroked the dog's head and patted his rough red hide. "Old [illegible] said she was to come to us tomorrow, even if the [illegible] tering old arroyo turned into a sea. Cheer up, my boy."

He continued his work silently for an hour.

"It's almost done," he said happily to the dog at his feet, straightening his aching old back for an instant. "Al-most. Just a little more green twine now to give it THE touch." He reached mechanically for the [illegible] Missing it, he raised the papers on the table. A [illegible] sensation dizzied him as he began to search more [illegible] estly, then feverishly, throwing books to right and left. He got down on his hands and knees, and groped under the table and chair. He lay flat and peered through the shadows under his cot. The twine was gone. [illegible] He got up, and then sat down again in stunned [illegible]

A flaunting red twine ball caught his eye. He picked it up dully and matched it against his work, then [illegible] it into a far corner.

"Perfection of detail makes or unmakes a work of art." A harsh laugh broke from him. Everything he [illegible] failed. It had been so all his life. The face of [illegible] Marks flashed as a comparison across his vision.

He covered his face with his hands and let [illegible] forward on the table. The clock near his ear [illegible] evenly, then chimed ten in cheerful tones. [illegible] raising his head, he reached out one hand for the [illegible] deningly precise record of time and dashed it [illegible] corner. Friday howled apprehensively.

Old Fletcher got up, laughing discordantly.

"Well, we'll see, old man." He took a worn [illegible] from its nail and searched for his battered [illegible] "We're not beaten yet." His lips looked hard, [illegible] steely.

He unlatched the door and the wind flung it [illegible] lamp flickered, flared up, and went out. The [illegible] gently and persistently. Friday sniffed silently at his master's hands.

"Go back, sir." Friday's tail dropped, but [illegible] His master's heavy boot kicked him through the [illegible] way. The door closed on his howls.

"Poor old fellow—good old Friday!" The man was sob[illegible] bing, leaning against the doorway. "But [illegible] have to make good all alone, old boy."

His boots sank deeply into the clay and [illegible] lifted them they seemed dead weights and [illegible] The frantic scratching and heartbreaking howls of Friday echoed in his ears. The rain beat down [illegible] but he welcomed its cool sweetness. He tried [illegible] to the arroyo, slipped and slid down it, [illegible] cautiously tried the first stone that gleamed [illegible] the rushing, black waters. Fifteen of these [illegible] stones! Then he stood on the opposite bank [illegible] stream. He muttered as he walked: [illegible] closed! But no. It's a drug store and [illegible] open."

The streets were deserted. He passed [illegible] little drug store had just closed. [illegible]

Andres the Yaqui.

[illegible] RETURN OF THE KNIFE HE HAD STOLEN FROM THE DON.

By Engene Boylan.

[illegible] was plainly the slip-slap of sandalled feet, close [illegible] me, but although I had paused to drop a cen[illegible] in the leprous-looking palm of a crouching old [illegible], the following footsteps sounded no nearer when [illegible] I resumed my leisurely walk. The sun was high [illegible], and lured by a narrow margin of shade, [illegible] close to the long, yellow plastered wall of [illegible] street, a wall so unbroken that it was difficult to [illegible] the residences as one passed. Once more I [illegible] time to glance through the lattice of a [illegible] window, attracted by a glimpse of tropical beauty [illegible] patio, that delightful indoor garden of a Mexican [illegible]. "What a land of natural luxury," I thought, as [illegible] on; but my reflections were broken by the con[illegible] scraping footsteps behind me. Suspecting a beg[illegible] I did not turn. Presently, however, I came to a [illegible] across from the American hotel, for my friend the [illegible] stood in its entrance. But as I stepped out [illegible] pavement the sandalled feet hastened to overtake [illegible] and I was called by anxious voice: "Senor!"

I turned and faced a tall Yaqui Indian, albeit a very [illegible]-appearing Yaqui, wearing the tight trousers [illegible] mozo. It was Andres, my unfaithful servant, [illegible] ungrateful disappearance had made me the butt [illegible] many jokes from my more experienced American [illegible]. But the man's embarrassment was now so in[illegible] that it was fairly contagious. I looked at him a [illegible] in silence, and then asked: "Why did you [illegible] my house?"

[illegible] had been looking at the ground, but now he [illegible] raised his eyes to meet mine. "It was the woman, [illegible]"

[illegible] asked where the woman was. He did not answer, [illegible] looked again downward; then drawing a long breath [illegible] depths of his healthy chest, he suddenly gazed up [illegible] at the sun, and with a smooth, quick move[illegible] of his long arm, crossed himself.

[illegible] occurred to me that even in the case of a normally [illegible] domesticated Yaqui Indian such matters do [illegible] of quizzing, so I tacked closer to what more [illegible] me. "Why did you not come back, then?"

[illegible] time he met me steadily: "Senor, I had great [illegible]"

[illegible]: "You should have felt the shame sooner." [illegible] that men of his breed can stand anything [illegible] a laugh bearing in it a note of derision. "It [illegible] woman, senor," he winced. "But always, senor, [illegible] the butcher knife. For her I forgot your kind[illegible] and your much to eat, but always, senor, I kept the [illegible], I have known many women."

[illegible] him sharply. For if allowed to tell his [illegible] in his present mood, he would, I knew, do [illegible] the brevity of a savage; and never another [illegible] the subject should I be able to get out of him. [illegible] to collect the bits of his tale while he [illegible] books, or clipped flowers in my patio, or mus[illegible] the parrot as it clung head downward upon [illegible]. Better still, we might listen of an evening [illegible], while Andres crouched patiently, await[illegible] to bring more ice for the pitcher or a box [illegible]. So decided, I shoved my ponderous door [illegible] hand and gave him an order as if there had [illegible] interruption in his employment. "Go hang my [illegible] in the portal," I said.

[illegible]," he answered simply, and departed.

[illegible] was still standing in the hotel en[illegible] having been an interested observer; why his in[illegible] had yet to learn, since he was one of the few to [illegible] not told my irritating experience with the [illegible] soon as I had joined him, however, he ex[illegible] own curiosity, and at the same time threw [illegible] sidelight upon the adventures of Andres, [illegible] the girl with whom Andres had so provokingly [illegible], as he referred to her in Spanish— [illegible] the butcher knife.

[illegible] have you owned that specimen?" my friend

[illegible] since about the first of the year," I [illegible] been 'off' for the past month. He had [illegible] little affair of the heart."

[illegible] out my way," said the ranchman; "kicked [illegible] of camino behind 'em. It was one noon. [illegible] after a stump puller, and the sun was [illegible] piled on to my cot under the ramada for a [illegible] wind there was sucked into the clearing— [illegible], when this peon and his muchacha [illegible] from nowhere you couldn't tell the [illegible] serape from her sky-blue rebozo. [illegible] and Eve in the junk trade. For a [illegible] your mozo had a frying pan, a cof[illegible] the brass nozzle of a garden hose, a green [illegible], the lower section of some pink-striped [illegible] a good States butcher knife. Of course I [illegible] he'd stole 'em from you, but first showin' [illegible] looked curious. They cared mucha for [illegible] would I let 'em fill up on my stock of [illegible] the green inkstand, and be blessed by [illegible] of God?

[illegible] I agreed, 'but I'll take the butcher knife

[illegible] hungry and dead willing. She was [illegible] ground, her hair hanging straight down [illegible] and she was using her big black eyes [illegible] in particular. 'Bueno,' she says. [illegible] was boss, up to date, and I could see [illegible] some cross-purposed, chasing love's [illegible] through twenty miles of mesquite. He looked at her sharp, stuck the knife back in his belt to stay there, and: 'No, senor,' says he emphatically.

"Well, we compromised on the coffee percolator. They put in most of the afternoon surrounding my grub, and finally hit the road again, just before dark, bound for Quila."

Three days followed my chance conversation with the ranchman; then came another very hot midday. Succumbing to the natural indolence of the country and to the fearful heat, I lounged in a steamer chair, under the wide, cream-hued arch of the portal. Heated atmosphere quivered in the close patio, where madly buzzing insects hovered over red and yellow blossoms. Andres, strangely enough, never slept in the daytime, but preferred to crouch near me, his long, thin, hard-muscled arms resting on his knees. But suddenly now he arose, and deliberately moved to a spot in the full glare of the sunshine. For some minutes I watched the perspiration covering his face. The corner of his mouth twitched. Then he asked a question:

"Senor, it is very hot in Yucatan—no?"

I said I had heard so.

Andres grunted conviction. "It is so hot, senor, that the skin peels from the face and the raw meat is seared black. It is so hot that no plants grow and the peon may eat only foul flesh that the buzzards drop upon him. There is no water, but——"

"Stop!" I commanded. "How can you utter such nonsense, when your wife, who was captured by the soldiers, is even now in Yucatan—if she is not dead. While you——"

"While I have already been dead," he interrupted. Unpoliteness with him was so unusual that I was surprised into silence. Andres suddenly bared his brown chest and pointed to a gunshot scar. "That was why they got her from me. My body died, but the rage in me would not die, and it brought my body back to life.

"Senor, I then knew no more of the world than the mountains where I had been born. When I could walk again, I went out to find my wife. Instead, I found the railroad and learned to work for the Americano. I learned also about long distance and the sea and ships. It was no use."

"How long ago was that?" I inquired.

"Senor, I do not know. I have been hungry a thousand times. It was well. For when I was hungry I thought only of much to eat, and when I had much to eat I thought only of hunger I had not. It was so until I came to your house. Here for so long a time I had food and more food, I forgot the time when I had been lean. I began to think as a young man thinks. I did not think much of my wife, because I did not then know it was hotter than the sun in Yucatan, and that in that place men and women cannot die. They are cursed by God, for the prayers of the priests, for the money of the soldiers." He was speaking now in a hard monotone, rocking slightly in the patch of glaring yellow light. In this pitiless sunshine his face looked tortuously drawn.

"Who told you these fearful tales of Yucatan?" I asked.

"The muchacha."

"You mean the one——?"

"Si, senor; the girl for whom I forgot your kindness and your much to eat.

"A day came when she and I were hungry and had walked far on the camino. All the things which I had taken from your house had been spent for food, all except the butcher knife and the pantalones pintados."

"The what?" I interrupted. "Oh, you mean my pink striped pajamas."

"Si, senor. The muchacho would have them to carry in the bundle on her head."

"But why did you not seek work?"

"In Quila there was none. In San Lorenzo the woman would not stop. Before I knew her, she had come from Santa Cruz. To Santa Cruz now I must go with her."

"Caramba!" I exclaimed. "You a brave Yaqui, and ruled by a mere muchacha!"

"It was that way, senor. I told her I was a Yaqui, and I should rather be in Yucatan, though a slave, with my wife, who was a Yaqui woman and fit for a Yaqui man.

"The woman was walking before me with the bundle on her head. She laughed, but for a league more she said nothing. It grew very hot, and I wondered that she could travel so fast. I wondered why she hurried to Santa Cruz. I wondered why I hurried after her. I said to myself there was no fool in all Mexico like me. I was filled with hate for myself, and when a man's hate is against himself he is quick to turn it against another.

"It was then, senor, that the muchacha, walking before me in the evil heat of the sun, told me about Yucatan."

"But how could she know?" I put in.

"Senor, she was a she-devil and the daughter of a she-devil. She knew of all places in the world that are worse than el infierno of which the padres tell.

"Far back in time, when I first left my home country to find my wife who had been stolen by the soldiers, I had walked, hungry, tired and hot, as I now walked while this devil muchacha spoke words that pained worse than the rifle ball. I was very hot and hungry, and my head was sick in the sun, and my thoughts were the same thoughts I had had when the hole in my breast was healing.

"And all the time the muchacha told how my wife must be a slave working for slaves in a place where there is no shade, and the sun never sets, and people cannot die.

"Senor, I am a Yaqui and I can bear pain, but when the woman had talked much, she laughed.

"Always, senor, I had kept the butcher knife in my belt. I knew she would not turn to see me, for the bundle on her head was very heavy and she walked straight. Besides, we were at the top of a hill where we could see the church tower of Santa Cruz. She laughed again, and with her hands began to braid the hair at her back. When she had drawn the braid over her shoulder I could see her bare neck. It was whiter than mine. It was whiter than my wife's. It had never been burned by the sun of Yucatan. I saw nothing else. My feet found the smooth track and moved faster. My hand found the knife in my belt. It is a good knife, senor. The handle is strong and it fills the palm. The blade is long and sharp and curved for the stroke.

"Senor, I had yet to go three strides, when a loud noise beside the camino made me jerk the knife to my hip. I have told you I was not seeing what passed beside us. And the muchacha had seen only the church tower of Santa Cruz.

"It was only a burro that brayed, an old burro, lean and dull-eyed. It was standing with its feet wide apart and its saddle was empty. Close by, in the shade of a big cardon, a little weak-limbed young man lay on the ground. His sombrero was over his face. But when he moved it away, and the woman saw, the bundle dropped from her head. 'It is Miguel!' she cried, and she ran toward him.

"The man stood up and pointed his machete at her. With the other hand he put his cigarette in his mouth and lighted a match. He looked not at her, but at me. 'Why did you bring back my woman?' he asked.

"It was then, senor, I knew why she had made me go with her from your house to Santa Cruz; for a woman may not walk alone on the camino and be safe.

"The muchacha laughed and looked at me like a cat. 'I had no burro to ride,' she said, 'so I had to come with that'—and she pointed her finger at me. 'Is it not a fine animal? It can go home now. Vamos! I have come back to you, Miguel.'

"'I do not want you,' said the man, 'I have another woman.' He walked toward the burro, but the bundle of the muchacha lay at his feet and he cut it open with a stroke of his machete. What fell out was no good to a man, except the pantolones pintados, that were yours, senor. I saw them first and caught them in my hand. In the other hand I still had the knife.

"'Give them to me,' said the young man, but his voice was not strong, and he could not hold his machete firm.

"The woman laughed again, but this time she laughed at him, instead of me. 'They are not for a goatherd like you,' she said. 'This man is a Yaqui chief. He is brave. He stole the pantalones pintados from the casa of the Americano. It is such that the gringo don wore at the baile grande.'

"Now, the man wore only the clothes of a very poor peon, and he looked at the pantalones, and his eyes were very large. 'The muchacha is my wife,' he said slowly, 'and with her I take all she brings.'

"'Is it so,' I asked, 'that you are willing to take her if you can take with her the pantalones pintados of the gringo don?'

"'Si, senor,' he said.

"'Bueno,' I answered. 'They are yours.'

"And that is why, senor, I come back to your kindness and your much to eat, and bring only the butcher knife."

Thus abruptly Andres concluded his confidence. His mouth, hard but curiously sensitive, drew to a firm line. He pressed both palms on the blisteringly hot cement walk of the patio, and turning his brown face upward, stared with hurt eyes at the sun.

"Andres," I said, so sharply that he sprang to his feet, once more the servant.

"Senor?" he answered, in the soft tongue which can be at once deferential and dignified.

"Andres," I repeated, in a more kindly tone, "the muchacha lied about the place where your wife has gone. It is not hot there. It is God's country."

POPE LEO XIII AND THE PIGEON.

[London Globe:]The illness of the Pope recalls a touching story which went the rounds at the time of the illness of Leo XIII. Every day at a certain hour a pigeon, after the manner of Noah's dove, used to come to the study of the pontiff, who, no matter what the business in hand was, would go to the bird and feed it. On the day that the Pope was seized with his fatal illness the pigeon came as usual, but found the window closed.

The bird flapped its wings against the pane and then struck the glass with its beak. The Pope heard it and ordered the window to be opened and his camerier to feed it. The bird would not eat, but perched itself on the dying pontiff's couch, and there demonstrated its delight at seeing its old friend and protector.

THE MINOR SONG.

Sing the song of the city!
Alone on the crowded street,
You watch the ever-changing throng,
Hear the tread of its hurrying feet;

And think that each separate unit
Of that comprehensive whole
Is an unknown power for good or ill,
A living human soul.

Forever coming and going,
On the current of life upborne,
Together they plan and labor,
The brain of it, and the brawn.

But the toil is never ended,
Nor ceaseth the tireless quest;
The sleepless city is seething
In a passion of unrest.

Sing the song of the city!
Unbroken now, and clear,
The burden of its low refrain
Comes to the listening ear.

On the French Frontier.

AN AMERICAN ANXIOUSLY WAITING FOR POSSIBLE WAR.

By Starling Heilig.

BELFORT (France) Aug. 30.—Through blistering hot days at the Grand Hotel of Belfort, waiting on an automobile repair, we feel this mysterious little war city strain in preparation for a possible conflict such as the world has not yet seen.

War with Germany may break out over-night; and this time Belfort has aeroplanes. Who can foresee the terrible surprises of war in the air? Hate and heroism of individual flying men will hurl down destruction on towns, camps and maneuvering bodies. Once started, who will stop the high-explosive guerrilla vengeance that flits like a bird? The prowess of single paladins has come back to war again—immensely against the invading nation.

A group of unmarried officers of Belfort citadel lunch twice a week at this hotel; and one who knows them has let out that one of the advantages of the Michelin Aero Target Prize will be to persuade the Germans that the French army is not already in full practice of dropping new projectiles which the arsenals are turning out secretly and wholesale.

Every one in Belfort knows that waiting aeroplanes are in the citadel—where they have cleared a space for landing and departure, tearing down two walls, as all can see. Also, two "private" aerodromes have gone up by magic in the outskirts—and who knows how many others on beyond? There is talk of 6000 new aeroplanes being furnished to the army alone, not to mention private patriots.

Belfort buzzes with aeroplane talk. Strung along the frontier, the "strong places" or "fortified camps" from Belfort, Toul and Verdun up to the Belgian border keep foreign tourists at a distance from their continual practice war of siege artillery and aeroplanes. We are traveling with a French adjutant of reserves, whose "route" is in his pocket and whose high-speed auto waits in Paris to transport etat-major chiefs. He may have to quit us, his guests, over-night; and we must look after his wife and the vacation baggage. Promising trip! Meanwhile we pass as French and keep our mouths shut.

Scouting With an Aeroplane.

Yesterday an aviation captain and lieutenant discovered six rtillery batteries after circling ten minutes. Belfort whispers of it. The general, an aviation fanatic, was suspected of favoring the flyers in their work of picking out the hidden pieces; so, in his absence, the artillery officers kept them occupied in conversation during two hours while six batteries out of nine were shifted to new places ter miles or so apart, according as accidents of the ground should offer. Then the chatting group innocently broke up, glancing at their watches: "Hello, it's late; what do you two do this afternoon—hunt those batteries we hid last night according to the general's orders?"

Off the flyers started. Only three batteries had been left in their original places—and these they discovered last! In ten minutes' circling they found the newly hidden six, dropping dummy projectiles within the damage circumference of four of them.

This is the unique strong place of Belfort, which the Germans could not take in 1870; so it was not included in the cession, and pushes out a small territory of its own into Alsace, where the names of towns and people are still French. It is the Belfort of Bartholdi's Lion, gigantic beast, wounded but unconquered, ramping defiant, carved from the living rock below the citadel. It is the Belfort of Mercie's "Quand Meme" statue, where the Alsatian girl picks the old-fashioned Lebel rifle from the hand of the dying infantryman. It is the Belfort that waits behind the statue of Joan of Arc brandishing her flag in the direction of Germany from the summit of the Ballon-d'Alsace, inaugurated as late as September, 1909.

Military Barracks

Franco-German frontier. Two French officers on left. Four Germans on right

You should see the garrisons of these war towns. We have been through both Toul and Verdun; but we have lived a week in Belfort. The passing regiments, at their exercises, move like machines, clank, clank, clank, clank, stern-faced, eyes straight, with nothing of the laughing insouciance of Paris. Brooding reserve weighs on the population. The only gay faces are those of the German tourists who swarm Belfort, seeking pleasure with a curious avidity—because it is France. There is a mournful kind of pleasure—a great garrison must have it—great second-class cafes, concerts and moving pictures in the open air outside two highly respectable cafes. At night their "terraces" are cool and crowded, the sidewalk overflowing with chairs and tables.

The Old Citadel.

But even in the strong places of the second line of defense—like Chalons, Chaumont or Besancon—well into the interior of France, have the same air of dry, grim, waiting, something tense that weighs upon French gaiety. They are none of them forts in the old sense, but "fortified camps" of great extent, protected by batteries hidden in grassy mounds, all round, on distant heights.

Here in Belfort, the citadel could be blown [illegible] without harming the defense. Its old masonry is [illegible] a historic relic, housing the central organization in time of peace. Great guns have their places behind the mounds on the bare rock. Even its wireless-telegraph masts are not essential; I know of three others in the town below. The cold-storage plant for the entire garrison's food is half-way down, completely outside the citadel, and all the larger barracks are in the unprotected lower town.

I say "unprotected;" one needs an automobile and a knowing citizen as guide to realize a "fortified camp" like Belfort. The town itself is inside the "camp;" and the citadel is inside the town. In the suburbs we strike a narrow-gauge railroad; and were we to follow it we would see the true outlines of the "camp." Now and then a train passes—strange "dinkey" locomotives hauling tented cars, cars full of great metal pots, and covered freight cars loaded with provisions. It is the strategic railway, whose irregular route connects all the outlying forts with each other and with the base of the high-perched citadel inside the town.

In half an hour's time, it can begin throwing continuous trainloads of infantry troops and portable artillery on any likely spot of the great circumference to meet a surprise of German troops advancing in the distance.

So with all the others along the frontier, up to the new ones on the Belgian border to meet a recently-constructed network of German railroads—each possible route for invading Germans is overlooked by such a "fortified camp." So much talk has been made about that probable attack through Belgium that the Belfort population is more than ever suspicious of a surprise across the low hills over which Joan d'Arc brandishes her flag defiantly.

The slower movements of a republic might easily give the Germans from twelve to eighteen hours' advantage. Many Parisians hold the discouraging thesis that the main bodies may arrive to meet the enemy well inside French territory. They do not believe that these "fortified camps" can check them long unaided. It is curious to note the very different spirit of Belfort.

In Belfort they are grim and strained; they are not hurrahing, but they are not frightened. And, little by little, two men I respect—one being a young officer—have let me see a queer confidence in the back of the Belfort brain.

The "Apthous Fever."

To begin with, these strong places of the frontier are not left to their own resources at this critical hour. It is official news that the annual grand maneuvers have been reduced to "a single army corps" on account of the "apthous fever" among horses and cattle. In reality it is to avoid the aggressive look of massing such large forces on the German border—where this single corps of 20,000 men can quite innocently maneuver round [illegible] as it will do from now on to September [illegible]. [illegible] forty miles from Belfort, the same distance from [illegible] in Germany, and sixty miles from Nancy by a direct railroad. Also, it happens that a second army corps of 20,000 men has been sent to the strong place of Besancon, not for maneuvers, but military practice. Besancon is thirty miles from Vesoul and thirty-[illegible] from Belfort. Moreover, every automobile [illegible] up from Grenoble, Chambery or Briancon from Mezieres, St. Menahould or Epinal, de- the towns are simply packed with reservists unities—all on account of the "apthous

The Mayflower Lady.

SHE MEETS WITH THE HERO OF HER TENDEREST DREAMS.

By Maud Palmer Hart.

STUART COLE strolled out of the billiard-room into the hall, where dancing was in progress. The affair (a post-lenten ball, to which he had escorted a debutante sister) was boring him exceedingly. He reflected that the music was too slow, that the flower-scented air was oppressive, that most of the men on the floor were awkward, and most of the women looked over-dressed and tired. Now these criticisms were entirely unjust, and only serve to show what an unamiable frame of mind Mr. Cole was in. For it was really a delightful company of young people, and as the evening was still young, they were dancing with grace and vim.

The music ceased, and the dancers, laughing and breathless, wandered slowly off to conservatory or balcony. Mr. Cole espied his sister in a distant corner and started toward her, hoping vainly that she might be ready to return home. But at the first step he stumbled over something small and hard, which he picked up and examined critically. It was a very simple little trinket, a pin. It had probably done service holding up some lady's sash or pinning up a bit of lace. It interested Cole, however, because it was shaped like an hepatica, and tinted in pale lavender and rose. It made him think of days long past, when he used to search the hillsides for simple blossoms just like this one; hepaticas—Mayflowers, he called them then. He wondered vaguely who its owner was, what lady would take so unpretentious a wild flower for her symbol. He slipped it carelessly into his pocket, then, thinking that he might be able to restore it to its owner, he took it out again, and pinned it into his coat.

"Perhaps I dropped it in the conservatory," said a girl's voice at his elbow.

"Shall I go and search for it there?" asked her escort.

"If you will be so kind, Mr. Montague. It is an inexpensive little pin, but I have had it a long time, and I should hate very much to lose it. It is the shape of a tiny Mayflower, and it has a diamond in the center. I hope you can find it."

"Mayflower—she called it a Mayflower, too!

"I will take you to Mrs. Delany first," came the man's voice, and they moved off.

Cole turned swiftly, and the cool, refreshing scent of Mayflowers assailed his nostrils. Half-way across the room was Mr. Montague, accompanied by a girl. Cole watched the flutter of her pale green draperies until she was lost in the crowd. Mr. Montague was a well-known fellow about town. Mrs. Delany, who had been referred to as the girl's chaperone, was a youthful matron at whose charming house Cole was a frequent and welcome visitor. But the identity of the girl herself was a mystery. Cole speculated a little as to who she might be. He was positive that he did not know her, but he acknowledged to himself that her voice was delightful—pleasant and unaffected. Moreover, the woody odor of Mayflowers was still in his memory. At all events it was clearly his duty to return the pin, and with this intention he began to seek Mrs. Delany.

He had not yet discovered her, however, when the music started again. It was a waltz, a fascinating thing, both wild and languorous. From balcony and conservatory and curtained cushioned ante-room the dancers drifted in. Seeing Mrs. Delany on the floor, Cole stepped out on a balcony for a quiet smoke, and found himself face to face with the "Mayflower Lady."

She had just risen from a low couch, drawn close to the rail, and was evidently about to return to the ballroom. Cole thought she made a delightful picture as she stood hesitating, one gloved hand on the rail. She was slim and straight and very young. There were Mayflowers in her dark hair, and in the bodice of her pale green gown. Their cool fragrance clung to her hair and skirts. Cole felt a childish desire to bury his face in her huge bouquet, and to touch—just to touch—her silken draperies and smooth, pink cheek.

"Will you dance, dear Mayflower Lady?" he asked, quite gently.

If she had giggled, if she had repulsed him, if she had even accepted him, Cole would have had an ideal shattered, and would have found himself bored once more. But she only gazed at him out of beautiful, puzzled hazel eyes, and said not a word.

"I had rather not know your name or tell you mine," he continued quietly, growing more and more amazed with himself with every word. "You will always be just the Mayflower Lady to me, whatever others may call you. Out of respect to the dictates of etiquette I will assure you that your chaperone, Mrs. Delany, approves of me, that I am past the freakish bounds of youth, and am certainly not in the habit of doing strange things like this."

The girl's eyes had been traveling downward from his face, and Cole could tell by the startled expression in her eyes when she recognized the pin. "I suppose," she said slowly, without smiling, "that you will think me strange to dance with you."

Cole parried. "Then you are intending to dance with me?"

"No," she answered, smiling now, "but if you like we will sit down here and talk."

So they seated themselves on the thickly-cushioned couch from which she had just risen, and they talked to each other in low tones. A young moon flooded them with mellow light, and from within came the dreamy music of a waltz.

The girl settled back among the silken cushions and regarded Cole meditatively. "Dear Poet," she began, without preamble, "will you listen to me patiently for a few minutes while I tell you a little story?"

"With all my heart," said Cole, "if you are in it."

She looked at him and smiled again. "Oh, I am the heroine," she assured him. "I will call myself by the name you gave me, the Mayflower Lady, and I will call you the Dear Poet. That's the name I have given you." She paused, then asked him suddenly: "Are you surprised to have me call you the Dear Poet?"

"I surely am," replied Cole, which was very true, since he had not put his name to anything more poetical than checks for many a long day.

The girl laughed softly. "My story will explain how I happened to recognize you."

"Recognize me?"

"Yes—as the Dear Poet."

Cole felt dazed, but he gently requested her to please hurry, as he was very impatient to hear it; so she began immediately. "Once upon a time there lived a child who loved Mayflowers. She loved them passionately, with all her heart and soul, better than any other flower. She happened to be rich, and owned whole hot houses full of roses and daffodils and orchids, but they had few charms for her. She loved the tender little pink and lavender Mayflowers, which herald spring. She used to search for them on the hills near her grandfather's farm; she used to wear them in her hair and about her little gown; and she used to place them in water before the portrait of her mother, who was dead. She was such an odd child that she used to grieve because no poets sang of these quaint blossoms, and she wished vainly that she were clever enough to sing of them herself."

"And you were the child," said Cole, interested in spite of himself.

"Yes, the Mayflower Child then," she replied, lifting her eyes from their contemplating of the blue distances. She continued in the same quiet tone. "You can imagine how happy and grateful the child felt when she found in a magazine one day some verses to the Mayflower. Although the poet was not a well-known one, the lines were undeniably beautiful, and the child loved them as soon as she read them. From that day to this she has never ceased to think about them and their writer, and in her mind she has always called him the Dear Poet."

To say that Cole was bewildered would be putting it mildly. She had called him the Dear Poet, but he had never written verses to the Mayflower (or any kind of verses, for that matter.) It was clear, however, that she thought he had, so he did not try to explain, for she was growing more adorable every minute.

"The little girl, as I have told you, was very happy and very grateful. She longed to write to him and thank him for the pleasure he had given her, but she was very, very shy, and could never bring herself to do it. So she ordered two pins made, dainty little pins shaped like Mayflowers, and tinted in lavender and green, with a diamond like a dewdrop in the center of each. One of the pins she kept herself and the other she sent to the Dear Poet with the request that he wear it always." There was a short pause, during which the Mayflower Lady looked at the moon and smiled to herself. "If he always wore his—and she always wore hers—they were bound to meet and recognize each other some day," she concluded.

Poor Cole. It would surely have been an awkward situation for the most tactful of men to meet. Obviously she fancied herself in love with the mysterious poet, and obviously he could not play the part of an imposter much longer. After a moment's swift thought, he took in his the slim little hand which rested on the rail. "Mayflower Lady," he said in a voice that was far from steady, "I'm not long-haired and I'm not soulful-eyed. I am fond of the moon—and the breeze—and—and—Mayflowers, but——"

She noticed the trouble in his voice. "You do not disappoint me," she said in a low voice that was dangerously kind.

There was only one thing to do, and he did it, with all the energy which he could summon. "Where is YOUR pin?" he asked, and at her dazed look repeated sharply: "Where is YOUR pin?"

She started. The waltz ceased at that moment, the young moon slipped behind a cloud, and she drew her hand away.

"Oh, I forgot about mine," she breathed unhappily after a tense interval, "I quite forgot about mine—and you found it——?"

"Yes, dear little Mayflower Lady. Oh, don't be angry with me! I don't know why I didn't tell you sooner. I only know I love you, I love you, and you are the first girl that ever heard me say those words."

The dance being over, people strolled out now and then, but as soon as they saw Cole and the Mayflower Lady, they smiled and went away. The Mayflower Lady had her head averted, and she did not say a word. Cole regarded her anxiously. After many aeons she turned her head. In the ball room the music broke forth again, and in the sky the young moon floated into sight. But the harmony was no sweeter, the moonshine no brighter than the smile of the Mayflower Lady as she said: "Shall we dance?"

Elvira Snow.

HOW HER SENSE OF NEATNESS WAS FINALLY CONQUERED.

By Harriet Crocker LeRoy.

ELVIRA SNOW went into her bedroom and took from its own particular hook the little old red shawl which she had worn for many years and which had been worn by her own mother for many years also. It was thin and faded, as a garment that has stood the test of more than forty years of actual service has a perfect right to be.

In places the fringe was thin and frayed, or gone entirely, worn away perhaps by Elvira Snow's own restless childish fingers when the preacher had been prosy and the sermon long, and the early spring beauty out of doors had called to her with its thousand scents and sounds. The little old shawl had been washed and pressed and mended a score of times, and if Elvira had been of a poetical turn she might have written a dozen sonnets upon the loved associations awakened by the little square of red.

Her mother had caught it up hastily and thrown it round her head and shoulders when some hurried summons from the neighborhood spoke urgently of birth or death. It had been worn on cold winter mornings when one's breath rose like vapor on the chilled air and mother in the kitchen mixed the buckwheat cakes for breakfast. It had gone to school and to church primly pinned under Elvira's little round chin, one corner hanging exactly in the center of Elvira's small back. Elvira loved the little shawl. She thought sometimes with dread of the inevitable day when her neat soul would submit no longer to a garment falling to decay.

Now she laid it carefully across her comfortable shoulders and returned to the rag-carpeted sitting-room where Jonathan Purvis sat beside the window in a large old-fashioned Boston rocker well padded and cushioned with turkey red calico.

"Pshaw! Elviry," exclaimed Jonathan as she sat down by the table and picked up her crochet work. "If you're cold, why in the world don't you light that fire you've had laid there in the fireplace ever since the year one? Women is, I must say, beyond my comprehension. You've got plenty of good dry wood out in the shed, and lots of chunks just the very checker for your fireplace, and there ain't a single good reason under the shining sun why you shouldn't touch a match to that little heap of shavings and kindlings that's been laid ready there for at least three years, and have a nice cheerful fire to set by on a day like this. If I hadn't known you, Elviry, ever since you and me were children and I hauled you to school and back on my bob sled, why, I'd say you was stingy; but I've known too many cases where your heart and hand was both ready to respond to some one's need, and so there's only one thing left to account for it."

Elvira Snow looked calmly at him through her glasses. "And what may that be, I should like to know, Jonathan Purvis?" she asked serenely.

Jonathan Purvis laughed explosively. He struck his broad knee a resounding whack with his big hearty hand and looked at Elvira. Then he sunk his voice to a dramatic tone and said: "If you'll excuse my strong language, Miss Snow, it's because you're so tarnation neat. There ain't no need in the world why anybody should be as fussy and particular and neat as you are. You want to light that fire and be comfortable, but your painfully neat soul won't stand for it. There'd be ashes, and maybe a little smoke and a little litter, and that would be the unpardonable sin, sure enough. I tell you, Elviry, it's a sin to be so eternally neat and clean as you are. There ain't a bit of sense in it, and you know it, and I know it, and you'd have been a happy wife and mother long ago if this perfect-housekeeping bee hadn't buzzed so loud in your ears that you couldn't listen to the whisper of love. I don't care if you get mad at me for the rest of your natural lifetime, Elviry Snow—I've begun now and I'm a-going to say what's on my mind. You can't deny a word I've said—not a word. If you wouldn't have had me you'd have taken up with some other feller years ago if you hadn't been afraid your perfect housekeeping would be upset by having a man around the house. You'd be afraid he'd pull the window shades up to the top of the window and leave 'em crooked, or pick up a book and not lay it down in just the same place, or get some dirt on the rag carpet when he filled the wood box, or forget once or twice a year to wipe off his feet before he came in. Land! what's the use of being so fearfully particular, I'd like to know? Now, there's Phebe Sheldon. Maybe she goes a little too far the other way, but, dog gone it, if a man wouldn't be more comfortable, any way!"

Elvira Snow went on with her crocheting. She was used to Jonathan Purvis's outspoken ways and did not resent them. If the truth was known, she rather enjoyed his masterful ways, as is the habit of womankind.

"Phebe Sheldon?" she cried. "Of all the slack and shiftless housekeepers I ever saw in my life! Phebe's good-natured, and has got an awful kind heart—everybody knows that—but such housekeeping I declare I never saw!"

Jonathan Purvis glanced quizzically at her out of the corner of his keen blue eye. "Well, maybe Phebe has got more out of life than you have, if she ain't a patch to you in the way of housekeeping. She's had two husbands who just worshiped the ground she walked on, in spite of her slack ways, and five children that would do anything in the world for their mother. She's had LOVE, and I tell you that's a whole lot in this life—it's everything. You're called the best housekeeper in town, and you well deserve the title, but hasn't your life felt kind of empty sometimes? Tell me, Elviry, as one soul to another. Haven't you never once been willing to change places with Phebe Sheldon when you've seen her smiling and happy with her skirt sagging down from her belt and her hat on crooked? The light of love in her eyes and the smile of love around her mouth?"

Elvira Snow laid her crochet work upon the snowy whiteness of her lace-trimmed apron—one of the half-dozen she kept for afternoon wear. "Jonathan Purvis," she said primly, "be you in love with Phebe Sheldon, I should like to know?"

Jonathan Purvis laughed. He laughed long and loud, with his head thrown back against the high back of the Boston rocker. "Me?" he cried. "Elviry, you know better. You know as well as I do that there's just one woman in the whole wide world for me, and she won't have me because she's too neat. She can't abide the thought of my tracking in on her clean floors, and scenting up her lace curtains with tobacco smoke, and leaving my newspaper on the floor, and getting things out of order generally. She likes me well enough, maybe, but the habits of a lifetime of neatness is too strong for her. She loves her methodical ways better than she loves the man who loves her. So, I suppose that's the way it'll end. The man an old bachelor, the woman an old maid—oh, er—excuse me, Elviry—that was a slip of the tongue, I guess, but we'll have to let it go. No, Elviry, there ain't a grain of sense in it, and you know it. You know 'way down deep in your heart that you want that fire lit this minute so's you can hang up that little old shawl on the hook it's hung on for forty years, and draw up to the fireplace and toast your toes, and be comfortable and happy. And you'd even get to like my tobacco smoke if you'd just let yourself try. And you'd let Towser in the house, poor old dog, even if he did scratch a flea now and then, or maybe shake himself. You'd let your supper dishes set overnight, too, once in a while, when you're dressed up or tired or got company or something——"

Elvira interrupted him. "Jonathan Purvis!" she cried. "Leave my supper dishes? Never, never in this world! S'posin' I should up and die in the night, and the neighbors would come in and see 'em in the sink stacked up to be washed—and me lying there helpless and dead!"

Jonathan laughed unfeelingly. "That's just it, Elviry," he cried. "You CAN'T change. It's too late, and I'm a goose to waste my valuable breath the way I do. S'posin' you did die in the night? Let 'em talk. And let 'em take hold and do the dishes. You wouldn't see 'em or hear 'em. Give 'em a nine days' wonder to talk about, poor women creeturs."

"Well, I must be going, I guess. You ain't mad at me, are you, Elviry, for speakin' so plain about what's keeping you and me apart when we ought to be together? Think of us two lonesome mortals, each setting by a lonely fireside (but I have a jolly good fire in my fireplace, instead of a dinky little oil heater like you light on company occasions.) Think of the company we could be to each other. The old cat on my lap, old Towser on the braided rug—right spang in the middle of it, of course—a nice fire crackling in the fireplace, the shades left up so our cheerful light could reach and cheer some cold tramp, maybe, passing by, me reading the county news out loud to you, you a-crocheting pretty little baby shoes to give away for Christmas—I tell you, Elviry, it ain't worth it! It ain't an even trade. Your pride in your reputation as a perfect housekeeper can't weigh even with the joy and satisfaction you'd find if you'd just forget and overlook a few things, and marry me."

Elvira Snow rolled her crochet work very neatly and pinned it with a pin. She laughed a little tremulously. "Seems to me you have a considerable good opinion of yourself and what you're offering me," she said, with an effort at sarcasm which seemed somehow to fail. "I guess I'll manage to keep right on living, even if I AM an old maid, as you called me a spell ago, and I guess you can do the same. If you find you can't stand the monotony of a bachelor's life no longer, maybe Phebe Sheldon would take pity on you. But if I was a man I don't believe I'd like to be any woman's third husband."

Jonathan was always, from a youngster, an audacious fellow. Now he laughed teasingly and put out a big stubby finger toward Elvira Snow's chin. "There, there, little girl," he said, "don't you feel bad about it. You know how much I think of you, and that's the reason I talk plain to you. But I guess we'll have to keep right on jogging along as we be now—just old friends and neighbors. I guess it ain't predestined for us to trot in double harness, so what's the use? When that little old red shawl of yours is clean gone, Elviry, I'm going to buy you a new one. You'll need it to keep your shoulders warm when you're setting by that cold, cheerless fireplace where the fire's been laid ready for the match for three years at least."

Jonathan gave his hostess an audacious pat upon the shawl-covered shoulder, and opened the door. "Well, I guess I'll be around next Thursday night, as usual, if Phebe Sheldon don't get me before then." And he departed with a chuckle, leaving Elvira Snow standing erect and indignant in the center of her well-ordered sitting-room.

She looked after him as he went down the path to the gate. His big-shouldered figure looked strong and rugged, and the iron-gray hair that shone beneath his soft felt hat somehow added to the dignity of his clean-shaven face with its boyish blue eyes.

Elvira, in spite of herself, felt her heart grow strangely warm and tender as she followed him with her eyes. When he took the blanket from his horse and lifted the hitching weight into the buggy, she watched him through her neat lace curtains with a happy sense of possession. This big, hearty man, well-to-do in this world's goods, was her's! At least, he always had been, but what if—what if—she recalled suddenly that Phebe Sheldon had an alluring [illegible] of her rosy cheeks, and a little trick of looking at a man with her merry brown eyes that had brought upon her the censure of more than one sewing-circle meeting. In the neighborhood parlance Phebe Sheldon, in spite of her well-known kindness of heart, was called a flirt, and more than one of the staid maids and matrons of the village were a little afraid of her.

Now Elvira Snow stood watching her lover drive away. On his way home he would have to pass the tidy yard and little home of Phebe Sheldon, and if the ruddy firelight should chance to be showing through her windows and her clear voice be heard singing to the accompaniment of her wheezy old organ, why—why—well, one could never tell what a widow might be able to do with a man.

She turned and looked thoughtfully at the little fire laid so neatly by her own hands three years ago when she had had the fireplace built in the well-furnished sitting-room. She had thought then that she would use it every evening when the air was cool, but month after month had gone by, and it had never burst into cheerful warmth and light.

"I do want to light it," she said to herself, drawing the little red shawl closer, "but somehow I can't do it. I'm almost ashamed of myself, and I almost wish I was a little bit more like Phebe Sheldon, in spite of her slack ways, but I guess I'm made this way and it's too late to be any different."

She laid her neatly-rolled crochet work in the right-hand corner of her upper bureau drawer, exchanged her white apron for a gingham one, clean and starched, washed her hands as though it were a religious rite, and went about getting her solitary supper. It had occurred to her to ask Jonathan Purvis to stay to supper, for she would have made some of her famous biscuits—[illegible] Phebe Sheldon ever making such biscuits as hers!—but somehow she couldn't invite him, after the plain talk he had given her. She tried to be angry with him, but she found herself smiling instead. Her heart was beating a little faster than usual, and her cheeks felt warm and red.

"Old goose!" she said aloud. "I never did see such a goose of a man. If it had been anybody else in the world I'd have shown him the door quick enough. Called me an old maid, did he? Compared me to Phebe Sheldon! Well, I guess if I ever was foolish enough to dream of having him, that time's past, and he can have Phebe Sheldon or any other widow if he can get 'em. Let Towser in the house on my nice clean carpet! Well, I guess not. Smoke up that nice new brick fireplace with a fire? Well, not if I know it. Get so I'd like his tobacco smoke? Well, of all the impudence! If that man thinks——"

She sat down presently to her lonely meal. She could hear Towser whining for his supper out in the woodshed. The cat sat demurely on the clean window sill as a spinster's cat should, nice and sleek and well-behaved. The dish water was heating in the shining teakettle.

"Of all the slack men folks I ever heard of! Wants me to let my supper dishes go till morning!" She got up suddenly and placed a chair opposite her own at the little table, then opened the kitchen door and invited old Towser to come in, much to his surprise.

"Good old Towser," she said, patting him kindly with the back of her hand. "Kitty, kitty, nice kitty," she called to the sleek gray cat on the window sill.

"I declare, it does seem a little more homelike now," she said to herself. "I wish I could just make myself light that fire tonight, but if that man should find it out—and he would—I'd never hear the last of it. But I will—yes. I'm going to—but it's enough to make poor mother turn in her grave—I'm going to, for the first time in my life—and the last, I guess—stack up my supper dishes and let 'em go till morning! And I'm going to light the oil heater and finish that continued love story I've been at so long, and I'll leave the window shades up, too, and if Towser wants to he can lay on the braided rug. My sakes! if I keep on I'll get to be as slack and shiftless as Phebe Sheldon herself!"

The next Thursday night, on his way to Elvira Snow's house, Jonathan Purvis, driving along in his buggy, met that lady on the road, her little red shawl [illegible] over her head. It was pinned neatly under her chin with a neat shining little safety pin, and her afternoon apron was still in place.

She greeted him with a smile that all at once set Jonathan's heart in tune with the world. Elvira, with the little shawl pinned under her chin, looked almost young.

"You go on and go in," she said. "I've got to run over to Mrs. Erskine's to get some yeast. I forgot everything about making some today, and she always keeps it on hand. I'll be right home, so you go on. The door's unlocked."

Jonathan Purvis drove on to the neat little white house. "Didn't she look pretty?" he asked himself. "Didn't it sound good for her to tell me to go on in and wait for her! I've a notion to—I declare, I believe I will—maybe that's what the girl needs—a little bossing by the sterner sex—maybe she's had her own way too long. Anyway, I believe I'll try it. If she shows me the door, I'll—well, tarnation take it all, anyway—I'll take my life in my hands and—light—that—fire!"

He tied his horse to the neatly-painted hitching post and hurried up to the walk to the immaculate front door. It seemed strange to go into the empty house, every article of which spoke of its absent mistress. He found himself walking on tiptoe, like a thief, but he laughed at it as he pulled the two big rockers up before the fireplace and let old Towser in from the woodshed.

Then he removed the screen from in front of the fireplace and scratched a match on his trousers, applied it to the neatly-laid pile of shavings and kindlings. As it began to blaze, he went to the woodshed and [illegible]

Unmasking a Rogue.

THE UNEXPECTED END OF A PLOT FOR A FORTUNE.

From London Tit-Bits.

THE girl who sat on one side of the fireplace was quite young, with sleek, brown hair plainly and neatly coiled behind her small, beautifully-shaped head. Her large, grave eyes and the almost solemn expression of her face reminded one of the Puritan maiden Evangeline. Her companion might also have come from the New England States—but of a later period. The healthily-tanned skin on his thin but firm cheeks, the lean, determined jaw, and the defiant carriage of his short-cropped head betokened the man who had fought his way through life—the pioneer and carver of his own fortune in a new land.

"You have no idea how thankful I am that you have returned, Frank," the girl said, softly. "I am only an adopted daughter, but I had grown to love your father as if I were really akin to him. It hurt me so to hear him asking for you, forgetting in his illness all that had happened in twelve long years."

The young man leaned forward, his arm on his knee. "Only an adopted daughter!" he said. "You have been more to him than I. Oh! I am not bitter about it; but a man whose father cursed him and left him to fight a false accusation alone—a son who also suffered imprisonment on a false charge and never again set eyes upon his home until his father lay dying—can hardly share the love and reverence for him that you bear."

Elsie Venner's eyes filled with tears. "I cannot understand it, Frank. To me he was always kind. I think there was a great deal of love for you in his heart, but you know how stern he always was—so proud of the integrity of his house. A little too careful of other people's opinions, and too quick to condemn. Ah! but if you had only seen the efforts he made to find you and the shock it was to him to hear of your death! If he had known that report was false and could have brought you back all his life might have been changed."

"Perhaps I should not have returned."

The girl smiled sadly. "You were given no chance of proving your innocence had been proved and how your father sought you. You were in South Africa, James said. You have told me nothing of that."

The man looked down into the fire. "My cousin will have told you all about it, no doubt. He knows nearly as much as I do"—with a faint smile.

"He told me very little indeed. It was South Africa, wasn't it?"

"Oh, yes, part of the time in the Cape Mounted Rifles; part was spent in Canada, part in London."

"It was so strange that James found you just in time to be with your father at the last."

He veiled with his hands the hard expression that crossed his face.

"It was peculiar," he admitted. "But then James has a knack of finding things at the right time. Luck, no doubt."

Elsie Venner watched him with a puzzled look. "I don't like you to speak like that. It makes me think——"

"Think what?" he asked.

"There is a portrait of you upstairs as you were when you went away. I have looked at it a great deal since you've been home again."

"Well. Is it like me?"

"Yes and no. There is a softer expression in the picture. A likeness—yes; but one would not have expected that youth of 18 to grow into such a determined, confident man in twelve years. And when you speak as you did just now, you look harder and—forgive me!—sterner than ever."

He flushed slightly. "It's the life," he answered, awkwardly. "A petted dog will get fierce and hard if he is turned out to fight for his food."

"I suppose it was the struggle that did it," the girl said wistfully.

The young man rose. "You see, I did right not to come back till—till James found me. I should have been quite out of place here."

"Oh no, no! Don't think I meant that," and Elsie rose impulsively with hand outstretched.

He took the hand and his face softened. "I know you are too good and sweet to hurt any one, and I know too well what I am, to be offended."

Before she could reply the door opened and an elderly man, dressed entirely in black, entered softly. For a moment he regarded the two gravely, and then, nodding to her companion, approached the girl.

"Frank and I have some business to talk over, Elsie, before the lawyer comes. May I take him away now?"

"Certainly; I'm just going."

When she was gone James Carr dropped into the chair she had vacated and lit a cigar.

"You're getting too friendly with that girl," he said.

The other seated himself also, dropped his elbows on his knees, and rested his chin on his upturned palms, but answered nothing, only fixed his steady eyes on Carr's face.

"Do you hear me?" the latter demanded.

"Yes, I heard you."

"You've been here a fortnight, and already you are more friendly with her than I who have known her for years."

The young man laughed quietly. "Isn't she almost—the adopted daughter of my father?"

"Your father?" Carr made a contemptuous gesture. "We have told every one so. I must keep up appearances, I suppose?"

"Not to that extent. Look here, Bradley——"

"Pardon me, hadn't you better call me Frank Grantham still?"

"We're alone and you'll be gone tomorrow. Every one will know then that you are not Frank Grantham."

The younger man smiled. "I wonder," he murmured.

Carr looked up sharply. "Now, I don't want any nonsense, Bradley. I thought you might cut up awkward, and I'm prepared for it."

"Are you?" was the cool reply. "If I told the truth about it you'd look bad. Taking advantage of a taxi driver's resemblance to a dead man, you palm him off as your uncle's son. You persuaded me that it was your desire to bring some happiness to a dying man; to ease the load of remorse he felt for a wrong done in the past. Thank heaven! that at least has been accomplished. Whatever evil springs from the impersonation, that may be written down as a good deed."

Carr twisted in his chair uneasily. "Of course, that was my object—but now he is dead."

"And you want to get rid of me. Quite so. If that had been your sole object I might have gone, but you told me a lie. This is the truth of it. My father—well, then, Joshua Grantham, if you like—had made a will in favor of Elsie Venner, who is no relation whatever. But when the missing son Frank appeared Joshua Grantham naturally revoked that will. It follows, does it not, that even if the supposed son is an impostor, still the will has been destroyed, and—you know you are the next of kin?"

Carr eased his collar with one finger and looked uncomfortable. "I did not think of that," he said, lamely.

The young man's lip curled. "You're a fearful liar," he retorted.

As if he welcomed the insult as an escape from his embarrassment, the other flared up. "How dare you speak to me like that! There must be an end to your insolence, and you must go."

"You forget, Cousin James. I am master here now."

Carr rose hurriedly and took a deep breath.

"That's it, is it? Now, listen to me, Bradley. You think you have me in a cleft stick, and that I shall have to give myself away when I expose you. My story will be perfectly clear. I shall say I was struck with your likeness to my cousin and the possibilities of a mistake having been made about Frank's death. I shall say, also, that when I appealed to you to tell me the truth, and foolishly told you of my uncle's illness and all that it meant, you said you were his son.

"Rather a clever perversion of the real facts. I am interested."

"But—follow my version and you will see it clears me. Since you have been here various events have raised doubts in my mind, and, after closer inquiry, which I should have made before had not the joy of finding one we all mourned so long blinded me, I was shocked at discovering you were after all an impostor."

The young man said nothing, but rose and threw open the window. "Pah! that's better," he exclaimed. "This room stifles me. Of all the infernal hypocrites I've ever had the luck to meet you are the worst. I've been through starvation times, and I've been tempted pretty often to knock down a man for the sake of a dinner; but even at the worst it has never occurred to me to rob a young girl of all that stands between her and the gutter."

Carr's face was a dull red; his heart thumped heavily; his hands were twitching. He was speechless, partly with rage, but principally from fear that a physical attack would follow the verbal onslaught, for his antagonist's hard gray eyes had a menace in them. But the latter controlled himself and sat down.

"I shall stay," he announced, decisively. "You can do what you like—cousin."

"It's madness!" stammered Carr. "You'll only be found out when inquiries are made. You can't hope to succeed. I admit it will be awkward for me, but I can explain on my side. Besides, think of the scandal of a scene, and the feelings of Elsie Venner——"

"Leave that out, or I'll break your neck."

"Be sensible, Bradley. I'll see the girl is all right. After all, I'm paying you well."

"I've not taken a penny from you yet."

"But you will; and you'll get nothing if you break our agreement. The lawyer will be here in a moment. Let it all go through, and clear out tomorrow for good. I'll do the rest."

"I've no doubt you would. You may keep the price of my hire, and we'll call the agreement off."

"Then I'll expose you. We'll settle it at once."

For reply the young man rang the bell. "Has Mr. Soames come?" he asked the servant. "Show him in here, please, and ask Miss Elsie if she will come, too."

James Carr stood back in the shadow, nervously tugging at his tie and collar, as they entered. In spite of his prepared story, he knew it would be hard to win entire belief for it against the plain tale of his accomplice, who, indeed, had the added advantage of having quickly won the friendship of every one concerned.

"I have carried out your instructions, Mr. Grantham," the solicitor remarked, as he took his seat at the table.

Carr looked up quickly and came forward.

"Mr. Grantham's instructions, Mr. Soames?" he queried.

"Yes. I must say he's acting very generously. He instructed me to draw up a deed of gift making over the whole of the property he inherits to Miss Venner."

Elsie exclaimed impulsively: "I couldn't take that, Frank, though it is more than generous to offer it. It is yours by every right, and ever so little would fulfill your father's wishes and be all I could take. Though, indeed, I am grateful for your thought."

The young man smiled and patted her shoulder, but before he could answer her Carr spoke.

"Before you waste gratitude, Elsie, be sure the gift is worth it. I am sorry to have to speak out openly, especially as I feel that to some extent the present situation is my fault. This man has no right to make any gift whatever."

The shrewd old solicitor put his head aside and eyed them all in turn, reserving his last and longest look for Carr. A good deal uncomfortable under the scrutiny, the latter continued:

"In fact, he is not Frank Grantham at all, but a taxicab driver, Bradley by name."

Mr. Soames raised his eyebrows and put out his under lip. Elsie, with a bewildered expression, turned mutely to the accused man. He, to all appearances, was the least concerned.

"So now it is out," he said. "I admit nothing, mind that, Mr. Soames; but I am perfectly willing to stand aside if my cousin James will sign that deed of gift instead of me."

Carr sneered. His courage was returning.

"A likely thing," said he. "You can't gull me into that, Bradley."

"One moment," the solicitor broke in. "Am I to understand that you, Mr. Carr, brought this man here knowing he was an impostor?"

"I was deceived myself till a few days ago, sir."

"After Mr. Grantham's death—or before?"

Carr winced at the lawyer's insinuation.

"After—most certainly after."

"You know your uncle's will gave everything to Miss Venner, and it was revoked only because he thought his son lived?"

"Still, the will is revoked," was the sullen answer, "and I claim my right."

The younger man held out both hands to the girl.

"You see how it is," he said. "I would help you to your own, but this man is morally a thief. He accuses me of a crime of which, however, he insists upon taking advantage, and I reply to him—nothing. What is your verdict?"

She took his hands and looked into his eyes earnestly. They did not flinch, but gazed back with a depth of meaning in them. It seemed to her that through them she looked into his soul.

"I believe in you—I trust you—Frank Grantham."

He released himself and faced his accuser.

"Give her half and take the rest," he said.

"No. I appeal to you, Mr. Soames; you are no foolish girl. It is mine legally."

The solicitor smiled.

"You are taking a great deal for granted, Mr. Carr. You have made a charge, but have not proved anything."

"But the man owns to it."

"Oh, now, that is not quite correct," the lawyer remarked, indulgently. "He could not do so, since beyond a shadow of a doubt he is whom he claims to be—the son of Joshua Grantham."

"I have proofs, I tell you——"

"You have none." The young man swung round on him. "You have fooled yourself. I knew you when you came to me first with your plot to deceive my father. You were certain of your cousin's death; eager to find a man to suit your purpose; and you found the very man whose right it is to stand here now and order you from the house."

Carr choked, and made a furious gesture of appeal to the solicitor, who, dropping word after word coldly and judicially, crushed the last faint hope the baffled man might have cherished.

"Mr. Grantham took me into his confidence the moment he heard of his father's will being revoked. His statement is quite clear, the proofs of his identity undoubted. Without passing any opinion on your behavior, Mr. Carr, I think I may say we shall not require you to witness the deed of gift your cousin wishes to sign."

As the door slammed behind Carr, Frank advanced to the table and took up the pen.

"I give it to you now, Elsie," he said, "but I shall ask for it back soon."

Mr. Soames chuckled. It was not quite clear whether it was at the thought of Carr's exit or at the pretty confusion upon Elsie Venner's face.

GOLD CROSS OF THE KREMLIN.

[St. Petersburg correspondence London Times:] In collecting mementoes of the Napoleonic invasion for the centenary celebrations in Moscow next year attention was drawn to the memoirs of the Comte de Segur and other French contemporaries regarding the fate of the great cross of Ivan Veliky, the church which dominates the Kremlin.

Napoleon had this cross pulled down, believing it to be of solid gold and intending to have it placed over the Dome des Invalides. He was prompted to this act by a desire to punish the Russians for setting fire to the city, especially as the cross was popularly believed to have a legendary connection with the greatness of Russia. With enormous difficulty the cross, measuring sixteen feet, was brought down, and according to Segur had to be abandoned on the march to Smolensk, being sunk with a quantity of other impediments in Lake Semlevo. The lake having been recently drained, a careful search was made, which brought to light innumerable remains of dead horses, harness, carts, uniforms, etc., but no trace of the cross.

Letters published in the Novoe Vremya argue that it never left Moscow and was probably buried under the wreckage of the Kremlin caused by the blowing up of its buildings at Napoleon's command. The real gold cross remained undetected on one of the churches which escaped destruction.

Rampant Patriotism.

FREDERICK F. FRELINGHUYSEN of Tuxedo Park was discussing, at a luncheon at Narragansett Pier, the subject of patriotism.

"Modern thinkers tell us," he said, "that patriotism is disappearing—that man's mind is so developing that he can now love not only his own country and his own people, but other countries and other peoples as well. These modern thinkers claim that there remains little of that old, narrow feeling which prompted the villager to say: 'There goes a stranger; heave a brick at him.'

"But, be this as it may," continued Mr. Frelinghuysen, "I find patriotism most ardent among the world's most highly civilized nation. Yes, there are no patriots anywhere like those of France.

"The Frenchman loves his country so well that he never—or practically never—emigrates. I once knew in Paris a poor man who, to better his fortune, emigrated to New York. But he returned to Paris again after a few years.

"'How did you do in America?' I asked him one day.

"'Oh, very well,' he answered. 'Very well indeed.'

"Then, with a sigh, he added, gazing forth at the crowded and gay boulevard:

"'But I'd rather be a gas lamp in Paris than President of the United States.'"

Why He Turned Back.

GEORGE W. PERKINS, who is withdrawing still further from business in order to give still more of his time to economic problems, said of a certain socialist in a recent interview in New York:

"I grant you that he is intelligent. He knows, you see, that socialism won't come in his time. If he thought there was any danger that it would, he'd turn, with his intelligence, conservative."

Mr. Perkins smiled.

"He reminds me," he continued, "of a chap in a western camp. This chap sat smoking before the camp fire at bedtime, and after a while he said quietly:

"'This mornin' at daybreak I struck the trail of a grizzly. I follered it till half arter 4 this afternoon. Then I come on back to camp.'

"'But why didn't you keep on after the grizzly?' a man asked.

"'Wall, to tell ye the truth,' was the reply, 'that trail seemed to be gittin' altogether too fresh.'"

A Triple Life.

OTTO H. KAHN, the New York banker, said in the smoking-room of the Amerika:

"A four months' tour of Europe has convinced me that my own country has the best government in the world. America is the land of opportunity—the land of opportunity for rich and poor alike. Hard work is all that is required, and you'll always find the hardest worker at the top.

"It reminds me of a story," Mr. Kahn continued. "It is a story about a large employer of labor. An underling sought a private interview of this man one day, and, closing the office door, said in a mysterious whisper:

"'I think it is only fair to tell you, sir, that it is rumored in the plant that you are leading a double life.'

"'Well, by George! I am, too,' said the employer, in a loud, hearty voice, as he opened the door as a sign that the interview was at an end. 'In fact, you might say I am leading a triple life, for I work three times as hard as any man or woman on my pay roll.'"

An Expert Opinion.

THE REV. ANNA HOWARD SHAW said recently in Philadelphia of an opponent of co-education:

"Perhaps he objects because he is aware that equal education does away with man's superiority. The average man of course won't be superior to the average woman when they are both equally well educated. His assertions won't be accepted then unquestioningly.

"Indeed, his assertions already are beginning to be questioned here and there. Thus there was a young chap at the seashore last month who, on being refused by a beautiful girl, said:

"'You have broken my heart.'

"But the girl, a medical student, laid her white hand lightly on his breast a moment, and then shook her head and said:

"'No, there isn't the least evidence of organic lesion. I notice a slight palpitation, due, no doubt, to the excessive use of cheap cigarettes, but otherwise the organ is quite perfect.'"

A Superior Person.

F. H. ELLIOTT, the secretary of the American Automobile Association, was talking in New York about a somewhat supercilious and conceited millionaire.

"He's a very superior person," Mr. Elliott said, smiling. "He's the sort of person who would be sure to go to a horse show in a motor car and to an automobile show in a monoplane."

Statesmen and Politicians.

SENATOR CURTIS of Kansas was pleading, at a dinner in Topeka, for uniform divorce laws.

"But we'll never Lave uniform divorce laws," he said, "till we have the right sort of statesmen. A child asked me the other day the difference between a statesman and a politician.

"'Well, my child, as things go today,' said I, 'the only difference is that the statesman rules the country, while the politician rules the statesman.'"

Both Delighted.

TWO elderly gentlemen, both decently clothed in sober black, were sitting side by side in a Euclid-avenue car. Each was reading a morning paper. Suddenly one of the men uttered an exclamation of pleasure and the other peered at him over his glasses.

"I see here," explained the first with a beaming face, that Mr. B., who died last week, has left his entire fortune to various charitable enterprises. This will be a surprise to his many relatives. It is to me a glad surprise in my case, for I am the pastor of a church to which he has left $10,000."

The second man looked at the article and his face, too, became wreathed in smiles. "God bless him! Ah, sir, I like to see money left like that. I do indeed!"

"Are you also a clergyman?"

"No, sir, I am a lawyer."—[Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Shaw Family Luggage.

APROPOS of the amount of baggage English travelers are said to bring to this country, a very funny story was told by a young English girl who was returning to England with her parents and two sisters, after living some years in Philadelphia.

Their household goods were checked through to New York, and on their arrival the eldest daughter went down to the wharf with her father to see them ready for shipping.

The pile looked formidable and startling, sundry smaller pieces of furniture having arrived with the personal trunks and baskets. There were a couple of mattresses, a bath chair and a sewing machine, as well as a bicycle and a folding bookcase.

Two men with trucks were engaged upon transferring the trunks to the steamer, commenting freely upon the size and shape of the Shaw family's possessions. Just as the father and daughter came up overheard one man say:

"One, three, five, seven, a bath tub and a bicycle, all marked Shaw."

From the other side of the pile came the other man rolling a large dark bundle, which they instantly recognized as the drawing-room carpet.

"Say, Bill," he called. "My, but I should like to see this party Shaw, for here most certainly is an ol' dead 'oss."

Judged by Her Husband.

I. N. CRAWFORD, a well-known hardware merchant of La Porte, Ind., loves a joke. He prefers that it should be at the expense of some one else; but, as sometimes happens to the joker, his jokes are occasionally boomerangs.

One day a farmer entered Mr. Crawford's store, and asked if he could exchange some butter for hardware. The humor of the thing appealed to the proprietor.

"Why, certainly," he said. "Take the butter right up to the house. My wife is not at all particular."

The Hoosier farmer looked him over slowly and critically from head to foot, and then drawled out: "Land o' Goshen! I should say not."

Miss Sears's Epigram.

MISS ELEANOR SEARS, who is to marry Harold Vanderbilt, is not extravagant; but naturally, having no need to economize, she objects to the monotonous and irksome self-denial that economy implies.

In Boston, last winter, Miss Sears contemplated the purchase of a Bleriot monoplane equipped with a 100-horse-power Gnome motor. A friend ventured to lay before her the extravagant cost of aviation, whereupon she epigrammatically replied:

"Well, I like extravagance. Economy, anyhow, is only a way of spending money without getting any fun out of it."

No Rain to Waste.

IN the Yakima Valley, Washington, where apple growing is an important industry, rain is scarce. Last summer a fruit grower, who owns forty acres of orchard, was rejoicing in a slight precipitation of rain when one of his hired men entered the house.

"Why don't you stay in out of the rain?" inquired the fruit grower.

"Oh, that's all right," replied the man. "A little sprinkle like that doesn't bother me in the least. I can work right along just the same."

"That isn't the point!" exclaimed the fruit grower. "Next time it rains you come into the house. I want that water on the land."—[Metropolitan.

Taxicab Rates.

THE MARQUIS OF QUEENSBERRY expressed the other day at the Plaza his astonishment over the taxicab rates of New York.

"In London," he said, "the rate is only 16 cents a mile, but here——"

He smiled.

"After a run through Central Park in a New York taxicab," he said, "I can readily understand the joke about the old lady from the country who said:

"'The New Yorkers calls 'em taxidermy cabs because the drivers skin you.'"

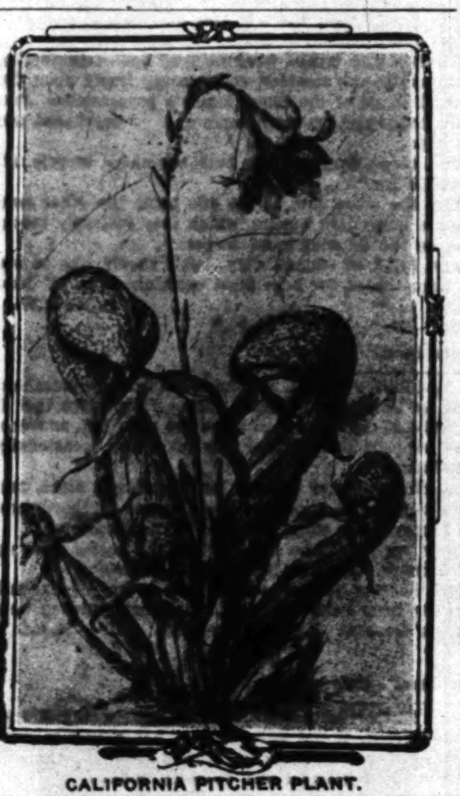
INSECT-DEVOURING PLANTS.

VENUS'S FLY-TRAP AND VARIOUS OTHER INTERESTING SPECIES.

By Ernest Braunton.

PLANTS that feed on insects are to be found in various parts of the world. The United States contains several, and California boasts of but a single native species. No doubt Venus's Fly Trap, Dionaea muscipula, is one of the most interesting of all. It is found in sandy bogs of the pine forests in North Carolina and the northern portion of South Carolina. It belongs to the family of Sundews, known to science as Order Droseraceae. In this order we have six known genera: Drosera, Dionaea, Byblis, Roridula, Drosophyllum, and Aldrovanda. The typical sundews, Drosera rotundifolia and D. longifolia, are also nearly as interesting as Venus's Fly Trap and are found over a much greater stretch of territory. The first-named species is indigenous to both this country and Europe, reaching from Florida to New England and westward to limits not very well defined.

Venus's Fly Trap is a rosette of leaves lying flat on the ground. The stem of the leaf is winged so that it appears a strap-shaped leaf, on the end of which at the end of the mid-rib, is situated the "fly catcher." From the center of this rosette springs the stiff, upright, naked flower spike, bearing at its apex six to ten white flowers about one inch across. The leaf proper is two-lobed and fringed on the edge with sharp, prickly spikes which interlace and lock when the leaf closes. On the upper surface of the leaf are several very sensitive filaments or hair-like bodies that are very sensitive to the touch, causing the lobes of the leaf to fold very quickly if they be but lightly touched by the finger or any hard object. The plant is perennial and has somewhat bulbous roots. It lives in damp places and seems affected only by damp objects. Stones, bits of wood, or even perfectly dry pieces of meat excite no action in the leaf when placed on the lobes, but if damp, nitrogenous matter is placed thereon the lobes slowly close over the object, not again opening until the juices have all been extracted, when the valueless, dry remains will be exposed to the elements.



CALIFORNIA PITCHER PLANT.

When a luckless fly or other insect drops upon a leaf it at once becomes excited and numerous glands all over its upper surface emit a copious discharge of a colorless, slightly sticky and somewhat acid juice, and if the leaf is very "hungry" this discharge of vegetable gastric juice is so free that it runs off on the ground. The lobes of the leaf quickly close, the spiked edges interlock and the insect is secure, for the leaves are very powerful and will not open unless torn to pieces. When occasionally one has been forced open with rupture, it closes instantly, with a loud clap. It sometimes remains closed over an insect for several days and takes much longer to recover from its gluttony, seemingly being in a torpid condition for days, and sometimes weeks after disgorging its carrion. Sometimes a leaf is useless, so far as gastronomic ability is concerned, after one meal though ordinarily a leaf eats several, at least two or three. The other insectivorous plants do not act mechanically or capture their prey, merely being pitchers containing a viscid fluid into which the insects fall. These pitcher plants, species of Sarracenia, are found in the same section of our country as the sundews, the leaves being cylindrical vessels covered on the interior walls with stiff hairs which point downward, so that if the unfortunate victim attempts to escape drowning by climbing out he finds his efforts thwarted and drops back to his doom, to be absorbed by the juices of the plant for the sustenance of the plant. In the upper part of California we have a native pitcher plant, known to botanists as Darlingtonia Californica, and it has been pictured on this page, some three or four years ago.

Native Flowering Plants.

HOWEVER beautiful our native flowering plants appear when growing under natural conditions, it should ever be borne in mind that their degree of beauty may be vastly enhanced by careful culture. Shakespeare says:

> "There is an art which doth mend nature,
> Change it rather,
> But the art itself is nature."

The fundamental truth of which evidently is, the possibility of the improvement of things natural by human art. And truly there exists an art in scientific floriculture, for although at the present time that same art is perhaps scarcely considered as existing upon the same plane as some others, yet surely the time must arrive when floriculture will be considered as art of a very noble and high order.

With all their charm and loveliness, our native plants, when growing naturally in the bush, seldom attain to that degree of excellence which, with the careful and intelligent attention frequently bestowed upon their culture, they are induced to develop, particularly in Britain and on the continent of Europe. In those countries, cultivated as they are for the most part in flower pots, specimens are grown and exhibited in the various horticultural meetings which always command the admiration, not only of the casual observer, but of the horticultural connoisseur, who, in some instances, perhaps, has also witnessed the same species growing under natural conditions. Just as apples, pears, oranges and other fruits on the one hand, and the various examples of cultivated vegetables on the other, are unknown as such in a state of nature, so the grand examples of those living forms known as florists' flowers are altogether in advance of anything usually observed under essentially natural conditions; and that position holds good, even when the species themselves are cultivated as such, before they have become the subjects of the art of the scientific hybridizer. It is thus established as a first principle of floriculture that careful culture improves quality; and, indeed, improvement is the instinctive object of all ideal cultivation.

Chrysanthemums.

IF you want a fine crop of blooms you must carefully attend upon the wants of your plants from now forward. The first point is to see that they are well supported by stakes, and for this purpose one of the best materials is a bundle of shakes (split, not sawed.) These will prove generally useful for garden work, and when plants grow too tall for them another stake may be spliced on the top. After the buds show in plenty you must commerce feeding them with manure water or commercial fertilizers, once every two weeks for about three times and then once each week until the buds show what color the flower will be, when all fertilizing should be stopped, but a good supply of water given. Rub out all buds as soon as they appear, except those you wish to mature; paying special attention to all buds or branches that appear on the lower part of the plants, for these, being nearer the food supply, will rob all the terminals of a good share of nutriment, and those are the ones from which you may expect the best flowers.

Rapid Tree Growth.

A READER of the House Beautiful writes to ask concerning the value of ailanthus and states that on his ranch in the Antelope Valley he has planted ailanthus, black locust, green ash, catalpa, elm, maple, basswood, sycamore, mulberry, liquidamber, Virginia persimmon. The first three only have thriven, the others are mostly dead; the three thriving in the order listed. The ailanthus grows anywhere, in any kind of soil and is of no value for timber and of little for fuel. The black locust is superior in every respect.

Beautiful Cork Oak.

THE more one sees of the cork oak the more he is moved to admiration of its many splendid qualities. We have few subjects for street, park, or garden that give such universal satisfaction. Fairly quick in growth, it never gets out of shape through abnormal growths or partial arrested development, it is evergreen, of good color and substance, drought-resistant, handsome in form and foliage, and, a strong point in its favor—it has a beautiful and interesting bark, for from it is obtained the cork of commerce so much in use by all.

Growing Cyclamen.

THE seed should be sown September in pans or shallow boxes filled with a light sandy soil, and placed in a moderately warm greenhouse. The seed takes from six to eight weeks to germinate; the seedlings are then transplanted to similarly-prepared boxes, and when large enough are finally transferred to pots, and then shifted on as fast as they require it. The plants must be placed in as cool a place as can be found during the summer, shaded from the sun, and carefully tended in regard to watering.

October East and West.

OCTOBER, says the Garden Magazine in its early fall planting number, is the time to plant every kind of "bulb, root and tuber;" to make formal flower beds; to make new informal borders; to start bulbs for the window garden, especially Roman hyacinths for Christmas; to order hyacinth glasses (have you ever grown hyacinths in water?) to get shallow bowls and pebbles for Chinese sacred lilies; to put crocuses in the lawn where they will make a charming picture; to naturalize a thousand poet's narcissus bulbs in some meadow.

Bulb-Planting Time.

ALL our local dealers are now supplied with bulbs for the present season's planting. It is well to know that the sooner these are put in the soil, the better. Do not delay about lilies, especially; they should go in at once, for they rapidly lose vitality unless kept in some good packing material containing moisture, and in a cool place. With the so-called "Dutch bulbs" just in, haste is not so necessary, but nothing is to be gained by deferring planting.

TREELESS STRETCHES.

WAYSIDE TREES ARE NOWHERE MORE NEEDED THAN IN CALIFORNIA.

VISITORS to Southern California who have made a study of our truly wonderful garden vegetation have marveled that in a country where so many good trees are obtainable at low cost we have so many bare and treeless stretches along street and highway. They have so expressed themselves to the writer, and some have been indignant over the matter, also indignant that we occasionally plant "trees so common everywhere in the East." With so little care, so little time, and so little money, we may do so much, yet we are not even up to the mark set by any eastern section of such rich and diversified interests as may be found in Southern California.

In no part of the United States are trees more needed, absolute desert tracts excepted, than right in our section. Needed because of the natural dearth of native tree growth, man having destroyed much that formerly beautified our land, and because of our long, dry summer, making trees so grateful. In addition it has often been found that frontage planted with trees has brought a far higher price than unplanted land, all other points being equal. This one point has been definitely decided: that for every purpose but growing of field crops a planted frontage is of more value than quality of soil. Any land dealer will corroborate this, then why so many treeless stretches in city and country?

[illegible] Tree Warden Resigns.

WORD comes to us from Riverside of the resignation of Tree Warden Reed "on account of failing strength," though Mr. Reed is evidently still long for this world. But to keep up the trying labors of tree warden, especially with the energy displayed by Mr. Reed, [illegible] proved too much for a man of his years and the position should be given a younger and more active man. Having published a sketch of the life of an old and valued friend in the Rural Californian for [illegible], 1907, the writer remembers that Mr. Reed was born in 1833, making him now 78 years of age. His has been an active life, punctured with enforced periods of rest on account of ill health, and the writer sincerely hopes that "Riverside's grand old man" now enters upon many and happy years of well-deserved rest. Commenting upon his retirement, one of his home papers says: "It is to be regretted that he feels that he must lay down the burdens of the work which he has carried so long and so well; and the best monument which he leaves is the miles of well shaded streets, which were bare and unattractive when he began his campaign for tree planting. That monument ought to be carefully guarded and protected, for it is one of the great assets of the city, and Mr. Reed's resignation ought not to be allowed to check the progress of the work which has been so dear to his heart. What he has done should be continued and perpetuated and the city should go on to greater and better things."

Why Plant Street Trees.

There are at least four good reasons why we should plant street trees: First, for ornament; second, for health; third, for comfort; fourth, for protection.

1. Ornamentation. That street ornamentation pays in many ways no one will deny, but it pays directly in dollars and cents. Beautifying a neighborhood is not a costly task. It costs but little more to make it attractive than to leave it or make it unsightly, and a well-planted district will not only attract, but command [illegible] desirable in every way. It is not mere sentiment that prompts the railroads to advertise the beauties along their lines. Beauty to them represents cash, and each year they spend immense sums calling attention to the attractions of the sections through which they pass. If people choose a line of travel because of its natural and acquired beauties, how much more eagerly will they seek such a place for a residence. That both are eagerly sought for is undisputed. Landscape beauty is capital. Again, not one of us would be satisfied to spend his life in a desert, though surrounded with the necessities of life in plenty. Our natures crave better and more beautiful surroundings, and we ofttimes travel far seeking the most beautiful location obtainable.

2. Health. Trees add greatly to the healthfulness of any district by cooling and purifying the air, the foliage evaporates large quantities of water and the reduction of temperature in this way is greatest during the hottest and dryest weather. The foliage also absorbs impure and therefore harmful gases. Trees also promote circulation of air (due principally to unequal temperature.)

3. Comfort. Trees add materially to comfort either in city or country, not alone to shade the passer-by, and the idler who rests beneath their branches, but in a climate like ours, with perpetual sunshine, they soften the glare and heat of the sun on sidewalks.

4. Protection. Every one will readily concede that street trees afford protection from both wind and sun, but as a protection against fire they are not so well known. The chief of the San Francisco fire department writes that shade trees on sidewalks are beneficial in checking the spread of fire. First, they are good as windbreaks, keeping sparks and cinders from near-by buildings. Second, they shield the houses, preventing them from catching fire from the heat. He tells of a fire where a single large tree prevented the destruction of a three-story flat adjoining. In this case there was considerable delay in getting water, so that the fire gained great headway.

Our Indifferent Council.

MOST unusual pressure has been brought to bear upon the present City Council to provide a forestry department for Los Angeles, but thus far without avail. Organizations representing tens of thousands of residents in the aggregate have petitioned to this end, until it would seem that the popular demand could no longer be withstood. Even the powerful City Club, supposed to stand "cheek and jowl" with the present administration, had their petition pigeon-holed. It is questionable if street-tree advocates ever found a more indifferent City Council than the present, and interested civic bodies should demand of Councilmanic candidates their views upon the subject, also their intentions if elected.

Tree Planting.

WHILE it is too early to plant street trees, it is not too soon to consider what, where and how to plant. It is hoped that all will choose wisely, not only as to the kind of tree to be purchased, but also as to the way of planting it. Each succeeding year the writer is more and more impressed with the necessity for proper preparation. Finely planted streets are in some instances about to be demanded by reason of broken curbs and sidewalks. On streets of some slope instances are known where a few blocks, with underlying hardpan, will have to be replanted because of damage to cement work. On the same street a few blocks below, no such damage is apparent, for the hardpan is not present. One such street is known to be in such condition, though all trees are of same kind and age, for they were planted at the same time under precisely the same conditions.

Our Weedy City.

A PROMINENT Angeleno, returning from a tour of Europe and our eastern States, says that Los Angeles impresses him as the most progressive, yet the most weedy city found in his travels. Scores of times in this department has the attention of the public been called to this fact as well as to that other official shortcoming whereby, though a sufficient ordinance was passed, our vacant, weed-grown lots remained as bad as ever. City Councils seem to think they are to be credited with laws passed rather than with laws enforced. We look to them, not alone for enactment, but to them indirectly for enforcement. It is their business, with the Mayor, to see that the various city departments fill their respective places in keeping with Councilmanic policy.

WHERE ANATOMY WAS FIRST STUDIED.

[Pall Mall Gazette:] Among the many ancient buildings in Vienna which are fast falling prey to the modern builder is one of particular interest to the medical faculty. It is situated in the Weihburggasse, in the heart of the old city, and dates back to the fourteenth century. It was then the House of the Medical Faculty, and in it took place the first legal dissection of a human body in Central Europe. For in those days anatomy was a forbidden thing, the performance of which was attended with great difficulties. Emperor Frederick had decreed that for the purposes of medical science a human body might be cut open only once in five years. An Italian physician—Galearo of Padua—brought the art of anatomy to Vienna, and performed the first dissection in this house on February 12, 1404. The work continued eight days, and after the "Anatomie" was ended all the participants joined in a high mass for the soul of the departed.

Further dissections took place in the fifteenth century, but only five in Vienna, in the years 1418, 1444, 1452, 1455, and 1459. Until 1452 only male bodies were allowed to be dissected. In that year, at the urgent request of the faculty, a female body was permitted to be dismembered. It happened in May of that year that six women had been condemned to death, and the burgomaster gave the body of one of them to the faculty. The dissection took place on May 19 in the old house now being torn down. Deacon Johannes Zeller was the lecturer, and the prosector was the Surgeon-Master Jakobus. Eighty years later the old faculty house passed into the possession of the church.

Practical Poultry Culture in the Southwest.

DEVOTED TO THE INTERESTS OF STANDARD-BRED POULTRY AND THE PEOPLE WHO GROW IT.

NEW POULTRY SHOW RULES.

IMPORTANT REGULATIONS ADOPTED AT THE NATIONAL MEETING.

By Henry W. Kruckeberg.

NOTE—Short articles of a practical nature are cordially solicited from breeders and fanciers, relating their experiences with poultry, giving their successes as well as failures. The writer will be glad, in so far as lies in his power, to answer inquiries of public interest bearing on any phase of an enlightened poultry culture, such as feeding and management, disease and its prevention, market conditions, fancy points, etc. The co-operation of utility breeders and fanciers is cordially solicited, to the end that the best thought and practice in an enlightened poultry culture may find a healthy expression in these columns.

THE thirty-sixth annual meeting of the American Poultry Association did a good thing when it formulated a set of show rules to govern in all poultry shows competing for its medals and diplomas. And since up to the present writing there are no less than nine exhibitions to be given in this State under the auspices of the American Poultry Association, it is of more than passing moment that breeders and exhibitors become reasonably familiar with conditions covered by these new rules. For this reason we here give them in condensed form

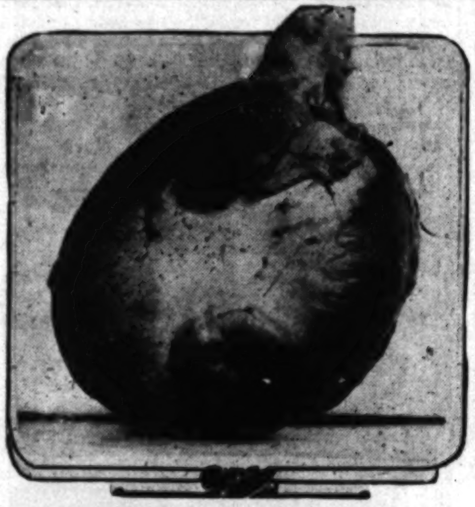
Only such poultry associations, societies, etc., as are members of the American Poultry Association are to be permitted to use these rules.

Entries must close the day and hour advertised, all entry fees to be paid on or before that time.

Persons disqualified by A.P.A. are ineligible to enter birds at a show held under A.P.A. rules, or to act as judges or in any other capacity.

Every bird shown must be the property of the exhibitor, otherwise entry fees, prize money and other premiums are forfeited by him.

If disqualified persons succeed in entering birds, the show management reserves the right to cancel entries, such disqualified person to forfeit his entry fees, prize money, etc.; also the show management reserves the right not to accept entries from exhibitors whose conduct in the fancy makes it desirable to debar them from competition.



GIZZARD MINORCA COCKEREL SHOWING A MONSTROUS GROWTH OF BONE INTO IT.

Judging is to begin promptly on the date and hour advertised.

If exhibitors attempt to interfere with or influence the judge or judges, they shall, on proof, forfeit entry fees, prize money, etc., and their birds may be removed from the show room.

Judges are to be required to personally sign the judges' books or score cards, and these shall be the official and final record of the awards.

Birds shall not be taken from the show room until the close of the show, nor prize ribbons removed.

Birds are entered and shown at risk of owners, but show associations are expected to exercise all due care, including police and fire protection.

Birds shall be returned promptly at close of show. Any losses in reshipping, through proved carelessness on part of the show association, are to be paid for by the association at a value not to exceed $10 per bird.

Exhibitors disqualified for fraudulent practices will have the right to appeal to the executive board of the A.P.A.

Notice of any such disqualification, with a complete statement of facts, must be mailed within ten days to the secretary of the A.P.A.

Should a judge be charged with incompetency, error or fraudulent practices, the exhibitor or exhibitors making such charge are to have the right, after the awards are posted, to file a written protest with the secretary of the show, accompanied by a deposit of $5.

If protests are sustained, facts regarding the same are to be mailed within ten days to the secretary of the A.P.A.

Judges will not be permitted to exhibit in any class where they place awards and must refuse to consider birds that they recognize as having been their property at any time.

Classes at an A.P.A. show may be re-assigned to different judges "for cause," and show managements can add to list of judges.

Any persons employed by poultry journals or other periodicals in which poultry advertising appears, or who are connected therewith as editors, associate editors, advertising solicitors, including owners or part owners of such publications, are not to be permitted to judge at shows held under A.P.A. rules and regulations.

Show managements under this rule reserve the right to remove from the show room diseased, misshapen or unsightly birds.

Exhibitors at A.P.A. shows who are not members of A.P.A., must agree to submit to the jurisdiction of the American Poultry Association, and the presence of an exhibitor's birds is to be considered as evidence that he has signed a statement binding himself to be governed by these rules.

Additional rules not in conflict with A.P.A. rules are permissible.

Peculiar Monstrosities.

A correspondent has been good enough to send to this department a peculiar and monstrous growth taken from the carcass of a four-months-old S. C. Black Minorca cockerel, showing—as will be seen from the illustration made direct from a photograph—a perfectly developed bone grown directly into the gizzard. Our correspondent writes that the bird during life gave no symptoms of pain nor inconvenience; quite to the contrary was unusually vigorous, and when killed was plump and fat.

Abnormal growths are not unusual as a general thing, but we submit that a bird that will prosper with a growth of bone such as the case illustrates is somewhat out of the ordinary.

Another correspondent, William T. Hooker of National City, sends in the following:

"I am sending you with this mail what I call a phenomenon in the way of an egg, about the size of a bean, which we found this morning within a White Minorca. Egg No. 1 was to all appearances normal. At first No. 2 appeared as only a bubble in the white of No. 1, but on closer examination proved to be a perfectly-formed small egg and free to itself. The shell of No. 2 seemed very soft at first, but now appears much harder."

Abnormally small eggs containing only albumen need cause no special anxiety. They usually occur at or near the end of a batch of eggs, and seem to indicate that the ovary is exhausting itself of ova or yolks. One egg within another is not unknown, though the occurrence is not common. I have seen abnormally large eggs contain a secondary egg on the inside or within themselves, usually devoid of yolk.

Pullet vs. Hen Eggs.

J. T. Wheden of the San Gabriel Poultry Association writes to this department of The Times as follows:

"Noting your article of some time ago relating to the weight of pullet vs. hen eggs, I wondered why you or some other able exponent of the pullet did not get after the asses who have the making of prices for eggs. The pullet egg weighs nineteen ounces to the dozen, and the hen eggs twenty-four ounces to the dozen, yet the makers of prices on hen fruit discriminate against the former to twice that amount. There is as much difference in favor of the pullet egg as there is in favor of the broiler carcass as against the stag or cock carcass. As a matter of fact, the pullet egg should command a premium, just as the broiler does over the stag. A pullet egg is sweet and pure, and when invalids and delicate people understand this, it will come into possession of its own."

Where hens are fed good wholesome food and are cared for under first-class sanitary conditions, we doubt if there is any perceptible difference in the eating qualities of hen or pullet eggs, provided of course both are equally fresh. As to size, there is, however, a perceptible difference in favor of the hen egg. Allowing for these facts it stands to reason that eggs should be sold by the pound instead of by the dozen, in which case there would be no discrimination.

Touching eggs the chemist would tell us that a fresh egg gives 11.2 per cent. of lime in the shell, 65.5 per cent. of water, 11.9 per cent. proteids, 9.3 per cent. fats, and 9 per cent. ash. Broadly speaking, an egg is 11 per cent. shell, 32 per cent. yolk, and 57 per cent. white. Prof. Dryden, however, puts it differently. He says: "The only difference between a bushel of wheat and a bushel of eggs is that the eggs are more palatable and more nutritious. They are also more valuable in the market. A pound of eggs is worth from 10 to 30 cents, according to the season, while a pound of wheat is worth from 1 to 2 cents. By giving the wheat to the hen to market it is converted into a form of food so palatable that it is worth ten times as much as it was in the grain sack. More than this, the hen is thrifty; for every pound of wheat she puts into eggs she puts in a pound of water; and she gets a good price for water. In selling a dozen of eggs for 40 cents the poultryman gets 25 cents for the water in them. That is a pretty good price. It is more than the dishonest dairyman gets for the water he puts into his milk."

Verily, great is the American business hen!

Six tons is the annual production of residue, from which it is reasonable to expect a production of 1.8 grams of radium salt of the highest activity.

The yield in Austria up to the present, 3.5 grams, is not derived from the regular production from pitchblende, but from numerous old stocks, which are probably exhausted now. The yearly yield of 1.8 grams of radium salt of the highest activity may according to present prices be valued at $144,000.

MILLIONS OF BIBLES.

HAZARDS AND ADVENTURES OF AGENTS OF THE SCRIPTURES IN MANY LANDS.

[London Leader:] Some interesting facts and quaint stories are contained in the 107th Report of the British and Foreign Bible Society. In the first place, the society issued 903,827 Bibles, 1,139,239 New Testaments, and 4,782,720 Portions of the Scriptures during 1910, totals which easily constitute a record; 2845 cases of the Scriptures (weighing 333 tons) were sent out from the Bible House in London.

To place the Scriptures within reach of all, the society maintains its own depots and agents in nearly a hundred of the chief cities of the world. The great bulk of its issues consists of cheap popular editions, which are sold at prices far below their cost. A Chinese Pocket Testament, for instance, which costs about 5d. to produce, is sold for 1d.

Of the books sent out last year 440,000 were circulated among the Latin continental nations, 615,000 among the German and Slav peoples of Central Europe, 550,000 in the Russian empire, 200,000 in Africa, 250,000 in South and Central America, and 200,000 in Canada. In Asia, 812,000 copies went out in India and Ceylon, 285,000 in Japan, 660,000 in Korea, and a million and a half in China.

To get at the dispersed multitudes the society employs 1100 colporteurs—men belonging to dozens of races, and speaking scores of tongues, who travel the world over, from village to village, and door to door.

These colporteurs are to be met with along the highroads and footpaths of the world, visiting lonely homes and scattered hamlets and mixing with the crowds at markets and festivals. Last year they were selling the Scriptures on the slopes of Vesuvius, in railway stations and barrack-rooms of Siberia, in the banana plantations of Guatemala, in the diamond mines at Kimberley, and in the rice fields of Bengal.

They were busy at Oberammergau during the Passion Play, and at Nijni Novgorod during the great fair.

They offered their books among pilgrims to the holy places at Jerusalem, pilgrims to the grotto at Lourdes, pilgrims to Buddhist shrines in Ceylon and in Japan. They boarded hundreds of ships in the harbors of Port Said and Naples and Chefoo and Singapore.

One colporteur found shelter in a camp of Kirghiz Tatars. Another in South India was mistaken for a wizard, from whose magic words the people fled. Another in the Soudan crossed the desert with camels, and when he halted by the wells kept a fire burning all night to scare off lions. At a heathen festival in Upper Burma a colporteur was beaten and his books were thrown into the Irawadi. On the frozen river at Astrakhan a colporteur's sleigh broke through the ice, both his horses were drowned, and he himself narrowly escaped.

Last year these wandering Bible sellers sold more than 3,000,000 copies of the Scriptures.

During the year the Bible has been completed in ten new languages. They include Mukri-Kurdish, Bhojpuri, Bunan, Dholuo, Teso, Luna-Inkongo, Balinese, Mundari, and Korean. Some of these translations have taken years to achieve. The society's list of versions now includes 432 distinct forms of speech!

In the Austrian Tyrol it is still a crime to sell a Bible—almost the only district left in Europe. As the society's report says: "The work of the society in the Austrian half of the dual monarchy has always been a struggle against adversity. Enemies, concealed and open, have waged war against us for three generations, and are as bitter and inexorable today as they were a hundred years ago.

"During 1910 Austria absolutely closed some of its fairest provinces to the work of our society. In Upper Austria, in Salzburg, in the Tyrol, and in Vorarlberg the governors distinctly decline to admit colportage. They give no reasons for refusing, but no one is in doubt regarding the power behind their thrones. Among the other provinces of the empire there is not one in which we enjoy complete liberty, not one in which we are not hampered by a set of medieval regulations and restrictions which no free people would tolerate for a moment."

With regard to Portugal, the report remarks that they began 1910 there with the Church of Rome the supreme power, and ended it under a republic with absolute religious liberty. "What the result will be it is difficult to foresee, as there is a great danger of the pendulum swinging to the other extreme. Materialism is on the increase."

Some of the colporteurs employed by the society relate curious experiences. In Madagascar a sorcerer named Rainebalata, who made his living by divination, bought a Malagasy Testament for his daughter, and then learned to read it for himself. This led him to a Christian service. Finally, he gave up his heathen profession, and today he is a pastor in the Christian church.

In Sicayo, Peru, the inhabitants drove the colporteur out, shouting after him: "Out with this Freemason with horns and tail!" In remote villages near the Andes another colporteur found people who had been recommended to buy Bibles, to burn them, and then inhale the smoke as a cure for lung diseases!

A Ball of Twine.

notions of all kinds, he knew. He knocked frantically, and the half-dressed clerk, who slept in the rear of the store, thrust a sleepy head out of the front door. "We can't put up a prescription tonight," he said crossly. Then he blinked, stared and opened the door to the old man.

"I want some green twine" he panted.

"The clerk eyed him incredulously, but led the way to the counter.

"Poor old chap! Must be off his base," he thought. He searched in the case. "Green, did you say?" he asked as he rummaged. "Don't—believe—here's red, pink, blue, no—wait, yes, here it is. Right shade? Wrap it for you?" The old man reached for it feverishly, and turned hurriedly toward the door.

"Better stay here the rest of the night, grandfather," said the clerk mild good nature in his voice. But the door had already closed on his customer. The clerk stared thoughtfully after him, shook his head, put out the lights, and stumbled back to bed.

Outside the old man plodded on through the dismal downpour. A strange smile played about his lips. He passed a meat shop and looked regretfully at its dark, barred doorway.

"Poor old Friday," he muttered; "good dog!"

His heavy shoes were full of water and squeaked at each step. He listened intently to their squealing, then fell to counting his steps.

The roar of the arroyo arrested his counting. In the distance he could see a faint, struggling light from Betty's home.

"Fixing the toys for her birthday," he thought, a tender light creeping into his eyes. Then he cautiously felt his way down the slippery bank. The stream had grown during the last half-hour. The water rushed over one of the stepping-stones. Undaunted he began to cross.

"I COULD NOT fail now," he muttered. "For ONCE in my life I win."

Slowly he made his way from stone to stone. Now for the guess at the lost stone. He leaped. And found the stone. The water rushed violently over his foot, confusing him. He threw out one hand to regain his balance, steadied himself—but the ball of twine, tightly clutched in one trembling hand, slipped from his number fingers. Frantically he clutched at it, swayed far, far over the dizzying waters, regained it, clasped it triumphantly—and smiled.

The black waters closed over him.

Up in the shanty Friday crouched crying against the door, waiting in the darkness for his master. And the child in the long reddish-brown bungalow slept, dreaming of the morrow.

NO CHINESE TYPEWRITERS.

[New York Sun:] Typewriters are now made for use in nearly a hundred different languages, and they are sold all over the world; but there is still one great nation which, for a very simple reason, has no typewriters that write its tongue. That nation is China.

The English alphabet has twenty-six letters, the Russian thirty-six. The typewriter produced for the Russian market is the largest made; but no typewriter could be made that would begin to be big enough for the Chinese language, which has no alphabet but is represented by sign characters, of which there are about 50,000. Of the great number of words found in the English language only a small proportion are used for the ordinary purposes of speech, and the same is true of the characters used in the Chinese language; but the number of Chinese characters commonly employed is still far greater than could be put on any typewriter. So this nation of 400,000,000 people has no typewriter in its own tongue.

But that doesn't mean that no typewriters are sold in China. More and more Chinese are learning other languages besides their own, and Chinese merchants and resident foreign merchants use typewriters, and they are used in legations and in consular offices and in banks and shipping offices and colleges, and by missionaries, by various people. Altogether there are sold in China a good many typewriters.

NO PLACE FOR CHILDREN.

[London Evening Standard:] A working couple, blessed with six children, is at this moment homeless in Paris because they cannot find a landlord to take them in. Paris is not the Paradise of children; for some reason or other, they are far more in the way here than they are in other places, and when it comes to choosing an apartment they are a positive burden.

It may be true that the landlords make a rule to refuse families with more than two children—and one suspects they are not often confronted with more—but when a public-spirited citizen presents himself with six, he almost seems to have a right to a little encouragement. Of course the concierge is really the interested party, and even if the landlord liked a houseful of babies the concierge would never agree to admitting them. There is, it appears, a prejudice against children in furnished lodgings also, and this couple in question have found this out to their cost. They have warehoused their modest furniture, have sent their eldest daughter to stay with her grandmother, and have lent two of the other children to a friend, and with the remaining three have knocked at the door of a number of furnished lodging-houses, all of which have proved as inexorable as the concierge of flats.

If you notice, most of the charities in Paris that have the welfare of children in view devote themselves to getting the little people away from the city. There are societies for taking them to the sea, to the country, to England, to Germany—anywhere, in fact, out of Paris.

Farming in California—The Land and Its Products.

CONDUCTED BY J. W. JEFFREY, STATE COMMISSIONER OF HORTICULTURE.

FIELD NOTES.

Meaningless Exhibitions.

I HAVE heard more comment than usual this fall upon the lack of continuity and purpose in our agricultural fairs. Several writers have burdened themselves with the duty of explaining how these expositions have not fulfilled the purpose of their organization, but I have seen no attempt to point the way toward making these shows of greater value to the farming interests. Industrial expositions usually get nearer the goal of efficiency, for they approach nearer to the qualities of exactness within themselves. Agriculture is not a science, but it is a composite of many sciences, arts and methods. Consequently it is difficult to exhibit its products according to rules, or to classify its exhibitions so they may best serve the educational purposes which they are intended to advance. Much could be gained by the management in working to a well-ordered plan in preparing the premium schedules and requiring the exhibitors to conform to the schemes.

Our fairs are educative to a degree just as they are. If that degree is very small we may blame the plan, rather than the exhibitors. Take the average county exhibit at the State fair and see how the visitors view it and the awarding committee judge it. The visitors saunter listlessly through its aisles seeing nothing, receiving no impressions and getting no benefit from the time consumed. The judges make up their verdict from their own consciousness, without guidance from the entry books, yet usually placing the premiums where they belong by good guessing or from the general effect. It matters not that these big exhibits mean epitomes of an industry running to $200,000,000 in annual products. They are judged without precedents, plans or previous purposes upon the part of the schedule makers.

But walk out to the exhibit of dairy cows—a specialized department of agriculture. Rules for judging prevail there. Fifty points are given to the qualities of the udder—the great milk reservoir for which this breed has been created; quality of the hair, formation of the chest, and constitution get eight points each; formation of the ribs five points, form, the same and so on through a scale that is as fixed as the fact that a cow is to be judged. General appearance, head, quarters, body and milk-secreting organs, each subdivided and given its scientific proportion in the make-up of the animal, and the verdict in the hands of an intelligent committeee is above criticism.

When great counties compete without their sponsors, the judges and the public not knowing clearly what lines they are competing on, is it to be expected that any one would be satisfied with the verdict? One will have the best arrangement of its products, but the latter of poor grade; another will show the most tasty booth and the greatest beauty as a whole; another will exhibit in splendor and profusion a line of products but indirectly connected with the county; a fourth will include for general effect a great manufacturing exhibit, in which but enough county products are included to pass muster, and lastly, perhaps, a leading fruit-growing county will show a line of the finest fruits ever seen at a fair, yet displayed without artistic merit or attractive feature. Our fair management should not be blamed, because the public is content to grind along in the old ruts. We yearn for good old middle western fairs to be transplanted to California. The last State fair was a great improvement over others and there is hope for a greater improvement next seaaon.

Tariff Shibboleth.

IT results in sheer weariness to wade through the columns of tariff arguments now being written beneath the farmer's totem. I remember well that a few years ago the American Pomological Society was induced to declare against a tariff on fruits, during the only session that institution ever held in California. I witnessed the denouement at Riverside two decades ago when the members were surfeited with California hospitality and thus thinned (or thickened) out to a bare quorum. However, the fruit growers of this State have been enjoying a considerable fruit tariff ever since, and in spite of that memorable declaration.

With such examples as this we must expect, even a quarter of a century later, an occasional and genuine farmer to be in favor of the removal of the duty on imported fruits, for the workings of some human brains are past analysis. But one should expect to find some discrimination in a mind capable of enlightening the California fruit grower upon such an intricate subject as the tariff. One of these late writers from the farmers' standpoint takes for a text the removal of the tariff from quinine, copper in plates, binder twine and from these examples draws the conclusion that fruit growing would go on just the same were the duties removed from imported fruits. We cannot follow the reasoning of writers who do not discriminate between a tariff benefitting only monopolists and a tariff from which the citizen at large receives a benefit, and, too, this is not the place for arguments on such a broad subject.

But it is obvious that a fruit tariff is so different in both principle and effect from those cases cited that some one ought to keep the orchardists reminded of the fact that their case should be kept alive before the country, and the propaganda promoted on its merit alone. We maintain that the duty upon oranges and lemons, for example, has made citrus fruits more abundant and cheaper to the American consumer than they would be without the tariff. This proposition needs no argument other than a review of the facts. Without the protective tariff upon citrus fruits the orange and lemon industries could not have weathered the vicissitudes and calamities they have experienced for the three last decades. Scale, frost, drought, enormous investments in irrigating facilities, high freight and refrigeration rates and sparse crops would long since have depleted the citrus acreage had cheap foreign fruits and freights been permitted to add their weight to these burdens. But with enterprise never before witnessed in the development of agricultural industries the California fruit growers fought it out with the aid of the fruit duties and this season placed 50,000 carloads of citrus fruits upon the markets to compete with themselves upon a basis more favorable to the consumer than would be competition between a straggling mess of California fruit in competition with an equally uncertain output from the Old World. The California fruit grower dreads to contemplate the present status of citrus horticulture if the American Pomological Society had started a campaign twenty years ago that would have wiped out the fruit tariff. Fortunately the California growers did not follow the lead of their eastern brethren.

Soil Biology.

A WISE friend at Covina was well pleased, he writes, to see the term "biological conditions" used in this department and wishes that the fruit growers should be put right upon the basic scientific principles of soil fertility. He himself has been making some investigations in soil biology, and promises to put me in possession of facts relating to "orchard deterioration," in connection with his demonstrations. When the practical culturists like this begin to take an interest in scientific research of the soil we may expect an enlivenment of public interest and greater activities upon the part of our specialists.

Soil biology, the science of living soils. Not a bad title for a special department sometime to be established in California. We have had an abundance of information upon what soil is; not enough upon what it is doing. Our knowledge of the substances, compound and simple, that constitute soils is far advanced. We know the chemical composition of the particle, the composition and properties of the whole mass, but our knowledge of the vital phenomena occurring therein is far less complete. The subject of agricultural chemistry embraces knowledge of the properties of plants, soils, manures and foodstuffs, and seems akin to real biology of the soil. But its ultimate end relates more to the manipulation or uses of soil products than to the intimacies of their origin. It is true, we have many able soil biologists—investigators to whom mere soil analysis is a rather trivial subject compared with the subject of their calling. Yet, withal, the doctrine respecting the community life going on within our soils is rarely preached to the farmer by a real convert and more rarely practiced upon the land itself.

Knowledge of living soils constitutes the foundation of success in all our efforts to produce crops. When producers learn the full significance of tilling the land for the land's sake they may be said to have taken the first lessons in the biological conditions therein. I do not intimate that the good culturist does not understand and practice methods that promote the countless activities of the organisms whose operations constitute the life history of soils. But I do maintain that land given to the constant production of the same crop (an orange orchard, for example,) for a generation will finally reach a state of biolysis in which the phenomena of life cannot be maintained by ordinary cultural means—means that would be considered scientific and potent in the cultivation of soils where rest, and rotation of crops can be maintained. If this is true the biology of our orchard soils must be made a special study, a paramount issue, if productiveness is to be maintained.

In the cultivation of surface crops the plow, sunshine, heat, water, air and frost, all join to renew activities in the whole feeding area of the plants; in most of our orchard soils no such natural activities can be maintained by such simple processes. The feeding ground is preempted permanently by the root system of the trees. The root-feeding processes breed toxic conditions, or, at least, bad physical conditions; nitrifying organisms cease their functions, the mass becomes inert and trees deteriorate. When biology comes to the broader meaning of life—life of soil bacteria as well as that of animals—and the public realizes that bacterial action is the foundation of all so-called higher life, we may expect more attention to be given to the welfare of the "little brothers" of the soil which are after all our only everlasting servants and benefactors.

Increase of Land Values.

AMERICANS delight to revel in large figures, and are especially happy in seeing twelve or thirteen figures all in a row captained by a black-faced dollar mark. This means billions and many of them, and Uncle Samuel is just now swelling out under the ample folds of his old-fashioned waistcoat because his statisticians have told him that American farms increased over $15,000,000,000 in value during the last decade. This is more than double the value of about the same farm acreage in 1900, and is exclusive of farm buildings. But who believes any such fairy tales? While we roll the $28,386,770,000 of farm values off the [illegible] we wonder how it can be true.

No one is prepared to deny that our [illegible] would sell for the above sum of money, [illegible] much money. But where did the census [illegible] these stupendous figures? Are price and [illegible] nyms, or the asking figure always a measure of [illegible] nent utility? Price is that which must be given [illegible] to obtain a thing; value its intrinsic worth. [illegible] Sam thumbs the worn arm holes of the vest [illegible] templates the straining buttons under his [illegible] he should also cast his midl eyes upon the [illegible] brothers' children who have gone across the [illegible] tional line into Assiniboia and Alberta—[illegible] lands they can afford to buy, as for lands [illegible] duce crops; land with plenty of humus, [illegible] not been burglarised of their productiveness, [illegible] more fertile than those abandoned yet [illegible] sponsive to the annual draft of crops.

No one is prepared to dispute values in [illegible] even a biffionaire. But we all know that the [illegible] value of the farms of the United States [illegible] creased to any such proportions as the figures [illegible] It would be far more accurate to add the [illegible] to the aggregate given in at assessing time [illegible] the result by two, because after all is said the [illegible] permanently valuable on account of their ability [illegible] tain the physical life of the nation. The census [illegible] makers could not segregate the land values [illegible] upon living conveniences alone; the values [illegible] through climatic circumstances, social advantages [illegible] places upon which wealth may lavish and [illegible] farms, too, in the meaning of the census returns [illegible] may well be proud of the material advancement of [illegible] farmers. They richly deserve it, and it [illegible] ity to the whole range of values. Yet we must [illegible] fact that in great measure the high price of [illegible] products is due to deterioration in the productive [illegible] ity of the land.

The Origin of Corn.

PLANT experimenters have succeeded in developing corn backward until all the ears were on the top of the stalk and so small that the stalk easily could carry them in that position. By constantly selecting smallest kernels of nubbins, the corn was led backward gradually through its history until it became not much larger than a good-sized head of timothy grass and the kernels of rice. This experiment proved corn is what some of the botanists claim—an evolution from one of the grasses of Southern Mexico. It is thought the plant was brought from the South by migrating tribes, finally being adopted by the Indians of Mexico, and by them and other Indians developed through long periods of years into the staple article of food for the territory now occupied by the United States. When the English and French entered their great struggle for the possession of what is now America, says the Globe-Democrat, immense cornfields were found as far north as New York and Massachusetts. Massasoit fed his white friends on corn, and later sweet corn was found in Massachusetts. The pioneers soon learned to prepare this new grain for food, and without it they could never have made their passage westward through the wilderness.

The experiment in developing corn backward illustrates the importance of selecting the best of its kind in corn or other plants for seeding purposes. There are two means of selection: first, by sorting the large, plump, perfect grains or seeds from the small, shriveled, imperfect ones; second, by looking for the fine, thrifty growing plants in the garden or field and marking them so that their yield may be saved for planting. In this work, and especially in the field of selection, the boys and girls on the farm can be a wonderful help. This is what your Uncle Sam says in a late bulletin on this point:

The complaint is commonly made that the children are not interested in the farm and that many of them leave as soon as possible. Interest can be awakened by giving the boys and girls something definite to do in the line of improving the farm and its products. Once started, they should be encouraged to feel responsible for results. They should also receive money in return, however small, for the improvement resulting from their efforts.

The formation of various boys' and girls' clubs, especially those for the growing of corn, is helping to create interest in the things of the farm. They are real steps in the right direction and should be extended to cover other crops, poultry and live stock. But it is not necessary to await the formation of a neighborhood club in order to interest the boy in selecting better seed. Help him to make selections from the year's crop. Let him prepare it for storing over winter. Set aside a field on which he can plant it the following year. Plant alongside it some unselected seed. [illegible] him in comparing the two fields. Encourage him if striking results are not obtained the first year. Give him his share of the profit when profit results from his efforts. The best result will be the increase of interest and knowledge in the boy.—[Rural Press.

Planting of Porches.

A BRANCH of the business that is too much overlooked is the adornment of porches, especially those with a sunny exposure. Some very beautiful effects can be brought out by proper planting and care. The porches where the sun beats down during the middle of the day or in the afternoon need vines that will give plenty of shade, and there are many of these that rapidly cover the porch and when in bloom add greatly to the appearance of the residence.

It is not necessary to be confined to one species of vine for these locations, for with a good-sized porch, vines that will bloom in spring and fall can be planted at short distances and thereby make this an interesting location. The wistaria has always been popular, and when it is full of its lovely hanging blue blossoms in spring it is always a great attraction and a beautiful sight. The Clematis paniculata is an equally decorative vine in the fall, when it is covered with its sprays of white flowers; the other clematis are fine for this purpose, though they do not make as heavy a shade; the [illegible], with its large purple flowers in midsummer, is a very beautiful plant for this purpose. Roses are, of course, well known as among the best plants for porches, and with different varieties of the climbing roses fine shade may be produced.

Where denser shade is desired, Aristolochia sipho is the best, and in two or three years from planting it will cover a large area, which with its heavy foliage and curious flowers is sure to attract attention. Another that is much used, and does equally well on the south or the north side, is the Ampelopsis quinquefolia, or Virginia creeper, which is also a very rapid grower when once getting established. While the flower of this vine does not amount to much, yet the foliage in the fall takes on beautiful colors, and the large clusters of [illegible] are an added feature. The proper planting of the lower part of the porch demands attention, and for this the low flowering shrubs are particularly adapted for this purpose, especially the deutzias or spiraeas.

One thing that should be always borne in mind in planting a porch with these hardy plants, and that is that they should be trained upon trellises that can be easily removed, and the plants not trained to the porch itself, for the porch must be painted, and it is almost impossible to take the big plants down and replace them in good condition, but if attached to a trellis this can be laid over while the painting is being done and replaced when the paint is dry.—[Gardening.

Fall Plantings.

THE Dutch bulbs are arriving, and this of course is the principal item of work for the next sixty days; all such bulbs will be the better for early planting as soon as one can get them in. Any one not fully acquainted with such bulbs should post themselves by getting the seedsmen's catalogues with cultural directions, not that they are hard to handle, but for the best results, especially in certain species, as hyacinths, they require special treatment.

Seed of all the hardy annuals should now be planted, such as snapdragons, delphiniums, stocks, pansies, poppies, calliopsis, godetias, lobelias, lupines, mimulus, phlox, centaureas, corn flowers, calendulas, clarkias, cosmos, gaillardias, gilia, gypsophilas, forget-me-nots, mignonettes, scabiosas, nasturtiums, zinnias and all such hardy plants, and by carefully arranging such, one can have a quantity of cut flowers all winter.

Sweet peas, the winter-flowering varieties, should be in the ground during the next thirty days for good large healthy growth and flowers for Christmas. This is a special strain of winter flowering varieties and are the only kind for planting now. The grandifloras and orchid-flowering varieties planted now will not bloom until next spring, so it is necessary to get the "winter-flowering" varieties if you want winter flowers.

Many of the perennial flower seed planted now will bloom in early spring, as coreopsis, delphinium, hollyhocks, aquilegias, cyclamens, digitalis, petunias, verbenas and such class of flowers. These are best planted in small beds and during early spring plant out where they are to grow.

It would be impossible in an article of this nature to mention anything like a full list that can be planted, but have merely mentioned some sorts that one can form an idea of what to do.—[O. M. M., in Cultivator.

School Gardens.

THE educational department of the State of New York includes agriculture in its course of study for the professional training of teachers, and has outlined a course of study in "nature study and agriculture" which the teachers of the State are supposed to follow in the grades. Much of the work imposes no added burden on the teacher, as it can be profitably correlated with other subjects. The College of Agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y., on request, furnishes leaflets to both teachers and pupils, each month. These leaflets are not theoretical, but are practical works prepared by eminent authorities along this line and follow closely the course of study outlined by the State.

The writer states that school in his section is held during fall and winter only. This is to be regretted, as it does not afford so good an opportunity for practical work in school gardening. However, the germination of seeds and the growth of plants can, in a measure, be observed by the school. Seeds may be placed between blotters and kept moist and warm, and then watched closely each day. Other seeds may be placed in cans of earth, the cans or boxes placed in the school windows, and the earth kept moist and warm. This affords opportunity to watch growth of plants for some time, and can be done during cold weather when school is in session and the ground too cold for outdoor planting. Much good comes from talking with pupils about soil, drainage, etc., and the care of certain plants, mentioning conditions existing in the immediate vicinity. The teacher may visit the parents and interest them in the matter and can usually get their consent to let the child have a small piece of ground, all his own, where he can put to practice what has been learned the previous winter. Not all this work can be accomplished by one teacher, but if each succeeding teacher conscientiously carries on the good work begun by his or her predecessor the pupil will soon have gained much practical knowledge of gardening. It does not necessarily follow that the teacher should be specially trained along this line of work, if he or she have a love for it.

The Department of Agriculture at Washington, D. C., sends out, each month, to those who request it, a list of publications from which one may make selections of works wanted. Many of these are gratis, while for some few a moderate price is charged. Then, too, the State Experiment Station furnishes many free publications in which the interested person may find much that is helpful. Encourage reading of farm papers. Being interested in this phase of education, I should like to read suggestions from others in different localities, as it seems that much good may accrue from it.—[Ray P. Travis, in Rural New Yorker.

Forest Destruction.

WE are inclined to overestimate the importance of spectacular phenomena and to give little attention to the greater but more quiet forces at work in nature's laboratory. A great conflagration sweeping away millions of feet of fine timber causes universal alarm, but the work of a single species of fungus will destroy billions of feet without attracting notice. The fires could have been prevented, we say, but the fungoid attacks are beyond our control, and seem to work in ways beyond discovery. The plant pathologist tells us, however, that there is no mystery behind the death of a great pine tree, or the decay of a whole forest. Understanding the cause, the life history of the parasite and the weakness the attack brings to the tree, there is nothing hidden. But our plant pathologists do not know very well how to prevent these fungous attacks, or to mitigate them after they have taken hold.

It is estimated that a perfectly sound conifer tie will last about twelve years when properly cared for. That is to say the tie will last till it is physically worn out. But the timber used for ties is unsound to the extent of 25 per cent. Rotting sets in early upon this portion, and as a result the government investigations show that the average service of all coniferous ties is thus reduced to about seven years, or nearly one-half the efficiency of sound ties. Thus we have in use about $8,000,000 worth of railroad ties infested with one fungus that reduces the life of all from twelve to say six years. We have no data upon the damage done to all timber by this fungus, yet it must reach into the hundred millions annually, and beside which our greatest forest fires are insignificant.

The Sebastopol Show.

RULE GRAVENSTEIN, ancient and admired apple which Burbank praises as the best on earth! Nothing but Gravensteins, millions of Gravensteins, will fill a tent 110 by 260 feet. And in good old Sonoma, which for years was rather languishing in the horticultural race, the contest for the best apple, and the best carload of apples, or it may be trainload, for I haven't seen the programme—the contest will be waged on August 14 and the following days. I have promised to select pomologists worthy the great occasion to judge the exhibit. Gravensteins are on the market now from other sections, but the Sebastopolitans say this fruit is counterfeit and not worthy the name it has debased. Last year they even sacrificed a tree at Sebastopol, plucking it from the orchard in full fruitage and planting it in the mammoth exhibition tent. Such great sacrifice should be rewarded with a full tent on the week of the show. Los Angeles should send a delegation up and get the Gravenstein habit.

Commissioner's Laboratory.

THE Supervisors of Santa Cruz county are appropriating a considerable sum annually to equip a laboratory for the use of the County Horticultural Commissioner. Nearly $400 was devoted to this purpose last year, and in addition to the money appropriated, C. H. Rodgers supplied a field experiment station valued at $500. Gradually the public is beginning to appreciate the work of the County Commissioner in districts where a few years ago it was not possible to secure the appointment of a horticultural official. In several counties the Supervisors have not provided offices for the commissioner, but the new law makes it compulsory to do so, and we shall soon see all the horticultural commissioners conveniently housed. Then we may expect each of them to accumulate a library and other means of education, and to have facilities for the distribution of pamphlets, bulletins and other publications.

HOG THAT CLIMBED LADDER.

[Marinette correspondence Milwaukee Sentinel:] When Charles Prausa of Kadlee heard a racket in his apple orchard during the night he started out with his gun to investigate. He saw something pulling apples from a tree and supposed it was a person. He demanded a surrender, but no answer came. Then he threatened to shoot. In due time he pulled the trigger and upon closer investigation discovered that he had shot one of his own hogs. The hog had climbed up on a stepladder and was helping himself to the apples.

Care of the Bowels.

THE bowels are not usually regarded as a polite topic of conversation. In fact, they are almost as much "taboo" as the legs of a woman, which as we all know, must invariably be referred to as "limbs."

Still, we have bowels, and we cannot get away from the fact. Indeed, some of us are painfully reminded of it every day.

On the condition of the bowels depends largely the health of the mind and the body. It has been said that the massacre of St. Bartholomew would never have occurred had the French king not suffered from chronic constipation.

Several years ago the editor of the Care of the Body sent out to his friends a New Year's card reading: "Don't hurry; don't worry; keep your head cool and your feet warm, and your bowels open."

There is more truth than poetry in this.

Pointing to a dirty, sweating laborer in a trench, a man said: "You think that man is dirty, but he is clean inside." There is a text in this remark. Many men and women, who take a warm bath at least once a week have clean skins, and are well dressed and delicately perfumed, are full of corruption within. In the language of the Bible they are "whited sepulchers."

Take a hot bath and stay in it for half an hour, scrubbing yourself with soap and a flesh brush. Then go and take a thorough sweat in a Turkish or Russian or electric-light bath, or in a wet pack, and notice the filth that comes out of you.

That, however, is not all. Even after such a sweat bath you may still be full of filthy matter.

A Los Angeles woman, who fasted absolutely for a month, washing the bowels out daily, on the twenty-eighth day discharged a large amount of black, putrid, fecal matter. This shows what a mass of corruption the average person carries about within him. A person whose senses have been refined by fasting and temperate eating may often detect this on the breaths of such persons.

To be thoroughly clean you must not only make the skin perform its functions of sweating, either naturally, through exercise, or by means of an artificial sweat, but you must cease putting into the body food that decomposes and forms corruption in the colon. Metchnikoff has shown that fish food is the main cause of putrefaction in the colon, and so of autointoxication, one of the main causes of ill-health and shortened life.

After a person has once acquired thorough internal cleanliness he will feel something like the man who had been a regular moderate drinker of alcoholic beverages, and had become a total abstainer. He said: "Formerly I would say that I had never been drunk in my life. Now I know that since reaching maturity I had never, until recently, been really sober."

Horace Fletcher claims that when food is thoroughly masticated, and all matter rejected that cannot be reduced to a pulp, it is not necessary to have a bowel movement more often than every three to five days.

Again, here is a quotation from an article by J. F. Goodhart, in the Pacific Medical Journal:

"It is obvious that, although we have no certain knowledge of what Adam did, a habit has been gradually formed that largely owes itself to convenience. But some there are, nay many, whose natural rhythm is a two or three-day one. Even a weekly interval is by no means so very phenomenal, without ill health; and, personally, I make bold to affirm that there is many a one with a small appetite who would be in much better health if he or she accepted a habit of some days' interval and kept themselves meantime unharassed by aperients. There are many constipated who are very healthy, and there would be thousands more so if, instead of assuming disease because they are constipated, they called themselves healthy and ceased to self-center. And this large group seems to me to hit hard the doctrine of intestinal autointoxication. Carried to the extent that it has been of late years, I cannot but think it unsound and baneful. I will go further, and say that the treatment of the supposed condition by so-called intestinal antiseptics has seemed to me decidedly inconclusive."

These contentions are disputed by the veteran hygienist, D. Edson Smith of Santa Ana, an enthusiastic advocate of colon flushing, which is a good thing, but may be overdone. He writes as follows to the editor of Physical Culture:

"All animals in a healthy, normal state have more than one bowel movement every twenty-four hours. And the human is no exception to the rule. The wild horse and deer and uncivilized people have frequent bowel movements, which are practically odorless. And the best specimens of humanity I have seen are very moderate eaters and always have two good bowel movements daily.

"Fletcher is wise in ejecting all coarse waste matter from his mouth. The elimination of 'coarsage' by the bowels is a tax on vitality. We forget that the normal baby's food the first year of its life has far less 'coarse' material in it than at any other time during its life; yet who ever knew of a normal, healthy baby that did not have at least two good bowel movements every twenty-four hours? This fact proves conclusively that 'coarsage' in food is not necessary, in normal conditions, for a daily bowel movement.

"As soon as the blood begins circulating in an animal, worn-out tissue begins to be eliminated. And this worn-out tissue must be fully eliminated from the body every few hours if the body is to be kept in perfect health. Mr. Fletcher's health may be better than ever before, but I am sure it would be still better if he had a daily movement; and only perfect when he has two daily movements.

"I know! I've been there! For years I lived at a 'poor, dying rate' on food with plenty of 'coarsage' in it; with a bowel evacuation every 'three to five days,' because everybody said enemas were 'unnatural and weakening.'

"But why do our bowels get into such an abnormal state? Because of our abnormal ways of living. From earliest childhood we are taught to eat too much, and of coarse food. This throws constant, extra labor upon the eliminating organs. And the wonder is that the eliminating muscles of the bowels do not become exhausted long before they do.

"Another fruitful cause of trouble is the repression of nature's calls, which begins as soon as the diaper is removed. If the newly-undiapered child attempts to follow its instincts in this matter, like the wild fawn, it promptly receives a scolding or a spanking, and is soon taught the habit of repression for a more convenient time and place. As it becomes old enough to play with other children, in the eagerness to finish the game, such wants are repressed. The child has already been taught that a little repression is of no consequence. So the habit of repression is soon formed, until through lack of opportunity, business, etiquette, custom and the teachings of those who ought to know better, our so-called medical guides, we have formed a national habit of educating our bowels to call for action but once in twenty-four hours.

"If we live normal lives in every respect we will have at least two full evacuations of the bowels daily. But if we have become diseased by unnatural living we may find it of the greatest benefit to resort to the unnatural practice of flushing the colon with tepid water daily. And if the unnatural practices mentioned have extended over all the years since babyhood, till one has begun to grow gray-headed, it may be necessary to continue the flushing for some time in order to get into a proper condition.

"Unhygienic habits so weakened my general system that my eyesight began failing soon after I was 50 years old. But I didn't refuse to use glasses, because they were unnatural. Through unnatural living I lost set of 'store teeth,' because they were unnatural. Eneset of 'store teetr' because they were unnatural. Enemas are unnatural and so is toilet paper, but both are necessary. I know! I have been experimenting for over seventy years."

The editor of the Care of the Body wrote Mr. Smith—whom he has known for more than twenty years—that in his opinion Smith went to an extreme on one side, as Fletcher does on the other, and that any one who is able to have a good motion of the bowels once a day should be satisfied—and thankful. To this Mr. Smith replied as follows:

"I presume it may take many generations of right living before we become normal enough as a people to have two movements of the bowels daily. And I don't expect but very few people to take the trouble to try the effect of fully cleansing the bowels twice a day, for several years as I (and others) have. I don't believe one adult in a million has clean bowels. It took me two years of fasting and flushing to clean my bowels. But I know the increased vigor of body and mind which comes from the twice-a-day bowel movement. And those who have never tried it for a year or more know anything about it, and are not capable judges. And any person who goes longer than twenty-four hours without a bowel movement, unless on a long fast, is a filthy person.

"Coarsage in food tends to break down, wear out, the elimentary organs of the bowels. Consequently nine-tenths of all persons in this country over 50 years of age are getting along with a bowel movement once in from three to six days; or else are taking more or less drugs. And both practices are inimical to joyous, good health.

"For the love of Mike, man! teach the people to have at least one good bowel movement every day. By tepid-water flushings, if no better way presents, but that the use of drugs is never permissible."

To this the editor replies that too frequent washing-out of the bowels with warm water tends to relax them, and to remove the mucous surface of the lining of the bowels, just as too frequent hot baths remove from the skin its natural oily secretion. This latter can be replaced by a thorough oiling of the body, which should always follow a hot bath. In the case of the bowels it is not so easy.

When there is a pressure of fecal matter of the lower bowel, the use of a rectal dilator will often prove effective, and is better than an enema.

To compare lack of action of the bowels with defective eyesight or loss of teeth is not a fair simile. It

Animal Immortality.

IN the Care of the Body of August 6 was published a review of a book on "Animal Immortality." Referring to this article, J. M. Peebles, M. D., of Los Angeles writes as follows:

"Seldom have I read a more thought-provoking article than that by the Care of the Body editor, in The Times of August 6, under the heading, 'Animal Immortality.'

"With the most of the editor's opinions and statements I am in full accord, especially those treating of animals with the greatest kindness, as they are not only sensitive to pain, but they have emotional affections and a degree of comparison pertaining to the reasoning faculties. True, they do not, so far as we know, have the moral and religious faculties. Pigs, though feasting upon acorns, never look up gratefully to the oak from whence they fell; neither do apes or orang-outangs construct educational institutions, make fires for cooking food, develop new discoveries, nor write history for their posterity. The line of demarcation between man and beast, notwithstanding ultra-Darwinism, seems quite clear and distinct. And yet, I can readily believe in a future existence for the forest birds, the horse, the cow and the faithful dog; but I stoutly balk at any future existence or companionship with fleas, mosquitos and rattlesnakes. Clairvoyants declare that they see animals in the finer spheres of etheric existence. They probably do.

"Not for controversy, nevertheless, I take issue with both Dr. Buckner and the Yale University professor, relative to their using the words soul and spirit, as quoted, interchangeably. They are not synonyms; nor were they used synonymously by the ancient Greek philosophers, nor by the biblical writers of the early Christian fathers. Ireneus says: 'There are three things of which the entire perfect man consists, flesh, soul and spirit; the spirit giving form; the soul is the intermediate between these two. Origen speaks with equal distinctness upon this subject. The soul or soul-body, is the particled vehicle, functioning between the body and the spirit. The soul is not immortal, but the conscious spirit is.

"Paul speaks of the 'dividing asunder of soul and spirit,' and when writing to the Thessalonians, he said: 'I pray God that your whole spirit and soul and body be preserved blameless,' etc. And the inspired Job, referring to this distinction, wrote: 'In whose hand is the (Nepesh) soul of every animal and the (Ruazh) spirit of all flesh that is human.' Jesus distinctly declared that God is Spirit; and mankind, being made in the image of God, and being, as the scriptures declare, the 'offspring of God,' they are necessarily spiritual beings. Hence, when the martyr Stephen fell beneath the stones of murderers, his cry was: 'Lord Jesus receive my spirit.' Mark, it was his immortal spirit and not soul that was received into heaven.

"The very able editor of the Care of the Body states that he 'does not know whether the spirit or soul of man is immortal or not.' If he uses the word immortal here in the sense of endlessness, he is correct. An endless existence is a matter of faith. But a future existence—that is, a conscious existence beyond the grave, is not a matter of faith or belief, but of knowledge. Paul declared that he 'knew of a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens' after the dissolution of the earthly body. Paul knew this because he 'fell into a trance' and for the further reason that upon one occasion he knew a man—undoubtedly himself—'caught up into Paradise;' that is, he temporarily left his physical body and entering into the spirit world, he heard words unspeakable and angelic. All of this I emphatically believe because I have met, face to face, several substance-materialized immortals, and while I was holding their hand, they vanished out of sight as did the materialized form of Jesus when near the village at evening time. Neither God nor His laws have changed since that period.

"As the editor states, Wesley, the Christian Spiritualist, claimed to 'know' of the future life as all Christians, who really are Christians, do; thus fulfilling the apostolic injunction, 'Add to your faith, knowledge.'

"Permit me as a physician, with long years of practice behind me, to congratulate the readers of The Times in having such an able, broad-minded exponent to teach the Care of the Body."

Water for Animals.

AS frequently stated in the Care of the Body, one of the main reasons why dogs go mad is that they are not supplied with water.

In North Germany there is a law compelling householders to furnish a pan of water in front of the house for the use of stray dogs.

The following suggestion sent to the Care of the Body by Mrs. Paul E. Flammer of Los Angeles is heartily indorsed by the editor. Do it now:

"I am starting a little crusade of my own for which I hope to enlist your sympathy so that it may receive the publicity which I think it deserves. It is simply a plea to householders to place in a convenient and accessible place a vessel of clean, fresh water for the thirsty dogs and cats.

"For two years we have kept a crock of water, which is filled daily, under the faucet in the front yard. Every animal in the neighborhood knows its location and comes there to drink. People who would be shocked at the idea of starving a pet seem to forget how necessary plenty of fresh water is to its health and comfort. The look of gratitude in the eyes of a poor stray dog as he drinks and is made welcome instead of being chased away more than repays one for the trouble. Aside

Just stop and think what that means to you! It is all in your favor. The services of a graduate and licensed physician as well as a graduate and licensed optician at no extra cost to you.
I am the only eye specialist practicing in Los Angeles today who holds these two licenses "by Examination" from these two examining boards. THAT'S A REASON.
You should consider in addition to this fact that my prices for glasses are lower than the usual prices charged by others.
Years spent in the practice and in the teaching of my profession to others give me the right to claim superiority. The glasses that I can make for you will prove it. If I cannot prove it to your entire satisfaction, you will do me a very great favor by letting me know, so that I can refund your money.
Remember,
The supreme test is not in the price but in the satisfaction they give.
ADVANTAGES OF DR. RING'S SPECIAL TORIC LENSES
They may be set closer to the eyes without touching the lashes.
They conform to the natural curve of the eye.
They permit a wider field of vision and allow you to see through them in all directions with equal distinctness — a decided improvement.
They eliminate annoying reflections from back of lenses.
They are the result of modern skill and methods, and are a great improvement over the old style.
They can be ground lighter and prettier in every way.
They are especially desirable in Bifocals because they give a much more direct focus through the segment, and besides they are much more elegant in appearance.

Care of the Body.

from a humane point of view our 'thirst relief station' affords us much amusement. One little black dog, who lives blocks away, comes along daily on the other side of the street. As he gets opposite our house he begins to waver and edge toward the curb. He appears to be speculating in this wise: 'I wonder if I'll have time to get a drink?' He usually decides that he will, makes a dash across the street, takes a drink, wagging his thanks the while, then runs back to his mistress, who has been perfectly oblivious of the whole proceedings.

"At night the cats steal up one by one. One old Tom, who earns his own living, would at first scurry away at the least sound, but now that he is sure of his welcome drinks long and thirstily. In the early morning the birds come for their share. On a hot day the water disappears with surprising rapidity, showing how much even pet animals suffer for the want of water.

"In Mexico I believe it is compulsory for shopkeepers to place a vessel of water in front of their shops.

"Incidentally, it may be mentioned that a case of rabies is almost unknown. This is a plea for all animals, but made in the name of our little fox terrier who was with us for twelve years and taught us how true and faithful a friend a dog can be."

Dr. Haig and His Dietetic Ideas.

LAST year when Dr. Robert Dudley Emery of Los Angeles went on a trip to Europe for post-graduate study in the hospitals of the continent and England he took with him a letter of introduction from the editor of the Care of the Body to Dr. Alexander Haig of London. Dr. Haig, who is an English gentleman of the old school, gave the Los Angeles man a cordial reception, and invited him to spend a day at Baylis House, standing amid beautiful peaceful English scenery at Slough, near London. This is an establishment in which Dr. Haig is specially interested and his dietetic ideas are there followed. As is well known, Dr. Haig is an ardent proponent of the uric acid theory of disease, a theory which he is perhaps inclined to carry somewhat to extremes, with the natural enthusiasm of all who have hit upon an important truth. Dr. Emery gives the following account of Baylis House:

"At this sanatorium the treatment is carried on without medicine. However, the place is intended more for chronic cases than for acute—in fact, no cases requiring nursing are taken, the sanatorium having no corps of nurses.

"The place was started, and is being conducted by a man who says he owes his life to Dr. Haig, and the Haig methods of diet. He is fifty-nine years of age and was suffering with uric acid poisoning when he went to Dr. Haig some years ago—I think about six years ago. His chief symptom was extreme mental depression, so that he contemplated suicide. He also suffered with high blood pressure, slow capillary circulation, a feeling of fatigue that he couldn't overcome, and an overworked heart which his previous physician said was serious. Now he is well from all of those conditions, can run a mile or two when occasion requires, rides his bicycle 125 miles in a day, and has a feeling of youth which he did not enjoy even at thirty.

"One of the things in connection with Haig's treatment which I must mention while I think of it, is that patients are encouraged to give up condiments. The man above mentioned hasn't used salt with his food for about eight years—an interesting point in connection with his great improvement."

Dr. Emery gave the editor a card of "specimen diets" as they are used at Baylis House. There is the "ideal diet," the "labor diet," "cheap labor diet," "diet of the East," "diet of Egypt," "beginner's diet," "mixed uric acid-free diet," and "flesh diet." One of the striking things about these diets is the exceedingly large amounts of food which they include. For instance, the "ideal diet" includes eight ounces of nuts, sixteen ounces of dried fruit, and fifty ounces of fresh fruit. This, according to the editor of the Care of the Body, is about twice as large an amount of food as would be needed for a man doing hard physical work.

At the foot of the card is this note: "Those printed in red contain poison," the items in red being lentils, beans, bacon, eggs, fish, fowl, game and meat. In a letter written to the editor of the Care of the Body sometime ago Dr. Haig went so far as to claim that beans contain as much uric acid—or rather xanthin, the vegetable equivalent of uric acid—as meat. On the other hand, Dr. Hall, Professor of Physiological Chemistry of the Manchester (England) Medical College, who some years ago made a study of various foods with reference to the amount of uric acid, or purin which they contain, found that meat contains fourteen grains of uric acid to the pound, sweetbread seventy grains, and beans four grains. Taking into consideration the fact that the meat is two-thirds to three-fourths water, while the beans are dry, we must multiply the fourteen by three, making forty-two, which, compared with four, indicates that meat contains ten times as much uric acid as beans for the water-free material.

Many other foods contain a slight percentage of xanthin, such, for instance, as whole-wheat and asparagus and mushrooms, while in tea and coffee and cocoa it is quite abundant. Xanthin is almost entirely confined to the germ. Whole-wheat flour contains all the germ, while fine flour contains very little. On the other hand, white flour is greatly deficient in the important organic salts. If peas, beans and lentils are parboiled the xanthin is to a great extent removed.

Tobacco.

THE article headed "My Lady Nicotine," published in the Care of the Body a few weeks ago, seems to have aroused much interest, to judge from the numerous letters received.

One of these, written in German, is from a correspondent who describes himself as "an old and industrious smoker." He is also a vegetarian and a total abstainer from alcohol. He assures the editor that smoking is

A Public Blessing

What will a Man give In Exchange For His Life?

One of the most difficult things to do is to separate the [illegible] from the false, the genuine from the spurious. He who [illegible] this has found, the philosopher's stone. In no department of life is this half so important as in that of health. Ever since man was created he has inherited disease, and since the [illegible] of the first patient there has ever been a cure for the [illegible] but the secret has ever been to discover that remedy. A [illegible] and will cry—lo, here and—lo there—but it generally happens that but one in all that multitude has solved the [illegible] enigma. We speak what we know when we say there is one man who has unriddled the secret that heals every [illegible] disease. That man is Dr. S. A. Richmond, and the witnesses of his curative skill are a living host found in every circle of society, and today dwelling in almost every city and hamlet of this broad nation. Letters of thanksgiving from the [illegible] and from those who were lying at the gate of death come to him in a flood. Every letter is a benediction voluntarily given Dr. Richmond for his wonderful skill and healing power. His patients come from every walk in life, and regard his healing power as beyond all price, for what will a man not give for his life? Above all and greater than all is that great fact which comes home to the business and heart of every suffering son of Adam. He does cure the diseases and heals the afflicted whom he treats. There is no way under heaven among men of [illegible] around it. The testimony of this is perfectly overwhelming and irrefutable.

Many come on crutches and go away leaping and shouting for joy and praising God for giving Dr. Richmond this divine gift that heals every known disease. Ear trumpets are laid aside, trusses, bandages, braces, canes, crutches, pipes and tobacco, morphine habit quickly, speedily and permanently cured. [illegible] of every kind and character are laid aside as of no further use. Case after case could be cited, including every known disease—cancer, tumors, rheumatism, asthma, [illegible] kidney disease, nerve disorders, paralysis, locomotor ataxia—and every one are cured by this wonderful power of Divine Healing.

These startling cures are effected by Dr. Richmond, the world's greatest healer. Whence comes his mighty power no man knows. It is a gift of God. Wonderful it appears to be according to the testimony of hundreds who have been healed and right here in Los Angeles. The Great Healer heals all who wish it, without money and without price. When asked "how do you live?" the Healer replied, "By teaching the laws of life and by selling my literature, lessons and books."

Don't remain sick, come today and get healed. [illegible] and remember location.

Care of the Body.

"absolutely harmless." He specially recommends it to women, to correct their "moods," and says he is sorry he has not been able to induce his wife to smoke.

This correspondent is absolutely and unequivocally wrong. No sane person should doubt that any unnatural practice must of necessity be more or less harmful. Far better be honest and sensible and say: "I know that I would be better without this" (drinking or smoking,) "but I do it because I like it—or the effects of it."

Stimulants and narcotics should be reserved for occasions of abnormal mental or physical stress. Unfortunately, however, the habit of regular using is soon formed, and then a man is a slave to these habits.

Cold Feet.

AMONG the slight and silly grounds for divorce of which we read daily in the papers nowadays must be included cold feet. A woman recently asked for a divorce because her husband had cold feet, which he sometimes placed upon her back when he was in bed, causing her great mental and physical agony.

Cold feet are a sign of poor circulation of the blood. They may readily be remedied by dietetic measures, in addition to deep breathing, bathing, etc., and going barefoot whenever the opportunity offers. Over-eating, especially of meat, is a prolific cause of poor circulation and cold feet. Also over-clothing.

A correspondent recently asked the editor of the Care of the Body to say a few words to parents of Southern California regarding the use of rubbers on wet days, the need of which she says is astounding.

The editor will do nothing of the kind, because he does not believe that rubbers are hygienic, preventing, as they do, any exhalations from the feet. They may be worn occasionally, when the shoes are leaky, but should not be worn as a regular thing.

Leather, the material we use for foot covering, is about the very worst material that could possibly be selected, being cold in winter and hot in summer. The footwear of the Chinese—and indeed their entire costume—is far more sensible and comfortable and hygienic than ours. Until we adopt some better material the ill effects of the leather shoes may to some extent be modified by wearing inside of them thick cork soles, and outside real rubber heels.

Think Again.

A CERTAIN Mr. Bushea (or some such name) is seeking a site for a lion-breeding farm near Los Angeles. Mr. Bushea is quoted as saying:

"Lions relish horse flesh and thrive on it. Once in a while it becomes necessary to turn into their dens live horses and this, although repulsive to our own sense, has to be done."

Well, now, Mr. Bushey, or Bushea, or whatever your name may be, let the editor of the Care of the Body give you a little friendly tip.

There are several humane societies in Los Angeles—also quite a number of humane people. Our people, Mr. Bushy, do not as a rule favor vivisection, either in the form of "medical research" or bull fights or the feeding to lions of poor old worn-out horses, who have done their faithful duty—and then some—during their lives.

Think again, Mr. Booshy.

Bugs and Hogs.

THE following, dispatch from Indianapolis was recently published in The Times:

"The State health authorities believe they can trace infantile paralysis in Shelby county, where several children have the disease, to hogs owned by a farmer on whose land the children live. They are preparing to make experiments to decide beyond dispute whether the disease comes from the suspected source.

"Dr. J. P. Simonds, suprintendent of a pathological laboratory, has gone to Shelbyville to obtain specimens of the hogs on Cherry Farm. According to instructions from the institute, parts of the spinal cord of suspected animals will be sent to the laboratory, where cultures will be made, and the cultures used on the throats of monkeys."

This would be humorous if it were not so pitifully sad.

* * *

"Corn Cheese."

IN the "cooking contest" of The Times of Sunday, August 27, among the meatless or semi-meatless dishes, was published the following:

"Cheese Fondu—Mrs. C. U. Morris, Santa Ana, R. D. No. 2, box 145—One quart water, 1 cup yellow corn meal, 1 large onion sliced, red pepper to taste. Boil ingredients until done; then add half pound cheese, or bake like macaroni."

This dish was "invented" by the editor of the Care of the Body and published in a former edition of The Times cook book among the hygienic dishes under the name of the editor's wife.

Mrs. Morris evidently knows a good thing when she sees it. However, it is not copyrighted. Try it.

A DIFFERENCE.

[Catholic Standard and Times:] "I thought we were friendly to young Ranter," said the country reporter.

"We are," replied the editor of the Bungtown Bazoo. "Why?"

"Well, I spoke of him in my story as a 'thriving young lawyer,' and it's 'thieving' in the paper."
